The story tells how a miner, leaving the town for a while, intrusts his bag of nuggets with his friend for safekeeping. In his absence, a strike breaks out at the mine and the miners are thrown out of work. The old adage that misfortunes never come singly was never so keenly realized by the miner until his child falls ill. The miner, driven to desperation by this addition to the already deplorable state of affairs, is sorely tempted to use his friend's money with which to buy proper food and medicine for his sick child. His wife, however, pleads so earnestly with him to try to obtain money in some other way that he promises her he will not touch it. His child's condition becomes worse and the miner decides on a plan to get possession of the money. Taking the cartridges out of the revolver which his wife keeps in the bureau drawer in the bedroom, he disguises himself as a burglar and waits for darkness. Stealthily entering the room in which the gold is kept, he reaches for the money. His wife, in the interim, hearing the strange sounds in the other room, gets the revolver and looks to see if it is loaded. Promptly reloading it, she steps into the other room just as the burglar is leaving it. She fires, but the miner has safely reached the outside of the cabin. The terrible ordeal his wife has gone through has taken her strength and, after firing, she faints dead away. The miner, having concealed his identity thus far, is undecided whether to return and attend to his wife or to get away without recognition. As he is deliberating which course to take, two of his friends appear, one the miner to whom the gold belongs, and seeing the man masked, demand the reason. He hesitates, and, on tearing the mask off, his friends are surprised that he should disguise himself to enter his own home. He explains the entire situation to them and they enter the house where his wife lies on the floor. On reviving her, he is about to tell his wife the truth when the owner of the gold hastily interrupts him, saying the thief got away, but they secured the money. The two friends leave and when the miner and his wife enter the other room, to their astonishment, they see the bag of nuggets on the table with a note saying: "For Baby Nugget."

"LEAH, THE SUFFRAGETTE" (Cines).

On April 27th, George Kleine will release another very amusing Cines split-reel containing two hilarious comedies, the first one treating of the interesting and topical subject, woman's suffrage, and entitled, "Leah, the Suffragette." It seems that Leah becomes interested in "Woman's Rights," and, after successfully training her husband in the household duties, she busies herself in politics to the exclusion of everything else. Her enthusiasm soon gains for her the leadership of her party and, after an exciting meeting at their club, the suffragettes proceed to the mayor's office and demand that he champion their cause. Discussion soon becomes so heated that a riot is barely averted and the ladies are arrested. In her cell in prison, Leah has ample opportunity for calm reflection and quite rapidly her political ardor cools, and later, when her patient and long-suffering husband appears on the scene, she is more than willing to abandon her political career and return home. The action is lively throughout and often excruciatingly funny.

The second subject on the same reel is also a very laughable farce and relates a comedy of errors resulting from the use of the same name by two young men who insert different advertisements in the same newspaper, and which gives the story the appropriate title of "Confusion." One wishes a position, the other a wife, and the ensuing complications can readily be imagined. Of course, the young men receive replies intended for each other and following them up they manage to tangle themselves in an amusing fashion until the cause of the confusion is discovered and the "wrong" is "righted" through the simple exchange of the letters. The young men are made happy by each receiving what he advertised for.

There is excellent comedy in both these subjects and they will without doubt draw many laughs before the thousand feet have been finished.

"JOHN MILTON, THE BLIND POET" (Eclipse).

A split reel of unusual excellence scheduled for release April 24th by George Kleine, is an Eclipse containing as the subjects, "John Milton" and "Exhibition Drill of the H. M. S. 'Excellent' Prize Gun Crew." This combination of historic incident and highly interesting topical-educational subjects should prove attractive to the general public. In the drama of Milton the Eclipse company have costumed and set the scenes in exact representation of the period. The story is full of pathos and human-heart interest, and follows quite closely the historical record.

The second subject on the reel shows the prize gun crew of the British war ship "Excellent," an extremely interesting series of remarkable gun drills, showing what results may be accomplished with efficient gunnery under the instruction of excellent drillmasters.

ANOTHER FARRELL HOUSE.

Charles Farrell, the moving picture man, 238 Broadway, Buffalo, N. Y., will build a handsome vaudeville and moving picture theater on Kenmore Avenue, Kenmore, N .Y., to be known as the La Verne Theater, seating 300, heated by steam, all up-to-date conveniences, and a 1912 motiograph.

"THE WOOING OF ALICE" (Solax).

Cast.

"Bull" Hicks, a thug	Lee Beggs
Alice, "his gal"	Blanche Cornwell
Geoffrey Hall, a gentleman	Darwin Karr
Mrs. Hall, his mother	Mrs. Patrick Foy
"Spike" O'Toole, a pal of "Bull's"	George Paxton

Now and then in literature, as well as in real life, one comes across a character, who is absolutely repulsive and obnoxious, but has a certain uncanny attraction, a certain fascination, an intangible magnetism, that a weaker person will find difficult to defy. Such a character is "Bull" Hicks. He is burly and rough-necked and is feared by his evil associates, as the leopard fears the tiger. "The Bull," as Hicks is called by his pals, has every one "bluffed." Meek and poor Alice is also under the spell of his domineering personality.

Scene from "The Wooing of Alice" (Solax).

Soon, however, a new influence comes into the life of Alice. Geoffrey Hall, a young clubman, and his friend, go slumming and find themselves in a dance hall of questionable repute. A number of typical characters of the neighborhood are enjoying themselves in the place. "The Bull" and his "Gal," Alice, are also amongst the crowd. As soon as Hall sees Alice, he sees that she does not belong in such an environment. Somehow she stands out strikingly, and by contrast, attracts attention.

Of course, the inevitable happens. Geoffrey becomes interested in Alice and thus incurs the displeasure of "The Bull." There is a fight, after which Alice goes to the house of Hall, where she is looked after by Hall's mother. "The Bull" comes to claim Alice, and in one of the most remarkable scenes in pictures, and exhibitions of acting, "The Bull" shows that at last he has lost his power. The struggle is hard. There is a battle royal of good with evil, and good finally conquers. Alice by a supreme effort casts off the spell in which "The Bull" has had her enveloped.

REVIVAL OF A POWERS FEATURE.

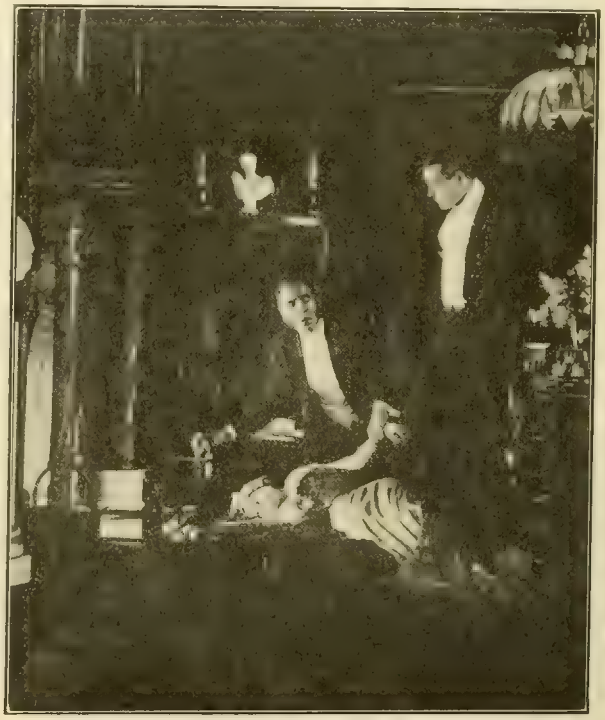
The Powers Picture Plays have again secured the services of the director who formerly produced the comedy and "kid" split reel pictures for which this company was noted. In addition to this man, they have also engaged another capable director to work in conjunction with him, and the Powers concern will thus have the benefit of two distinct companies of players in the production of split reel subjects for their regular Tuesday releases. These Tuesday split reels will all consist of comedies or child pictures. Realizing the scarcity of good comedies, the Powers people are making every effort to provide unique comedies and comedy dramas for their regular Saturday release, also.

BARTLETT WITH GREAT SOUTHERN.

Mr. Al. Bartlett, formerly traveling representative for the Consolidated Film & Supply Company, has tendered his resignation with that firm and has joined the forces of the Great Southern Feature Film Company of Atlanta, Ga. President Mason, of the Great Southern, can be congratulated on securing the services of Mr. Bartlett, who possesses a very broad experience in the film business.

"BEAUTY AND THE BEAST" (Rex).

Beauty is often fatal, but as often as not the lack of it is just as fatal. In this particular instance both are fatal to a comparative degree. Nobody died, but perhaps all hands wished they were dead at some stages of the story. It is the old story of a homely man with a pretty wife. Such a story is often tragic; especially when the couple lead a prominent social life and are kept more or less apart by business reasons, etc.



Scene from "Beauty and the Beast" (Rex).

When "pretty men" are hovering around, a homely man is at a disadvantage. No matter how much brains or money he may possess, a homely man is liable to be deserted for "a handsomer man," if his wife is that kind of a girl. This Rex story deals with a wealthy and popular politician who, though being extremely unlovely, had managed to make himself interesting enough to marry a young society beauty. He often, in a spirit of fun, referred to her as the "beauty" and himself as the "beast." In time, however, she began to regret her choice, and, when the husband noticed the first signs of this he offered her her liberty.

On the eve of election, in which he was running for office, the scandal of his wife's name being involved with that of his handsome friend, was sufficient to wreck his chances. He was defeated. The friend fled, and a divorce was the ultimate result. The homely man took to drink and finally wandered away to the mining country, where he met the man who had come between him and his wife. Matters had not gone so far that they could not resume friendship. After several years together the men came across an advertisement in the home paper in which "Beauty" begged for the return home of her "Beast." The husband answered this call. He returned home and patched up matters with his wife and "Beauty and the Beast" lived happily every afterwards.

MISS RUSSELL BACK WITH ESSANAY.

Miss Martha Russell, former leading lady with the Essanay Company, has been re-engaged and will be featured in a number of forthcoming productions written expressly to show her many wonderful talents. Miss Russell is one of the most popular and well-known photoplay actresses in the country, and possesses a wardrobe unequaled on the legitimate stage or in films. Miss Russell has the reputation of never having worn the same gown in two productions. This is certainly borne out by the fact that when Miss Russell arrived at the Essanay studio last week, an express van accompanied her loaded with fifteen trunks containing an assortment of stunning gowns she will wear in the forthcoming films.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE BANDITS" (Essanay).

Mr. G. M. Anderson, director of the Essanay Western Company, located at Lakeside, Cal., is a firm believer in starting the new month right, consequently "Broncho Billy and the Bandits," a splendid dramatic subject, is the first May offering. In it Mr. Anderson is again seen in his world-famous role of Broncho, and the tensely thrilling plot smacks of Arizona in the '70s, when law and justice were but petty preventatives of crime and lawlessness.

AGENTS FOR THE STERN EXPRESS

Scene from "Broncho Billy and the Bandits" (Essanay).

In this story "Broncho Billy" is mistaken for an outlaw called Arizona Kid, and locked in a storehouse by a very pretty girl, who gets the drop on him. Later, when the real outlaw happens along with the intention of robbing the express office, which is in charge of the girl's father, she calls "Broncho Billy" to her assistance and the robbers are captured. "Broncho" also gets his reward.

"AUTO SUGGESTION" (Solax).

Cast.

The Motor-Maniac	Billy Quirk
His Rival	Darwin Karr
The "Girl"	Marian Swayne
Another Girl	Fannie Simpson

"Mistakes happen in the best regulated families," so little Marian cannot be blamed if she mistook little Billy for a real chauffeur and hired him for the day. Billy was wise to the situation; took advantage of his opportunities and was hired for life by Marian.

This comedy drama production is full of breeziness, fine settings and an exuberant and exhilarating spring atmosphere. It will be released Friday, May 10th.

Billy Quirk nearly smashed a $2,000 car in trying to be a chauffeur. It took him a whole day to learn the difference between the brake and the auxilerator—much to the terror of poor Marian, who had to stay in the car in order to get accustomed to his crazy driving.

"AN ITALIAN ROMANCE" (Champion).

The cut herewith depicts a realistic scene from this charming story that vigorously throbs and pulsates with the overmastering passions of hate and love. This beautiful photoplay, dealing with the love of a woman and the perfidy of a man, really possesses the germ of greatness. In it we see the battling of the passions, and this is so wrought out as to make a conflict worthy of the highest form of dramatic presentation.

Scene from "An Italian Romance" (Champion).

The laying of the scenes so as to inject into the story the atmospheric condition required is well thought out. The basement cellar and the café are especially worthy of mention. The groupings of the various types are most artistic. The duel and its termination is a splendidly elaborated climax.

"THE OTHER WISE MAN" (American).

A new version of "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" is pictured by the American players in the subject "The Other Wise Man," scheduled for release May 13. Jim Bangs, a confidence man, with the aid of old man Skathaway, undertakes to unload a lot of stock on the unsuspecting townspeople of La Mesa. Business is brisk until a traveling salesman, who was an old pal of Jim Bangs, happens into town and discovers his one-time partner trying to sell stock to Miss Blackwell, the boarding house keeper. The salesman falls in love with the pretty "boarding misses," and decides to warn her against Bangs and his schemes. Bangs learns that his former partner is trying to "crab" his game and endeavors to prejudice the townspeople against him. This causes the salesman to declare himself, with the result that Bangs and Skathaway are ridden out of town on a rail by the infuriated citizens. The traveling man departs by the next train with the feeling that he has atoned in part for his misspent life.

"THE BABY'S SHOES" (Republic).

Under the direction of Pierce Kingsley, the Republic players have produced a splendid comedy drama entitled "The Baby's Shoes," which will be released May 7. The subject is of the better class and the acting is somewhat above the average, forming a picture of which the Republic may be justly proud. The story is that of a man and his wife, who have just buried their first and only child. Mournfully they linger over the empty cradle and the little baby shoes, which latter they lay away as a memento of the lost darling.

Unfortunately the husband takes to drinking and loses his position, after which he falls very low. His wife is compelled to divorce him and marries a better man. The now discarded husband finally becomes a burglar and, on one of his raids, he robs the home of his former wife. When he returns to his den and looks over the loot he finds the little shoes of his dead child, and is stricken with remorse. He now determines to return the shoes and writes to the lady offering to return all the things he stole if he be not arrested. Not knowing who the man is, the woman requests him to call and then sets a trap for him.

Scene from "The Baby's Shoes" (Republic).

The burglar comes with the plunder and lays it on the table. Seeing the shoes brings back to her memories of the past and, taking another look at the man, the woman discovers her former husband. Startled by the discovery she determines at once to save him from the arrest she had planned and hides him in another room, while she informs the waiting detective that she has been mistaken in the man and will not need his services. After the detective departs she calls her former husband, and, giving him one of the little shoes, begs him, as she dismisses him, redeem himself for the baby's sake.

There is a note of pathos in this picture that touches the heart strings in no uncertain manner. In point of story and production it is one of the best pictures the Republic has turned out in some time.

A DECORATION DAY PICTURE.

The Imp Films Company will release on Decoration Day a fine military drama entitled, "The Peril." The plot of this story is intensely strong, and it centers round the attempt of a foreign spy to secure papers relative to the disposition of the guns in a fort which is of great strategic value. The military and fort scenes in this picture are wonderfully realistic. King Baggot is seen in the character of a captain, who meets with many surprising adventures in the execution of his duty, and in his courting of a very pretty girl, whose father is commandant of the fort.

VARSITY THEATER IN NEW HOME.

Charles Buckley, manager of the Varsity picture theater, Forrest, Ill., recently moved his house to a new location and reports fine business since the change. He has installed a Selig projecting machine and is running Independent pictures from the Anti-Trust Film Company, Chicago. The seating capacity of the new house is 250. The program consists of three pictures and illustrated songs, showing Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. Forrest has a population not exceeding 1,000, but Mr. Buckley says he has no kick coming as regards patronage.

"A PIECE OF AMBERGRIS" (Imp.)

The atmosphere of this comedy is redolent of the sea, or rather of sea-going men and their environment. Captain Binks becomes the possessor, in virtue of his marriage with an unattractive widow, of a valuable piece of ambergris which is to help him to pay off the mortgage on his ship. Unfortunately, however, the ambergris turns out to be spurious and the result is that the captain fails in his object to clear his beloved ship of debt.

Scene from "A Piece of Ambergris" (Imp).

The play is full of rich humor. J. R. Cumpson makes something of a departure in the character of the captain, harassed by debt; oppressed by the unattractive widow whom he marries. Rolinda Bainbridge is exceedingly droll in the part of the scheming widow. The settings of the play are very realistic, especially the presentation of life on board a sailing ship. April 27 is the release date.

"THE LURE OF THE PICTURE" (Imp).

In "The Lure of the Picture," we have a series of vivid scenes of life in that field which is productive of so much that is romantic, sentimental and, at times, tragic in the world of art. Artists of all kinds are popularly and rightfully supposed to be temperamental—that is to say, their lives are necessarily conducted on such hap-hazard, not to say opportunist lines, that their manners and morals are scarcely to be judged by ordinary standard. Hence, it was that Antonio Morso was so absorbed in his work that he neglected his young wife, who sought solace elsewhere.

Scene from "The Lure of the Picture" (Imp).

Years after poor Tony, old and broken, sees the portrait of his wife who used to be, hanging in a museum. He tracks down the author of the portrait and finds him to be the man with whom his wife went away years before. He surreptitiously steals the picture and takes it home to the garret, which he shares with his only child.

The artist got on the track of the picture and it is revealed that instead of being the famous original, it is only a copy. And, moreover, the two men come to blows and the dead woman's character is cleared of the obloquy that attached to it. When she left her Roman artist husband, she had never ceased to love him. So the old man and the child come back to their self contained and obscure existence, while the successful artist goes on his way, presumably to further pictorial triumphs. In the role of Morso, the old artist, Mr. W. R. Daly plays one of those parts which give him the opportunity of disguising his individuality and personality. Daly, as is often the case, ceases to be Daly and becomes the character he is portraying. Vivian Prescott is the wife who commits suicide, and Wm. E. Shay is the successful artist. The release date is April 29.

"AUNT MIRANDA'S CAT" (Edison).

In "Aunt Miranda's Cat," a comedy, to be released May 8, the Edison players have taken advantage of the fiction that a cat has nine lives and worked out a very humorous picture. Aunt Miranda is a very nice old maid in whom Biggs, a neighbor, is slightly interested. Aunt Miranda's niece, Helen, a delightful Miss, is sweet on a young man who is very anxious to marry her. Aunt Miranda is not particularly interested in the young man, her chief affair being the care of a very handsome cat on whom she bestows much attention. The old maid aunt turns the young man out of the house when he comes to ask for the hand of her niece, and, later, she interrupts an attempt on the part of the girl to elope; while Biggs, who happens along, backs up the old maid aunt in the rejection of her niece's sweetheart.

Scene from "Aunt Miranda's Cat" (Edison).

Then the cat gets into the game. Like all cats he indulges in a midnight symphony on the fence, much to the disgust of Biggs, who puts a stop to the serenade by a well-aimed shoe, bringing the cat down on his side of the fence, apparently dead. Biggs puts the cat in a bag and buries it in the woods. Two tramps happen along and observe the interment and, out of curiosity, dig the cat out. It shows signs of returning to life, when the young man who has been turned down by Aunt Miranda happens along and rescues it. Knowing that Aunt Miranda was all wrapped up in her cat he uses it effectively to gain the good graces of the aunt. Biggs is on hand at this time also, and is more than ever interested in Aunt Miranda. So when Aunt Miranda hesitates about giving her consent to the wishes of her niece and sweetheart, Biggs turns the scales in their favor to gain his own end and the story ends happily.

"BILLIE" (Edison.)

This is a novel comedy-drama in which the influence of the picture show is depicted to good advantage, proving that notwithstanding all the bad things that have been printed about picture shows, much good really does come out of them. "Billie" is a little mother who has charge of a little sister and brother, and a rather dissolute father. Through addiction to strong drink the father loses his position. The little mother, burdened with the responsibility of her position, treats her recreant father harshly. The poor man does not stand up well under this treatment and goes from bad to worse. One day "Billie" takes her little sister and brother to a picture show. This scene is a part of the picture. The interior of a Nickelodeon is shown with the picture on the screen, which shows a woman in the act of beating her husband for some remissness. But a sudden change of heart inclines this woman to change her methods from force to moral suasion. Kindness has the desired effect, and the lesson of the picture on the screen is not lost on "Billie," who decides that she has been all wrong in her treatment of her father and proposes to try kindness. Back home she goes, and then to the factory where her father was employed, and begs the manager to reinstate him. The manager is reluctant to consent to this request, but "Billie" insists that it is not her father's fault; that she alone was to blame for his bad habits, that she had not been kind to him and that she had not treated him right. Her powers of persuasion have the desired effect and the father gets his job back, whereupon everything is happy in Billie's home. It is a touching bit of human experience, feelingly portrayed. The picture will be released May 7.

Scene from "Billie" (Edison).

TWELVE HUNDRED AT THANHOUSER AFFAIR.

Twelve hundred persons attended the Thanhouser Employees' first annual entertainment and ball at Germania Hall, New Rochelle, Monday evening. This is official count. For an affair held outside New York City, the Thanhouser racket therefore "takes the cake" for strength of attendance. You could see that Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Thanhouser realized this from the sun in their faces as they led the grand march. Other film notables in the march were George O. Nicholls, Ida Alberti, Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Benham, Flo La Badie, Bert Adler, Peggy Snow, James Cruze, Entertainment President Frank L. Zimmerman and wife, Vice-President Charles J. Van Houten and wife, Treasurer John Andren and wife.

In the entertainment portion were brand-new, unreleased Thanhouser pictures, one of them—which will never be released—"The Crazy Quilt," getting a laugh from everybody. The title said it was "joined by the new girl in the joining room," and it looked that way: negatives and positives came out on the screen in terrific combinations, joined upside down and topsy-turvy. It was a positive novelty. The vaudeville was by Thanhouser home talent—"Editha's Burglar," with Marie Eline, Harry Benham and David Thompson; and "The System of Dr. Tarr," with Lew Woods, Harry Marks, Larry Merton, William Harris, Carl Leviness, Bertha Blanchard, Phil Brady and Perry Horton. Leo Edwards put over a Charles K. Harris number. Harry Spear staged the vaudeville. Frank Champury saw to the scenic effects and Gerald Badgley and Charles Gercke to the electrical. As may be imagined, the receipts were big even though Bert Adler did take the money as it came in. It is not known just what to do with the coin, whether to get Thompson a new diamond ring to replace that lost during the performance of "Editha's Burglar," or buy Adler a wedding breakfast. Finally Mr. Thanhouser suggested a grand clambake as soon as the weather's right; so watch for something to happen along that line.

THE
REVIEW

THIS REEL OUGHT TO BE A TERRIFIC HIT WITH THE LADIES.

Scenes from the Latest Rex Idea—a Quarterly Review of Feminine Fashions Taken from Modes and Living Models Furnished by the Leading Department Stores of New York City.

"Tommy's Geography Lesson" (Edison) is a film all schoolboys will enjoy. Tommy's stern father allows the little girl to go to bed, but Tommy must do his "home-work." Despite his sleepy condition the father compels study. At last Tommy sleeps—and dreams: "If I were only dad, and dad were me!" Oh, how he forces his dad to do home-work! How the boys will appreciate and enjoy it! Awakening time comes and Tommy tells his dream to his father, who enjoys the situation and allows Tommy to go to bed. Be sure and let the schoolboys see this picture.

If "going to church" is a proof of being good the moving picture is both growing good and "making good." Its appearance in church is increasing every week. The number of ministers who first go to see the picture and realize its varied potencies is daily increasing and in many instances ends in the adoption of some means to bring the cinematograph and the church together. The minister of one of the larger New York churches writes after making a round of the picture places: "There is little or no moral danger in the pictures exhibited, and as now regulated may become an educational force rather than an undermining influence."

GAUMONT FEATURES.

The Gaumont Company is now beginning to style itself the firm of "Lions and Hand Coloreds," which short phrase most aptly describes the advantages that this French manufacturer is offering the Independent program. It will be recalled that several of their productions, including lions, were the hit of the new year, particularly "Christian Martyrs" and "Calino and His Boarder." Furthermore, the three hand-colored pictures this firm has produced have proven the most consistent sellers that the Independent exchangeman has been able to offer his patronage, these being "The Christian Martyrs," "Heaven's Messenger" and "The Margrave's Daughter."

Scene from "Attacked by a Lion" (Gaumont).

The incoming mails have steadily brought many requests for both more hand-colored and more lion pictures. In consequence, the Gaumont Company announces as its Sunday, April 28th, release a film containing both these virtues in "Heliogabalus, Tyrant of Rome." Again, on Thursday, May 16th, a most remarkable one-reel production entitled "Attacked by a Lion" is being placed upon the market. Such is the spectacular nature of this picture that, although it is but one thousand feet in length, one- and eight-sheet posters have been prepared to accompany it. Those familiar with the method of putting out pictures at the present time will readily recognize what the unusuality of this picture must be to justify eight-sheet posters.

The Gaumont Company also announces the following hand-colored: "The Lost Ring" and "Upper Bavaria," Sunday, May 12th, and "Zametto's Marriage," on Thursday, May 30th, and the "Bells of Paradise," on Sunday, June 20. The latter production was one of the biggest successes that was ever exhibited in Europe. A large supply of attractive posters is being prepared so that this picture in both quality and possibility will excel both the "Margrave's Daughter" and the "Christian Martyrs."

WILL HANDLE BERNHARDT PICTURES.

The Western Film Exhibiting Co. has been launched at Tonopah, Nev. It has the state rights of Utah, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada for the famous photoplays: Sarah Bernhardt in "Camille," and Madame Rejane in "Sans-Gene." Now receiving many requests for bookings by both letter and telegraph. The company is arranging to play to state officials and at one of the state institutions in Navada. This will be done in each state.

Exhibitors and moving picture men everywhere: If not a subscriber to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, why not become one now? Our aim is to promote the welfare and best interests of the industry. "PARADISE AND PURGATORY."

The Superior Feature Film Company, 32 Union Square, New York City, who are handling the feature film "Paradise and Purgatory," advise that the state rights for Utah, Idaho and Washington have been sold to Mr. J. P. Ashton, Povo, Utah. The state rights for Ohio have been sold to the Metropolitan Theater Co., Rose Building, Cleveland, Ohio. They have received options on a number of other states and expect to close deals on rights for a number of other States within a few days. The films will be shown in Bangor, Maine, from April 24th to 27th, inclusive.

FILMS OF THE "TITANIC" DISASTER.

Warner's Feature Film Co., has secured over four hundred feet of negative, and the sole American rights for exhibiting same, portraying Captain E. J. Smith, Admiral of the White Star Line fleet, taken just previous to the start of the ill-fated Titanic on her maiden voyage which ended so disastrously. The pictures were taken while Captain Smith was still aboard the Olympic, a sister ship to the leviathan Titanic. Mr. Warner has made arrangements to make quick deliveries, the orders to be filled in rotation at a net price of $60 per reel. Adv. on another page.

"PARADISE" DEMONSTRATED IN NEW ENGLAND.

Mr. Ad. Rosenberg, of the Superior Feature Film Co., of 32 Union Square, New York, has left for a limited tour of the principal New England cities for the purpose of demonstrating to the trade the four-reel feature subject, "Paradise and Purgatory," based upon the second and third books of Dante. Mr. Rosenberg will begin his tour at Bangor, Me., later going to Boston and Springfield, Mass. Some states have already been sold for these reels, and some good ones are still open.

HAS PENNSYLVANIA RIGHTS FOR "NICK CARTER."

The Penn Feature Film Company, of Easton, Pa., has bought the state rights for Pennsylvania for the "Nick Carter" pictures, and is booking dates rapidly. This company intends to secure other money-making feature pictures in the immediate future.

HOSPITAL RUNS SUNDAY PICTURE SHOWS.

Picture shows have been prohibited on Sunday by ordinance at Griffin, Ga., but a way around the law has been discovered. The Griffin Hospital Association petitioned the Griffin Council for permission to open the picture houses on Sunday for the benefit of the hospital and permission was promptly granted. The board of trustees of the hospital will make the selections of pictures for the Sunday programs and the people will have their favorite Sunday entertainment.

FAME WAS HIS MISFORTUNE.

Harold Hargreaves was obscure until he wrote a "best seller," and then—! Well, there was no getting the spotlight off of him and twist and squirm as he would he was always in the public gaze. And in the public pursuit—admirers chased him everywhere. One of them managed to marry him. Her name was Arabella Snaith. How she trapped him and what came of it is amusingly told in "Miss Arabella Snaith," released Friday, May 3d, by Thanhouser.

MISS DOROTHY GIBSON.

Popular Eclair leading photoplayer reported to be among those saved of the passengers of the ill-fated steamship Titanic. Miss Gibson and her mother were returning from a trip to Egypt, where she went for rest and recuperation. It has also been reported that Miss Gibson and her mother were among a number who had booked passage on the Titanic, but who failed to reach the ship before it sailed.

SELIG PLAYERS AT SANTA CATALINA.

Director Campbell, of the Selig studio in Los Angeles, took a company over to Santa Catalina Island April 1 for a ten-day stay. The scenarios which he took with him were written to feature the marvelous swimming abilities of Bessie Eyton, one of the most popular of the Selig actresses. She is known the length of the Pacific Coast for her skill in the water, and against the picturesque background of the "Magic Isle" she will disport herself as only a genuine Californian mermaid can.

POWERS COMPANY OPENS SUMMER STUDIO.

On April 17th, the Powers Motion Picture Company moved bag and baggage from the studios at 511 West 42d Street, New York City, to their new summer plant located at 216th Street and Broadway. The Powers Company will occupy a well-known landmark of upper New York, a building known as "Seaman's Folly," so called because it represents a foolish outlay of money—thousands of dollars—by a wealthy but eccentric man. The building is a massive residence, constructed principally of marble with enormous rooms done in the grandest of style and architectural profusion. Among other things is a magnificent chapel, built in it for the owner's private use. When the building was erected that part of New York was a wilderness, and the incongruity of the entire undertaking caused it to be known as "Seaman's Folly." For the summer months, at least, the Powers Company will be quartered there, after which they are going to branch out and make another move that will surprise the trade.

The Encouraging Life Work of J. C. Deagan.

The two photographs reproduced on this page represent in but a crude manner the crowning effort in the remarkable life of Chicago's greatest manufacturer of musical instruments. Success has run like a silver cord through the life of J. C. Deagan, but it was only his untiring labor and sincere devotion to industry that have made this humble musician of thirty years ago the head and guiding hand of one of Chicago's most prominent manufactories.

In 1880, J. C. Deagan, then a musician in New York City, established a firm for the manufacture of orchestra bells, which we are informed was the first set of steel bells ever manufactured to be used as musical instruments. He continued to play the clarinet professionally and to manufacture musical instruments until 1898, at which time he went into the manufacture business exclusively. It might be well to trace his various steps of progress which followed his start in business. After continuing the business for several years in New York, he migrated to St. Louis, where he remained until 1898, at which time he came to Chicago and has remained ever since. His first location in Chicago was at 318 Dearborn St.; then he removed to 358 Dearborn St., where he remained until 1905. His working staff at this time was comprised by himself and son.

First Deagan Factory.

NEW DEAGAN FACTORY.

In the latter year he erected the building at Clark and Grace streets, which he has just vacated to occupy his large and commodious building at Berteau & East Ravenswood Park Ave., this building having a floor space of more than 75,000 feet. His career from 1905 is known to almost everyone in the musical and amusement professions.

His talent for conceiving and developing new ideas and originating new instruments has been shown by the success of many things new and prominent. Among them are harps for pipe organs, xylophones with resonators, steel marimbaphones, rosewood marimbaphones, aluminum and organ chimes, metal bamboo chimes, musical coins, and his special line of dinner gongs and altar gongs, on all of which, along with any other instruments, he has secured patents both for America and abroad.

The new building, constructed at a cost of little less than half a million dollars, including the mechanical equipment, stands as a prominent reminder of the untiring diligence and labor of J. C. Deagan.

UNIQUE ORDER IN HISTORY OF SUPPLY BUSINESS.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that he has received this week from a customer in the Republic of Panama, an order for the complete equipment of a 600-seat motion picture theater. This order includes the architectural, engineering, ventilating and illuminating plans; the theater front, seats, fans, operating booth, two motion picture machines with double dissolver, two Hallberg A. C. economizers, curtain, electric self-playing piano, special-built switchboard, and all the accessory supplies. Mr. Hallberg states that he has been given carte blanche to use his best efforts to build a high-class theater for his party, and this order is a gratifying result of the extensive advertising carried by Mr. Hallberg, as well as the confidence inspired by his complete motion picture catalogue.

Subscribers: Kindly renew your subscriptions promptly. This will save us considerable work and give us more time to make a better paper, if that is possible. If your subscription to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has expired, send in your renewal to-day. Co-operation spells your success and ours.

In answering advertisements kindly mention the Moving Picture World.

NEW ENGLAND.

THE Hartford, Conn., Lodge No. 64, T. M. A., will hold its fourth annual ball at Foot Guard Hall, Wednesday, April 10. These balls have been very popular in the past, and very extensive plans have been made to ensure a "time" that will even exceed previous affairs.

The Strong Theater, Burlington, Vt., is still presenting unusually good programs of vaudeville and photoplays. The Strong Theater has the name of being one of the best conducted photoplay houses in Vermont, and is considered to be on a splendid paying basis.

The Durbar, as produced by the Kinemacolor Company, was presented at Parsons' Theater, Hartford, Conn., this week. The reels were pronounced to be extremely meritorious and beautiful, and were reported to have done a tremendous business.

The Colonial Theater, Belfast, Me., is about ready to open, and should be successful, as this city is shy on up-to-date photoplay houses. The new house will have a seating capacity of about 750, and will present vaudeville and photoplays.

Blanchard's Theater, of Southbridge, Mass., is enjoying unquestioned good business, with fine programs of vaudeville and pictures.

The Opera House, Providence, R. I., turned towards motography, and exhibited the Kinemacolor production of the Durbar. The engagement was extended to twice its expected stay. These Kinemacolor productions are doing yeoman work for this industry in the New England territory. The reason being that these pictures are almost without exception, being exhibited in the best houses whenever shown, and at very much higher prices than usual. In this way the best classes are made familiar with the photoplay. After the initial introduction the inherent merit and fascination of motography easily makes converts of the great majority of former "non-believers."

During Holy Week, both the Savoy and Academy Theaters, Fall River, Mass., were "dark." This ends the dramatic season at the Academy, as all future "legitimate" attractions are to be given at the Savoy. The Academy now intends to give vaudeville and pictures, with the usual prices.

B. F. Keith adds another house to his circuit on April 18, when his new Bijou makes its initial opening. Vaudeville and pictures are scheduled as the policy. The new house is in Bangor, Me.

Another house is promised for Portland, Me., and the proposed theater is to be erected on the site of the old Roll-Away roller skating rink. The chief promoter is L. D. Mathis. If this deal is consummated, it means a theater with a seating capacity of nearly 2,000.

The Conture Brothers, known as Eugene and Alphonse, are about to open an airdome in Manchester, N. H., according to reports.

The Nickel Theater, Portland, Me., and the Portland Theater, both had some unusually brisk business when they exhibited motion pictures taken of Colonel Roosevelt, who was visiting that city. The pictures were taken purely as a local proposition, but the expense was easily made up by the extra trade resulting from their exhibition.

Manager S. J. Breen of Poli's Theater, Springfield, Mass., was presented with a gold ring by a number of his intimate friends. The presentation was made simply on general principles, as there was no birthday for an excuse. Manager Breen is an unusually popular gentleman, and it may also be added, an unusually efficient manager.

Both the Scenic and Empire Theaters, of Hartford, are doing very nicely under the personal management of P. S. McMahon. A daily change of photoplays, together with illustrated songs, seems to be sufficient to pack both theaters daily. These houses are very well managed.

Miss Marie Kearns, who has been in charge of the Park Theater, Taunton, Mass., has been transferred to the Park Theater, Manchester, N. H. The Park Theater at Taunton is now closed for the season, which accounts for Miss Kearns' change to Manchester.

The West End section of Boston will soon boast of another theater, as one is proposed for Lime Street. This theater will be conducted under the direction of the Elizabeth Peabody Settlement House of Boston. Mrs. Eva White proposes to present moving pictures, vaudeville and other forms of entertainment for the education of young aliens. Prof. Baker of Harvard College, is to help in this undertaking. The seating capacity will be about 400, and is to be a strictly educational project, with no admission fee being charged. Moving pictures will be very much in their element in this connection.

Manager E. A. Hortsmann of the Dreamland Theater, Lynn, Mass., has instituted a voting contest, which has proved very profitable. Patrons of the Dreamland are allowed one vote each for the most popular employees of the local retail stores. The competition is keen, and the attendance at the theater is very good, as friends of the contesting candidates are continually seeing the "movies," and incidentally voting for their favorite. Manager Newhall, of the Comique Theater, also of Lynn, is pulling off a very similar stunt. This house is giving away prizes to the most popular female employees of the local shoe factories. The contest is by vote, and is helping the box office, crowded houses being the rule.

A new motion picture show was opened on April 4 at the Berkand Theater, Lawrence, Mass., under a different kind of management than has ever been at this theater. The writer is informed that the new owners will cater to a refined patronage, and special care is to be taken to attract ladies and children. Free ladies' tickets will be liberally distributed for ladies to attend the matinee performances. The policy is a straight show of photoplays and illustrated songs. May it prosper under its new policy!

W. H. Looney of the Academy Theater, Lowell, Mass., was presented with a charm of the Loyal Order of Moose, by his friends. Manager Howley is doing a nice business with vaudeville and pictures at his Academy.

The Grace Methodist church of Worcester, Mass., took a step in the right direction on Thursday afternoon, April 4, when motion pictures were projected in the church, forming the entertainment for a body of young folks. The entertainment was given under the supervision of the "Men's Brotherhood," and the affair was a distinct success. It is reported that this is only the start, and that regular performances are to be held in the future. A nominal admission fee is charged, which goes to swell the charity funds of the church.

On March 31, a disastrous fire visited Solomon Block, on Main Street, Littleton, N. H. The loss is estimated at about $60,000, and destroyed the Solomon Department Store, a shoe store, a restaurant and also the Star Theater, a photoplay house owned by J. M. Solomon. As is usual when exact information is lacking, it was stated that the theater was the cause of the blaze. It was discovered later, however, that the restaurant was responsible. Mr. Solomon intends to rebuild the block and will erect a photoplay theater that will be more up-to-date than was the former theater.

After strenuous efforts to obtain a license for a moving picture theater to be operated in Brattleboro, Vt., Messrs. Gibson and Waterman finally prevailed upon this town to grant a license to the Empire Amusement Company. It only remains for this concern to pay the license fee of $300, and to erect the theater. Plans have been made and work is scheduled to begin immediately.

Local 182, I. A. T. S. E., the Boston Moving Picture Operators' Union, held a meeting on Wednesday, April 3, at 11 P. M., at Homestead Hall, 724 Washington Street. Several matters of importance were on the tapis. The local is in a very flourishing condition, and reports that the new scale of wages of Union Operators is very generally in force, and that managers have been ready to cooperate with them in this regard.

Lighthouse Point, the favorite summer resort near New Haven, Conn., will present a considerably altered appearance when it opens for the season, as many new attractions have been added. Among them is a new vaudeville and picture theater, which has a seating capacity of nearly 1,300. Busines is always good at the photoplay theaters in the summer resorts in New England, and this house will no doubt prosper.

That the Pathe Weekly has attained a tremendous vogue in Boston is well known to every picture man, and the fact that B. F. Keith's Theater makes a regular feature of this reel every week only emphasizes the condition. Independent exhibitors were saying that their licensed competitors had "it on them" in this regard, but the appearance of the Animated Weekly, the visualized newspaper, has silenced the kickers.

Piney Ridge, a summer park resort, near Warehouse Point, Conn., will have M. V. Harris, of Springfield, Mass., as manager, when it opens for the season. Mr. Harris is well known to the business and should find no difficulty in making a success of Piney Ridge. The Hartford and Springfield Street Railway Company have leased this park to the Metropolitan Amusement Company, and the opening will take place on Memorial Day, Thursday, May 30. Extensive improvements and alterations have been made, among which was the erection of a large airdrome, which will present vaudeville and pictures on afternoons and evenings. This is the first year that this park has been leased, as prior to this the railway company operated the place themselves.

The first week of the Academy Theater, Fall River, Mass., as an exponent of vaudeville and motion pictures, was very successful. Manager Benson reports that Licensed pictures, changed twice each week, and the Marcus Loew brand of vaudeville is just what Fall River wanted.

Taunton, Mass., is evidently a very religious city, as only two of the photoplay houses thought it advisable to remain open in Holy Week—the Star and Music Hall Theaters. In the smaller New England cities a number of photoplay houses closed during Holy Week, not so much because there was no money to be made at that time, but because this action places them in a favorable light before the churches and other religious bodies. These small city theaters don't have any transient patronage to speak of, and, therefore, it is extremely vital that they keep "in right" with their regular trade. In many cases it is worth while to close in Holy Week, even if a small money loss is involved.

Luby Brothers, who run the Lyceum Theater, Milford, Mass., will shortly put on Pathe's Passion Play. It is remarkable that this house advertises its telephone number in the Milford Journal. We wonder why, as there are no reserved seats!

Luby Brothers are to have strong competition in Milford, as a new house is now in the process of construction. The new house, to be called the Ideal, will seat about 800, and will give motion pictures and illustrated songs exclusively, according to the statement of Manager R. Perham. The house should be ready some time in June. The old Music Hall of Milford, which was damaged by fire this winter, will also be doing business before long, as plans have been completed for a thorough overhauling of the theater.

The Milano production of Homer's "Odyssey" is scheduled for the Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., on Monday evening, April 15. Performances will be given every matinee and evening. Seats are reserved, and are priced at twenty-five to seventy-five cents. Tremont Temple is without doubt the best place for this production, and it should do well. Considerable advertising and general publicity is planned for the reels.

Gordon's Olympia Company is a new Boston incorporation. The company is a $25,000 concern, with the incorporators: Nathan H. Gordon, Frank J. Howard, Max Shoolman and others. This was formed for the new vaudeville and photoplay house now being erected on Washington Street, Boston, which will be one of the finest in New England.

Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 182, has engaged officers and day headquarters at 113 Eliot Street, Boston. The offices will be ready for occupancy almost immediately. Financial Secretary Harry Danto and Business Agent David Cowan will have headquarters there.

The Pastime Theater, Lowell, Mass., was closed for a few days, on account of a small fire, but things have been put to rights, and the house is again doing business.

The cornerstone of Poli's Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., was laid on April 8, and Mr. S. Z. Poli was present, and made the announcement that his present completed plans called for the erection of a number of theaters within the next two years. Mr. Poli stated that he will spend over one million dollars ,and that his string of theaters would soon reach the number of twenty-five. Mr. Poli's theater in New Haven, Conn., built on the site of his old Bijou Theater, which was burned to the ground, will open about June 1. Early in September, Mr. Poli will open his Lincoln Theater at Worcester, Mass., which he has purchased. Early in October, Mr. Poli's Bridgeport, Conn., house will be ready for its opening, and it is understood that houses are to be built for Mr. Poli in Hartford, Conn., and in Springfield, Mass.

All of Mr. Poli's houses use photoplays, and will present a strong competition to the circuits of Marcus Loew and William Fox, both of whom operate extensively in the New England states.

The Broadway Theater, Everett, Mass., has decided to change its policy of Independent pictures and vaudeville to a stock company. This is merely for a short change, after which the regular programs will be continued.

The Orpheum Theater, Boston, had a fire scare on April 9. A fire in a department store adjoining the Orpheum was the cause. Frank Meagher, the stage manager at the Orpheum, was informed of the fire, and decided to take no chances of panic. Mr. Meagher went on the stage, and informed his audience just what was happening, and advised everyone to file out of the theater, to be on the safe side. The audience filed out in perfect order, and in six minutes the house was empty. As a matter of fact, the Orpheum was not touched by the flames, but the action of Mr. Meagher is very commendable. It doesn't do to take chances with a crowded theater.

Edison's release, "Charlie's Reform," has created a great deal of interest and favorable comment from various New England societies. The General Film Company's Boston offices have received letters from various religious and other societies, asking when the reel may be seen in certain cities. The Plaza Theater, Springfield, Mass., exhibited this picture with great success. The recreation division of the Russell Sage Foundation has become interested in the picture, and has brought it to the attention of many educational organizations. There are a number of exhibitors who refused to use this picture, even after being informed by their film exchange that it had been so favorably noticed. These men complain that "it hasn't enough action." This is mighty poor judgment on the exhibitors' part, and they evidently fail to realize that there can be no better and easier method of boosting their own business than by co-operating with such educational organizations. The wise exhibitor would do his best to book this sort of picture, and not refuse it when offered. The educational movement is gaining steadily, and exhibitors should appreciate this fact.

The old home of the Boston Daily Herald, 255 Washington Street, which was vacated six years ago, has been leased for a period of thirty years. The building is to be made over into one of the most up-to-date moving picture theaters in the country. It has been leased by the Beacon Theater Company, which operates the Beacon Theater, Tremont Street, Boston. At present the plans for re-

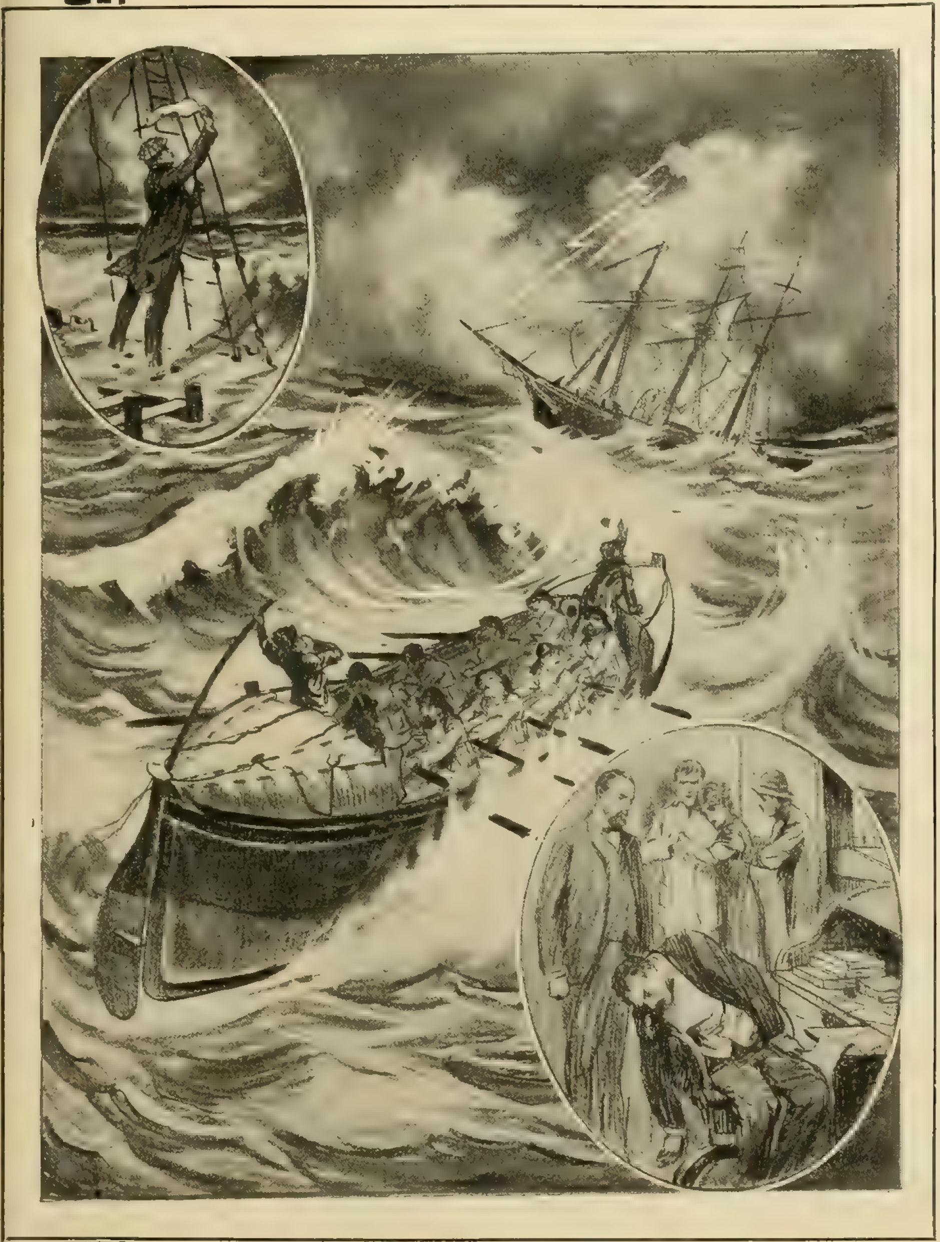
AND STATE RIGHTS THROWN IN FREE!

This is the way we intend to revolutionize the feature film business in the United States. This is the way we intend to sell the most wonderfully thrilling film of the year:



"The Death Ship"

OR

"The Wreck of The Aurora"

(Copyright 1912, World's Best Film Co.)

About 3,000 Feet

Considering that the World's Best Film Company paid a higher price for the United States rights to this film than has ever been paid for any feature film (flowery advertisements to the contrary notwithstanding) this 15c-a-foot offer is staggering in its importance. It wipes the old state rights plan out of existence and gives state right buyers a chance to clean up a fortune on a small investment!

WE GIVE YOU THE STATE RIGHTS FREE

(With Full Protection Against Infringers and Dupers)

AND SELL YOU THE FILM AT 15c A FOOT

Compared with prices asked for state rights on films not half so powerful as "The Death Ship" this is like handing you from $1,000 to $5,000, according to the state you secure! Write immediately (or wire) for full particulars.

modeling the building are before the building commissioners waiting to be passed upon. It is expected that the management will receive word from the commissioners very soon, telling them whether the plans are satisfactory, and, if so, work of reconstructing the building will begin at once. The plans were made by Clarence H. Blackall, the well-known architect, who has designed so many theaters and public buildings. As the Herald Building was erected over half a century ago, a great deal of alteration will be needed. Mr. Jacob Lourie, the president and general manager of the company, will have his hands full with his new duties. Further details of the theater will be given later in these columns, but it is safe to state that the new house will be on a par with the Beacon Theater, which is without doubt one of the finest in the United States. Mr. Lourie never does anything, except in the finest manner, regardless of expense.

Lexington Park, a summer resort near Boston, is nearly ready for its season, and many improvements have been made. F. O. Jackson is in charge of the park, and, as usual, the vaudeville and photoplay programs in the rustic theater will form the chief entertainment at Lexington Park.

The Westminster Theater, Providence, R. I., presenting regular attractions during the winter, opens with vaudeville and pictures on May 6.

Lake Nipmuc Park, Uxbridge, Mass., will have its initial opening on May 27. Business is usually good here, with vaudeville and photoplays.

The new Peabody Theater, Peabody, Mass., had its initial opening on Monday, April 8. This house has a seating capacity of about 1,500, and is operated by McKenny and Aechtler. Vaudeville and photoplays are given daily, and the opening week found appreciative and large audiences.

The Boston representative of the White Rat Actors' Union of America had a hurry call to Portland, Me., this week. It is reported that this Union has a grievance against the Portland Theater, managed by Mr. Greeley.

On Thursday, April 11, John F. Masters gave an illustrated lecture and travel talk on the Panama Canal, before the Victorian Club, Hotel Westminster, Boston. Motion pictures were a prominent feature of the entertainment.

These columns have told the facts concerning the South End Theater, Boston, which Marcus Loew secured from its former owners, Messrs. Edwards and Farren, on a foreclosure sale. The matter was very thoroughly aired in the courts, and it has been decided that Messrs. Edwards and Farren have a right to the entrance of the theater, provided they pay a yearly rental for it of $4,000. If these people assert their rights and take possession of the entrance, it means that the Marcus Loew interests must find a new entrance, which will put them to a great deal of inconvenience and expense. It is not believed that the South End Theater has found things extra good, as the vaudeville and photoplay policy has been abandoned for the summer, and stock company attractions substituted. The house is still giving vaudeville and pictures on Sunday nights, and will return regularly to this style of programs next fall.

HENRY.

PHILADELPHIA.

THE burning of "Young's Old Pier" makes the Savoy Theater the only house of its kind on the beach front and makes the lawsuit on between Comstock & Gest of New York, against Brown & Wesley, the present managers of the house, more bitter in the effort to obtain control of the house.

Moving picture men all over the country will be intensely interested in the bill introduced in the New Jersey Senate by Frederick G. Stickel which makes a crime of the making use of false statements to obtain property or credit.

Captain Louis Hillebrand, a veteran of the Civil War, and a large stockholder in the German Theater, died on April 2. He was born in Baden, Germany and came to this country in 1850. When the Civil War broke out he joined Company B, Twenty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served with distinction throughout the war, advancing to the rank of captain.

Several weeks ago Harry I. Brownback, proprietor of the Colonial Theater, Phoenixville, Pa., brought suit against the City Council there to recover $700 damages by reason of the demolition of billboards outside of his theater by officers. The jury returned a verdict of $300 in favor of Brownback and the defendants applied for a new trial, which has since been refused by the court.

Shipments of films to and from this city are not likely to be delayed or threatened seriously by the impending labor troubles in the railroad world, according to local transportation men. They figure that the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore & Ohio companies will be less affected than most of the railroads in the United States.

Edward A. Goble, Clareton, Pa., has put in a new Edison exhibition machine.

Julius G. Hanson & Son will open a moving picture theater at Tenth and Spring Street, Reading, Pa., about May 1.

After a series of experiments by the Underwriters and the Fire Department of this city, it has been found that moving picture films can be ignited by steam pipes.

Manager Keeney of the Palace Theater, Reading, Pa., entertained 3,000 boys and girls on April 3. He had announced that he would entertain the youngsters from 9.45 a. m. to 1 p. m., and long before the time for the show, the crowd began to gather and when the doors were thrown open the street was blocked for half a square. Five reels of pictures were shown.

Frank G. Schuler, manager of a vaudeville and moving picture theater of Allentown, Pa., secured a license here to marry Miss Norma G. Deahn, a singer. The wedding will take place shortly.

John W. Wilbraham has sold to the Amber Amusement Company, the vaudeville and picture house at Frankford Avenue and Cumberland Streets, for a consideration of $20,000, of which $19,000 remains on a mortgage.

Shipments of films by express will be rendered much more convenient and easy to trace in future than in the past, according to notices given out by the local express companies. For twenty years the companies have been at work among themselves to get a uniform receipt, but the companies differed as to its form and would never agree until within the past week, when the officials of the Adams, American and Wells-Fargo got together and worked out a satisfactory solution of the problem. The shipper, hereafter, it is intended, shall get a uniform receipt, no matter which company he entrusts his package to. It will be simpler than any of the old forms of receipt, which varied according to the usage of the companies, and caused no end of complaints and confusion among moving picture men and merchants generally. Another feature of the express companies' reform program is a new form of waybill. Heretofore, there has been only one waybill for each package, forwarded independently of the package. Sometimes it reached the agent at destination at the same time as the package, and sometimes it did not. If not, some agents have been in the habit of charging the consignee again for packages that had been prepaid, and oftentimes a batch of films and other supplies would thus have a double charge attached, which it was difficult to straighten out. The new waybills will be of two colors, dark yellow for prepaid packages and white for those sent collect. A reclassification of offices and routes is also proposed, and will be worked out in due time.

The Allegheny Amusement Company is having extensive improvements made at their theater on Frankford Avenue.

F. G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and Thomas M. Love have added to their string of vaudeville interests by taking over the Grand Opera House, at Broad Street and Montgomery Avenue, for ten years, the lease to begin in September of 1913. The annual rental is said to be $30,000, an increase of $12,000 a year over that paid by the present lessees of the property, Stair & Havlin. The house under the new management will be devoted to popular vaudeville and moving pictures. The Grand has a seating capacity of 3,313 and is the third largest playhouse in Philadelphia. The Grand was built in 1888.

Negotiations are under way to lease the moving picture house of Jacob Hess at Lehigh and Germantown Avenues by the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests. It has been proposed that Hess take down the present structure and build in its stead a large vaudeville theater.

Mr. Edward Kraupa, of the Monarch Film Exchange, states that during the Lenten season the motion picture business has been at a standstill, and that all the managers were complaining and working very hard to make ends meet. They have to keep up the standard of their theaters and with the people not attending the receipts fell very low. However, with the Lenten season now over, things are beginning to look brighter and they look forward to a prosperous reason ahead.

Joe Canton, of the Liberty Theater of Atlantic City, is building a new theater at Pleasantville, New Jersey.

The Colonial Theater of Morristown, under the management of Lauro & Co., opened on Saturday, April 6, with three reels of pictures and three acts of vaudeville, including a musical comedy and a company of Italian singers. They played three shows to the capacity of the house. This speaks well of Norristown.

The Union Theater of Hammonton, New Jersey, reopened under new management.

Thos. P. Bible is about to open an Independent film exchange in Washington. He has lately been with the Independent Film Company of Philadelphia.

A large entrance to the pavillion at Luna Park, at 65th and Callowhill Streets, was wrecked by the wind. The towering-like building was blown into Callowhill Street, blocking street cars for more than an hour until the wreckage was cleared away.

Announcement was made of the closing of negotiations for the purchase of a theater site at 60th and Ludlow Streets. The negotiations were carried on by E. S. Tomlinson, Jr., and Thomas J. Hookey, real estate brokers, representing Frederick G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and William H. Freihofer, who will build the theater. The theater will seat about 2,500, and the total investment will be close to $300,000.

Dr. Coleman Sellers, of Philadelphia, was a pioneer in the art of making motion pictures. In 1861 Dr. Sellers made and patented a device which he called the kinematoscope, for the exhibition of stereoscoptic pictures in motion. The machine accomplished the object intended in a practical manner, but required for its full development, instantaneous photography, which had not at that time been invented. The operation to be reproduced was divided into a suitable number of parts, the subject being posed for each part of the movement. As many seconds were required for each pose with the slow plate process then used, great care was needed on the part of the operator and the model to get perfect registration of the successive views. The result, however, was quite successful in portraying such simple repeated movements as a boy driving a nail or a lady sewing.

There were two methods proposed by the inventor, one showing the photographs arranged radially around a horizontal axis, and the other, the use of an endless belt more closely approximating the modern highly developed machine. The part played by photography in the development of the motion picture industry cannot be fully presented without reference to the pioneer experiment of Coleman Sellers.

Mr. Samuel Stern, of the Stern Mfg. Company, one of the first manufacturers of moving picture machine supplies, with Mrs. Stern celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of his marriage, "Crystal Wedding," on Sunday, April 14th, at the Oriental Drawing Room, at Broad Street and Columbia avenue. A number of men prominent in the moving picture trade were in attendance. Mr. Harry Rosen acted as toast master, Mr. Stern spoke on "Fifteen years of a Woman's Achievements," and Rev. Marvine Nathan also made a short address. There were a number of entertainment features.

The Calehuff Supply Co. have on demonstration one of the Motiographs Model 1-A, made by the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., of Chicago, and the local operators are well pleased with it, as it has several new features, seat attached and a rewinding attachment built on the machine.

CLEMENT H. CONGDON.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

THE State Fire Marshal Department of Illonis, established a year or two ago, but inactive for a year because of lack of funds, has not yet taken up the investigation of picture shows. State Marshal Doyle advises the Moving Picture World that on account of the work incident to investigation and prosecution of arson and its kindred crimes, the inspection of photoplay houses has been delayed. Praise be for this respite!

The General and Special Feature Film Fixture Company of Chicago, has been incorporated, with capital stock of $2,000, to deal in moving picture supplies. The incorporators are Joseph and Leo A. Hopp and E. Jonas.

Following the defeat of the Sunday picture shows in Bloomington, Ill., when submitted to a referendum vote of the people, it is probable that the question will be balloted upon in Elgin, Ill. The city council ordered the theaters to close on Sunday, whereupon petitions asking that the matter be submitted to the people were circulated by the managers of the showhouses.

The Bessemer Amusement Company of Chicago, has been dissolved.

John Karzin, owner of the first motion picture theater in Springfield, Ill., who recently sold the Royal to his partner, Gus Keresotes, and the Casino to Charles Rochiccoli, is now devoting his time to his picture show in St. Louis, which he recently purchased.

Foote & Lindsey, formerly of Ipava, Ill., have purchased the Airdome at Chillicothe, Mo.

The Boston Theater Company of Chicago, has been incorporated, with capital stock of $40,000, to operate places of amusement. The incorporators are John G. Campbell, D. Avery Kimbark and Cyrus Heren.

A portion of the mob which recently did damage in Rock Island, Ill., surged through the lobby of the Family Theater, a moving picture show at Nineteenth Street and Second Avenue. An alarm of fire was spread and the crowd rushed for the exits. Doormen informed the audience of the nature of the disturbance and all left quietly. Nobody was injured.

Joe E. Tabor has been granted a permit to build a theater on South State Street, Belvidere, Ill.

R. W. Trego, formerly manager of the opera house at Medora, Ill., will conduct a motion picture show in a tent at that place this summer.

William McFerren, manager of McFerren's Opera House at Hoopeston, Ill., has purchased a motion picture machine and will run pictures and vaudeville this summer.

Ralph E. Sifford will give a picture show during the summer months at the opera house in Anna, Ill. The Misses Norma and Jean Grear will furnish the music.

When B. E. Clements showed Dante's Inferno at the Princess Theater, Freeport, Ill., the last day price was announced as 10 cents.

C. E. Zink, of Gilman, Ill., has secured Stewart Reed, trap drummer, of Monticello, Ind., and Miss Williams, of Iowa, pianist and vocalist, for his moving picture show.

The Lyric Theater at Peoria has been remodeled and a new ventilating system installed. The name will be changed; selection to be made by the patrons.

William Mogel, of Freeport, Ill., well known in moving picture circles, and Miss Gladys Conrad were recently married at St. Louis, Mo.

Contract has been let for a new moving picture theater and vaudeville house at Princeton, Ill., to be owned by Emil Simon and conducted by W. O.

Stevens, present proprietor of the Star Theater. The house will be a ground floor theater with a seating capacity of 350, which can be increased at any time. Manager Stevens has taken a five-year lease on the place with an option for renewal.

A stock company with a capital of $25,000 has purchased a site on First Street, La Salle, Ill., for a new vaudeville and picture house, to be erected sometime this summer. The place will have a seating capacity of from 1,000 to 1,200. E. G. Newman, present proprietor of the Majestic, in that city, will be in charge.

FRANK H. MADISON.

LOUISVILLE.

AIDED by good weather, the moving picture business in Louisville has resumed splendid proportions, and is in eminently satisfactory condition. Attractions recently have been uniformly high-class, and the public has been treated to unusually fine films. The result has been augmented attendances and complaints as to business have disappeared.

The Masonic Theater, Louisville, usually the home of legitimate dramas, was turned over to the moving picture men for four days recently, the Felare World Tour being shown during that time. The major portion of the pictures were made by the Gaumont Company. A feature of their stay, and one which made a hit with Louisville folk, was the addition of a special performance for orphans of the Kentucky metropolis. An entire morning was devoted to taking the children around the world, via the animated picture route, and the two hours was well spent, judging from the breathless attention with which the pictures were received.

Manager Garrity announces the appearance of the Sarah Bernhardt reels in Louisville in the near future.

"The Hobo," a Selig film, presented at the Majestic Theater recently, scored with big crowds that witnessed it the one day it was shown.

The Sun Theater, erected by the Pastime Amusement Company at a cost of $15,000, opened April 14. The theater is the handsomest in the western part of Louisville. It is located at Eighteenth and Gallagher Streets. About 500 persons can be accommodated in the new theater. Vaudeville acts, changed three times a week, will be a feature of the theater. Two acts will be staged, one being a single, the other a double. Independent film service will be used, first run pictures being secured with a daily change. The admission price will be ten cents. A big electric sign will loom up at night and announce the daily feature of the new playhouse. H. B. Struby is president of the Pastime Amusement Company, which also operates the Empire, Shelby and Market Streets.

The West Broadway Amusement Company added the "Lady Minstrels" to its attractions recently, all of the girls composing the troupe being amateurs. Their work was unusually good, and attracted good crowds. The new theater being erected at Twenty-third and Market Streets by the West Broadway Amusement Company is progressing rapidly with the arrival of better weather, and it now seems as if it will be completed by June. It will cost $50,000.

The men who are organizing a State organization of exhibitors in Kentucky have thus far neglected to inform Louisville men of their plans, and the latter are wondering if they cut no ice in the exhibitors' pond. M. Switow, of the Falls Cities Amusement Company; Louis Dittmar, of the Majestic Amusement Company, Allen Kenney, of the Princess Amusement Company, and others who operate strings of houses have been left in the dark, and it seems as if the Gateway City will have no representation at the coming meeting.

It is probable that moving picture houses in Henderson, Ky., will be fumigated in the near future. The Board of Health of that town have already authorized the health officers to fumigate school buildings and will start next on the places of amusement, it is expected. Moving picture men of that town do not object seriously, though many believe the step unnecessary, as most of the theaters have ventilating systems above reproach.

A new moving picture house has been completed at Lafayette, Ky., and will be occupied at once. It has a seating capacity of 200, with entirely new fixtures. It will be known as the Fairy Theater.

More than one hundred school children of Lexington, Ky., were guests at a special performance at the Star and Colonial Theaters recently. Both houses are operated by the Colonial Amusement Company, which is co-operating with the school authorities of Lexington in offering free admission to their theaters to the pupils who are punctual at their schools. The plan worked admirably and will be a permanent feature hereafter.

The Third Kentucky Regiment band will open a moving picture theater at Hopkinsville, Ky., shortly. An Edison machine has been ordered. Three reels will be shown daily, besides the Gaumont weekly review. On one evening of each week, the band will vary the performance with musical numbers. The opera house in which the show will be given is being renovated and decorated. A new ventilating system which will insure plenty of cool air during the hot summer evenings will be installed.

W. O. Adams, formerly an engineer at the Panama Canal, was in Paducah, Ky., recently, lecturing and showing 2,500 feet of film dealing with the big ditch. The progress of the work is shown in detail and Mr. Adams addressed big crowds during his stay in the western Kentucky city.

Simons & Arn, proprietors of the Gem Theater, Maysville, Ky., will add new seats to their house, having placed an order for 400 new opera chairs with a Chicago concern. The Gem is a new theater.

The Pastime Theater, Winchester, Ky., will make its own power in the future, an electric plant now being installed. The theater will provide its own current for lights and ventilation.

Tony Sudekum, of Nashville, has added another theater to his chain, having leased the Grand Opera House, at Columbia, Tenn. It will be renovated for a moving picture theater. Legitimate attractions will be staged from time to time, though the animated pictures will be the regular attraction. Mr. Sudekum also operates the Dixie Theater in Columbia.

The new Rex Theater, Nashville, will be ready for the public some time in April. The house is located on Fifth Avenue, between Church and Union Streets. The new house, which consists of the old Rex Theater with an adjoining building, will have a seating capacity of 400. The improvements represent an expenditure of about $25,000. W. H. Wassman will manage the new house. The slope of the floor in the Rex will be unusually steep, the first row of seats being ten feet lower than the rear. The operating room of the theater will be encased by concrete, protecting the theater proper from blazes which may start in that section of the house. A new ventilating system, changing the air every six minutes, has been installed. A Wurlitzer duplex musical instrument, to cost $5,000, will complete the equipment of the Rex.

Improvements amounting to about $3,000 are now being made in the Alhambra Theater, Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn. The house is operated by the Crescent Amusement Company, which owns fourteen other theaters in the South. A new color scheme will be put into effect, white, gold and gray being used. The indirect lighting system, which is so much in vogue, also will be adopted. The theater will be ready for the public late in April.

The passage of Lent and abstinence and the arrival of good weather have proven a fine combination for moving picture men of Louisville, and good attendances have been the rule at the various homes of animated pictures recently. The visit of Theodore Roosevelt also tended to bring additional crowds into the Kentucky metropolis.

At a recent meeting of the Louisville Photoplay Association it was decided to eliminate singing from five-cent moving picture houses and to allow theaters which charge 10 cents but one vocalist. The change went into effect April 14. It will assist in cutting down expenses of exhibitors in Louisville. Many moving picture men believe that singing is not popular, and the new system will demonstrate whether or not their views are correct.

Freddy Wells, a Louisville man, is now singing at the Crystal, the Market Street house of the Falls Cities Amusement Company. William J. Moore, the diminutive doorkeeper at the Novelty Theater, has resigned, and has been succeeded by Archie Dye, another midget from Louisville. Mr. Dye is but 3 feet 4 inches in height. He was somewhat embarrassed on his first appearance by his ill-fitting uniform. It was originally made for Moore, and was much too large for his successor. With the trousers rolled up and sleeves turned back, however, Mr. Dye managed to get along until Manager Hampton could have another uniform made. The management of the Falls Cities Amusement Company has announced that Wilmine Hammann will appear at the Novelty shortly as vocalist. Miss Hammann is well known in Louisville, having appeared a couple of years ago. She comes from Milwaukee, where she sang at the Schlitz garden.

The Broadway Amusement Company, which is erecting a $50,000 airdrome at Twenty-third and Market Streets, has announced that Henry Reiss will manage the new theater on its completion. Mr. Reiss is one of the officers of the company. The Broadway has secured the services of J. J. Musselman, formerly connected with the Princess Amusement Company, and he is now managing the Globe Theater.

The Sun Theater, erected at Eighteenth and Gallagher Streets by the Pastime Amusement Company; the Norman Theater, owned by J. M. Wentzel, and the Grand, of New Albany, operated by the Falls Cities Amusement Company, have arranged to use the vaudeville service of the Gomes' Theatrical Exchange, of Cincinnati. Arthur V. Sheckler, of Louisville, turned the deal. The theaters will make three changes weekly in the vaudeville line.

A. F. Mayer, representing the Swanson-Crawford Film Exchange, has stated that he will shortly file suit against the Parkland Amusement Company for $210, which is due for rental and loss of films, it is claimed. B. M. Bowers is head of the company, which operates the Parkland Theater, located at Twenty-eighth and Dumesnil Streets. The following films have been lost by the Parkland, according to the Louisville representative of the film company: "The Baseball Bug," "The Return," and "The Rivals." The Royal Theater, of New Albany, is now using the Swanson-Crawford service, while a new theater, erected by E. Motteler, at Twenty-third Street and Ormsby Avenue, also has put on that line of films.

Marie Wells, a Louisville woman who hurt her leg at the Columbia Theater, filed suit against the Princess Amusement Company, discovering too late that the Vaudo Amusement Company conducted the Columbia. The suit was dismissed. The same men are officers of both companies, hence the mistake. Miss Wells demanded $5,000.

The Hopkins' Theater, operated by the Princess Amusement Company, has decided to number all seats instead of allowing patrons to choose their own seats, as heretofore. The change has already gone into effect. Harry Bedell, of Dayton, Ky., sang at the Orpheum Theater, another Princess house, recently, and scored a hit with patrons of that theater. "Circus Day" was his selection, and he was forced to come back several times, the performance being delayed while he repeated the popular number.

"The Whitecap," a three-reel feature by the Atlas Company, was staged at the Cherokee Theater recently, Deer Brothers advertising the film by means of sending a two-horse rig through the streets. The driver was attired in white, his head being covered by a white cap. The feature attracted good crowds.

The West End Amusement Company has begun work on the airdrome to be erected at Twenty-sixth and Alford Streets. It will cost about $1,000 and be ready by June 1.

Fonda Minor will make changes in a building at 1217 Story Avenue, the building to be converted into an airdrome. It will be completed about May 1. Vaudeville and moving pictures will be shown.

The week beginning April 7 might appropriately have been known as "Moving Picture Week" in Louisville. Besides the regular presentation of animated pictures, both the Masonic and Macauley's Theaters, legitimate houses, were used for the films. Sarah Bernhardt drew big crowds in Camille at the Masonic, even the photographic likeness of "the divine" attracting the Louisville public. Lyman H. Howe took possession of Macauley's Theater, showing his well known "Travel Festival" during the entire week. The Louisville Aero Club viewed the scenes with interest, especially those showing aeroplanes in action. The club attended as guests of honor.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky will meet in Lexington, Ky., on April 25 and 26, according to announcement. The Phoenix Hotel will be the meeting place, and M. A. Neff, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will preside. About 150 exhibitors are expected to attend the meeting, at which the state organization will be perfected. A banquet will be the social feature of the gathering. Trips will be made to various points of interest about Lexington. Motion pictures will be made of the meeting.

T. A. Nolan, proprietor of the Pastime Theater, of Maysville, Ky., will be married to Miss Anna Lee Riley in Maysville on April 24. Miss Riley resides in Cincinnati, although Maysville was formerly her home.

"Vanity Fair," the Vitagraph production, was shown at the Elite Theater, Bowling Green, Ky., for one day recently and aroused much enthusiasm.

The Lyric Theater, Winchester, Ky., has added a hundred 100-candle power lights to the illumination in front of the theater on Court Street. The string extends from the theater to the next corner, and converts the thoroughfare into a "white way." H. H. Phillips is manager of the Lyric.

The Pastime Theater, Winchester, Ky., was thrown open to the public on April 4. Clarence and Arthur Bloomfield are the owners. The Pastime has a seating capacity of over 3 0. A five piece orchestra is a feature. Vaudeville will probably be used during the summer.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

Among the Exhibitors

La Salle, Ill.—The La Salle Enterprise Co. has been organized here with a capital of $25,000. Will erect a new vaudeville house on First Street.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Plans for a summer theater at Kennywood Park have been made by Architect Edward P. Bock, Liberty Bank Building, for A. A. McTighe.

Columbus, Ohio.—The Progress Amusement Co., capital $1,200, E. M. Newmann, Lawrence Lowenstein and Edward Dotter.

NAPATIA, THE GREEK SINGER (April 30).—Billy Arnold, a young fireman, saves Napatia, a beautiful Greek street singer from the brutality of her foster-father one day and falls deeply in love with her. He manages to meet her several times, and one morning is overjoyed when she comes with her foster-father and sings before the engine-house. Billy's companions joke him good-naturedly about Napatia, but he tells them it is no joke and that he intends making Napatia his wife if possible. A few days later, Billy meets Napatia before her home and takes her for a walk. Coming upon an alarm-box, Billy shows her how to work it and tells her if she is ever in trouble and needs him, to send in an alarm. A moment later the venomous foster-father appears, rages at finding Napatia with Billy and attempte to strike her. Billy instantly knocks him down, warns him to cease his brutality toward the girl and watches them leave. Napatia pays for her walk with Billy by being imprisoned in an attic room by her enraged foster-parents. Frantically she tries to escape, but cannot. Suddenly she thinks of Billy'e promise to come to her in time of need. Gathering an armful of paper she sets it on fire and holds it near the window. A pedestrian sees the blaze, turns in an alarm, and the department quickly responds. Billy and his companions burst into the house, frighten the foster-parents out of their wits, break into the attic room and Napatia throws herself into Billy's arms and confesses what she has done to bring him. At this moment Chief Ryan strides in, the situation is explained, and Ryan, with a twinkle in his eye, tells Napatia and Billy to hustle out to the nearest marriage-license bureau, then gives orders for the boys to turn the hose on the enraged foster-parents if they make a move to interfere.

HIS THRIFTY WIFE (May 2).—Bob Stout is a martyr to the common henpeck cause. His wife is saving money for a little bungalow, and poor Bob is robbed continually. He tries to shave, but cannot. Wifie tries her hand at it and Bob, with his face nicely sliced, vows to leave home. He hikes into the bedroom and discovers wifie has appropriated his roll for the bungalow proposition. This is the last straw. Hastily dressing, he smashes the strong-box, gets his money and grip and leaves home. That night, and for several nights, he bunks in his office, where the draughts and chills give him the ague and disorder him generally. Meanwhile, Mrs. Stout sees an ad for a lady barber at Mrs. Slather's shop, applies for the job and gets it. A week later Stout receives a letter from his Uncle John, enclosing a check for five hundred dollar in honor of his wedding anniversary. Bob is delighted, meets a couple of gay pals and they prepare to blow in the pile. At the door of the café Bob decides to get a shave, hikes into Mrs. Slather's shop and she is preparing to shave him when word comes of her husband's being ill and she leaves, calling in Mrs. Stout to finish the job. Mrs. Stout gets one look at Bob's lathered face, then drives him pell-mell out. In the melee Bob loses his wallet with the five hundred dollars and only misses it when he is called upon to settle the café bill. He returns to the shop, is cornered by wifie, reconciliation follows and they depart for home. Meanwhile, Bob's pals are arrested for not settling their bill, call Bob on the 'phone and frantically pray him to bail them out, but Bob says nay nay, rings off and goes to wifie's arms.

THE CHAUFFEUR, THE GIRL AND THE COP. (May 3).—The Riches, a wealthy couple, employ a chauffeur, a maid and her mother. Jimmie, the chauffeur, is in love with Mollie, the maid, and his one rival is Hogan, a cop. Hogan hangs around Mollie in the kitchen and makes himself thoroughly obnoxious to Jimmie, who fusses and fumes and rages at Mollie, and is only rewarded by her laughter. One evening the Riches prepare to go to the theater and Mollie puts the opera-glasses in Rich's coat pocket and forgets to inform him. At the theater Rich thinks he has forgotten the glasses and dispatches Jimmie back to the house to get them. Jimmie returns and, in passing the kitchen window, sees Officer Hogan's reflection on the shade kissing Mollie. This is what he imagines, but the truth is that Hogan is just accepting a piece of pie from Mollie's mother. Jimmie is furious and, to avoid calling Mollie, raises a window and gets into the house secretly. He is rummaging about for the glasses when Mollie hears the noise. Hogan draws his gun, rushes in and captures Jimmie as a thief. Jimmie tries to explain, but Mollie tells of giving Rich the glasses and Jimmie is lugged off to the station by the exultant Hogan. Mollie's mother receives a phone from Rich about what is keeping Jimmie and tells of his arrest. Old Rich and his wife instantly ride to the station, where matters are explained. Jimmie is exonerated and leaves with Mollie while Hogan is reprimanded by the Sergeant for being overzealous. A week later Hogan watches the hack that is returning Mollie and Jimmie from the parson's, pass him all decorated with streamers and old shoes, and rages inwardly as they wave sarcastically.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE BANDITS (May 4).—Jim Matthews, express agent in Red Rock, Arizona, and his daughter Alice, are watching anxiously over the bedside of Mrs. Matthews, who is very ill. An express box of money is now left by the stage and Matthews is ordered to guard it over night. The "Arizona Kid," a notorious bandit, who has followed the stage and watched while they left the box, now gallops back to the rendezvous of his pals, tells them of the easy chance to rob the office and they start at once. Meanwhile Alice has sent her father for a doctor and is all alone with her sick mother. Suddenly a knock is heard, Alice looks out, sees a shadowy figure, thinks it is the "Arizona Kid," a notice and picture of whom is tacked upon the wall, gets her father's revolver ,opens the door and admits - Broncho Billy, who has stopped for a night's lodging. Alice relieves him of his guns and, in spite of his protests, backs him into a storeroom and locks the door. A few moments later the bandidt gallop up and Alice, realizing her mistake, liberates Broncho, who gets his guns, tells Alice to hint that the money is in the storeroom and that he wil do the rest. A moment later the bandits, led by the "Kid," burst in the door and cover Alice. Weakly she nods toward the storeroom and, laughing exultantly, the gang rush in, only to be confronted by Broncho with leveled guns. Quickly disarming them, Broncho backs them out the door at gun's point, while Alice gazes after him with the lovelight shining in her eyes.

LUBIN.

PAYING THE PRICE (April 25).—Ned Davis, a ranchman, goes to town to buy a horse. After the ranchman's departure, Bert Adams, an old suitor, enters the cottage and insults Ned's wife. He kisses her and in the struggle makes a deep scratch on her arm. Mary drives the ruffian from the house. Fearful of the consequences, Adams induces Pedro, a peon, to steal a horse, sell it to Davis and then charge him with horse-stealing. The plot is carried through successfully and the sheriff and a posse seek Davis at his ranch and find the horse. Mrs. Davis tells of the assault and shows the wound on her arm. In a rage Davis seizes the cowardly Adams and there is a terrible struggle. The ruffian draws his revolver. In the struggle the stove is upset and the house takes fire. The revolver is discharged, the ball passes through the window and strikes Pedro, the peon, who is watching outside. The peon, fearing that he is mortally wounded, rushes in just as the posse are placing the rope around the ranchman's neck. He confesses his share in the plot and turns over the money he received for his work and the price of the horse. The sheriff removes the rope from Davis's neck and it is placed around the neck of Adams. The sheriff hands Davis the money, telling him that it and $500 reward is lawfully his and it will help to rebuild his cottage.

THE LOST DOG (April 27).—Kitty Tryon is out walking with her little dog Pinkie. Turning a corner the dog loses sight of his mistress and turns back. He is quickly picked up by Jule Murry, who is just leaving his home. Bob Nugent sees Kitty crying, and being informed of the loss of the dog, goes on the hunt for it. He meets Murry and demands the dog. Murry punches Nugent in the face, then there is a pretty vicious rough and tumble fight. The dog gets away and is picked up by Tom Jackson, who runs and is chased by the mob. He sees a sewer hole open and promptly drops down into the sewer. The dog gets loose and looks down the sewer at Jackson. The mob catch up and finally Pinkie is restored to his mistress.

THE FORGOTTEN POCKETBOOK (April 27).—Jean May and Noah Wilson are employed in a department store and they are apparently very much in love. Will Pickup, a masher, sees Jean and tries to flirt with her; he places his hat on one of the stools. While paying attention to Jean a customer comes in and sits on Will's hat. Will discovers the accident and as it is a half-holiday, the store closing at one o'clock, he hastens to purchase a new hat. Jean and Noah leave the store. Jean gives Noah her hand-bag, while she puts on her gloves. She cannot button the glove. Noah, on trying to help her, puts the handbag into his pocket. After a short walk Jean says Noah cannot go home with her, whereupon Noah claims she does not love him. Jean says she does and kisses him, much to the surprise of Noah. Jean, realizing what she has done, runs away. Noah, of course, is delighted, puts his hand in his pocket and discovers he has Jean's hand-bag. He calls to her, but she keeps on running. Noah decides to catch her, and in his haste runs into a crowd of people coming from a factory. A girl is knocked down and her friends, thinking she has been robbed of her hand-bag, follows Noah. Jean gets on a car and meets Will Pickup again. Not having any money, as it is in her hand bag that Noah has, Will Pickup offers to pay her fare, but a man-hater in the car sees his actions and he is rather roughly handled. The woman insists on paying Jean's fare. Noah loses the car and takes a short cut to Jean's home with the crowd still following. Jean, realizing that she has passed the right street, gets hurriedly off the car. She falls and sprains her ankle. Finally she reaches home and falls fainting on the steps of her house. Noah comes up and tries to assist her. The crowd, thinking he is assaulting her, pounces upon him, and beats him up when Officer Chase arrives. He is about to arrest Noah when Jean comes from the crowd and tells the officer that Noah is her sweetheart and the hand-bag is hers.

A LEAP YEAR LOTTERY PRIZE (April 29).—Ralph Dinsmore, the young bachelor minister, was very popular with his congregation. Being called from the West and unaccustomed to the wiles of the young ladies, he was rather backward and bashful. If he could have gotten up the nerve, he would have told his love to Grace Walker and she would have been pleased. The minister has a housekeeper named Sarah Squibbs, older than himself and far from prepossessing, but she loved her master. Bob Smith, Dinsmore's best chum, seeing the situation, conceived an idea to help out the game and make Ralph and Grace the winners. He proposes a lottery, the minister to be the prize. He then juggles the tickets so that Grace shall hold No. 12, the winning number. Sarah is on the alert and changes the winning number to 23, and then secures No. 23 for herself. When the drawing comes off there is much excitement and screams when No. 23 is found to be the winner. The poor minister is crazy and Bob Smith and he settles down to think up a plan to beat the inevitable. They hit upon an idea. The ice man is a big, husky fellow, and they induce him to dress up in female garb and present himself at the rectory and claim her long-lost husband, the good minister. Dinsmore is kept out of sight and the ice man, or supposed wife is to seek the heart's blood of the hussy who is trying to steal her husband. The game is worked well. Sarah jumps out of the kitchen window and escapes, the minister is called from his hiding place and grasping the ice man by the hand, all have a good laugh. Grace arrives and finds the road clear to happiness.

WON BY WAITING (May 1).—Amos Randall, a wealthy old bachelor, dies, leaving a big fortune to be divided between Arthur Wells, his ward, and Flo Fleming, his niece, with the understanding that they shall marry within three months after his demise. Wells, who has been living in luxury on his guardian's bounty, accepts the situation, much against his will. Flo is an uncouth country girl, brought up to be good and honest, but without any training in the arts of refinement and etiquette. They get married, and the young wife's bad manners pall on the aristocratic husband's fastidious nature. He neglects her at every opportunity, and finally leaves her entirely to the care of Jack Murry, a clubmate, who frequently visits the house. Despite her shortcomings, Flo is a beautiful creature and Jack, feeling that he has no responsibility, falls in love with her. He is her constant companion and escort to balls and other functions, and the husband is relieved of the attention. Flo loves her husband and realizing the fullness of the situation, resolves to play a counter game. One night Wells asks her to go with him to the opera. She haughtily informs him that she has promised to go with Jack Murry. As Jack and Flo are about to leave, Arthur calls Jack back. He tells him that he loves his wife. He loads two pistols, one with a ball cartridge and the other with a blank, and bids his club friend take one of the pistols, as one of them must die. Murry refuses as he admits that he loves his life more than any woman. Wells forces one of the weapons in Jack's hand when the wife rushes in and embracing her husband, tells him that Jack was only a means by which to accomplish the end.

A SON'S DEVOTION (May 2).—His mother desperately ill, Juan, a poor Mexican peon, gets the doctor to visit her. The doctor, however, can give the lad no encouragement. He tells Juan that she will probably die, and that she surely will unless he can secure for her the necessary medicines and nourishing food. Departing, he leaves Juan in despair, for the poor lad is penniless. However, he cheers the sick woman and departs in an effort to secure the necessary medicine and food. His efforts prove fruitless. Nobody will trust the Mexican and he is forced to return to his humble home and the dying woman with empty hands. Filled with despair at his failure and the knowledge that a few dollars would prolong and perhaps save the life of his mother, whom he loves dearly, Juan determines to get the things at any cost. He leaves the house the second time, filled with this determination, and, driven by his desperation and want, steals a horse and sells it. With the money thus procured, Juan purchases the medicine and food and starts home. The owner of the stolen horse has, in the meantime, discovered his loss and reported the theft to the sheriff. They promptly start out, find the horse in the possession of the man who had purchased it from Juan and thus learn the identity of the thief. They overtake Juan and start to place him under arrest. Juan tells them his story and finally his earnest pleading moves them to permit him to return with the articles he has purchased for his sick mother. The sheriff finally consents and they all return to Juan's house. They come too late, however, the mother has passed beyond the need of any possible earthly help. Touched by the lad's sorrow, the men depart, leaving him alone with his dead.

THE TURTLE INDUSTRY IN FLORIDA (May 4).—A very interesting picture of a turtle farm. The monsters are handled fearlessly by the keepers, who give them their turn in the tanks. A boy rides on the back of one of the turtles, as a keeper prods the beast to improve his speed. The dressing for the market is done rapidly and on a wholesale scale.

THE TIN CAN RATTLE (May 4).—Jim Bledsoe, the editor of the Tin Can Rattle, is up against it. He cannot collect his bills, but is forced to pay his own debts at the point of a gun. Jim is very despondent until a very unusual caller, Miss Sadie Williams, a stranded actress, appears. Sadie, too, is up against it, as we learn from the ad she desires Jim to put in his paper, viz: "Young actress from New York financially embarrased in the city of Tin Can, seeks light employment of any kind; willing and obliging." Jim suddenly conceives an idea and engages Sadie on the spot, making her his cashier. Jim's creditors quickly "fall" for the newcomer and promptly receipt his bills without consideration. Sadie inspires Jim with this idea: A contest to decide the most popular man in Tin Can City, ten votes being given with each paid in advance subscription to the "Rattle." To win the admiration of Sadie the cowpunchers spend all their earnings as well as pawning their valuables to buy votes for themselves. The final day of the contest arrives. It is discovered that the five main contestants are tie, but the editor of the "Rattle" wins. The men arrive at the station just in time to see the train pull out with Jim and Sadie safely aboard, waving their hands bood-bye to the boys and good luck to the "Tin Can Rattle."

MELIES.

FINDING THE "LAST CHANCE" MINE (May 9).—Jean Dyer, an old one-legged hermit who lives in a mean abode on Lonely Mountain, has the villagers all guessing as to where he gets his gold, for whenever he comes to town he spends freely.

The villagers appoint Jimmie, a genial cowboy, to visit the old man, get him "full," and pump him as to the location of the mine. Jimmie wins the old man's confidence and liking, but in a terrific storm that comes up, a tree crashes through the roof and mortally wounds Dyer. His last words are an endeavor to locate the mine so that Jim might have the benefit. He dies before he finishes.

The news of the death stirs all the villagers to an organized hunt for the gold mine, but their efforts are in vain. Jim buries the old man respectably, and when a few days later he visits the grave, finds there Dyer's old burro which had been his only chum. An idea comes to Jim. He puts on the old hermit's wooden leg, mounts the burro in the old man's way, kicks him with the wooden leg, as was Dyer's wont, and is led to the very entrance of the mine.

The villagers would share it with him, but "Findings is keepings" is the unwritten law of the West.

EDISON

WINTER LOGGING IN MAINE (April 30).—The film shows the activity of the logging camps during the long winter months, when the heavy snow fall makes the hauling of heavy loads of logs possible over the smooth, icy roads through the woods. After the trees are cut and stripped they are first gathered together in huge piles, called yards, which line the road to the landing. As soon as the snow falls the snow-plow clears this road and is followed by the sprinkler. The water thrown from the sprinkler at once freezes, making a hard, icy road which will sustain the heavy sled loads of logs and enable one team of horses to haul from five to six thousand feet of timber. These logs are all gathered at the landing, usually on the bank of some river or on the frozen surface of the river itself, to await the coming of the spring thaw, when they are run down stream to the various mills. An exceptional group of scenes show the evolution of logging—first oxen, then horses, next steam (hauling five loads), and then gasoline.

BLINKS AND JINKS, ATTORNEYS AT LAW (May 1).—While trying to pass each other on a narrow country road, a banker's automobile and a farmer's wagon collide. In the mix-up the farmer's rear wheel is wrenched off. The automobilist offers to settle the damages for twenty dollars, but the farmer promptly refuses, demanding sixty dollars. The stubbornness of both men leaves the matter unsettled. A few days later the farmer goes to the village to seek legal aid in recovering damages. Blinks, a shyster lawyer, advises him to bring suit for sixty dollars—which he does. The automobilist is duly summoned to appear in court and he, too, engages a lawyer by the name of Jinks, also a shyster. Lawyers Blinks and Jinks, by the way, have adjoining offices and are in collusion.

On the day set for the trial no little amusement is caused in the court-room by the attitude of Blinks and Jinks, who in behalf of their respective clients attack one another in a most ferocious manner. The case is finally decided in favor of the plaintiff and the automobilist is ordered to pay the farmer sixty dollars. The farmer and his friends are quite happy over this legal victory and leave the court-room in high spirits, while the lawyers go home to have a good laugh. The next day the automobilist appears in Lawyer Blinks' office where he reluctantly pays the farmer sixty dollars and departs. For a moment there is joy, but only for a moment, for when the lawyer presents his bill of sixty dollars for professional services rendered, the poor farmer nearly collapses and departs in great anger.

Blinks now calls in Jinks from the adjoining office to divide the sixty dollars.

OUT OF THE DEEP (May 3).—The beginning of the film deals with the love romance of a deep-sea diver and the daughter of an old curio collector, whose past life takes up a good part of the film and reveals to the spectator his younger days as he tells them the story of his romance and marriage. The dramatic situations, showing how his young bride was stolen from him by buccaneers, his heroic rescue of her, the casting overboard of the treasure chest and the burning of the vessel, prepare the spectator for the climax of this dramatic film when the deep-sea diver goes in search of the sunken treasure.

Here is introduced a wonderful scene of the bottom of the ocean with the diver at his work. The frantic struggle for air when the pumps are stopped, the finding of the treasure and the saving of his sweetheart's father are all intensely interesting.

THE GUILTY PARTY (May 4).—Big Bill, a lumberman in the Maine woods, gets into a violent argument with the foreman over money matters and in the quarrel which develops, knocks him down. The foreman, in falling, has dropped his wallet, but enters his cabin without noting his loss. Not so, however, with Nettie's bull pup Rowdy, who, spying the wallet, picks it up and hides it under a pile of logs.

The foreman misses his wallet and not being able to find it comes to the conclusion that Bill has stolen it. He tells his suspicion to one of his men and sends him for the sheriff. Nettie, returning from her errand, hears of Bill's threatened arrest and, thinking that Bill may have taken the money in a fit of temper, sends him a note to meet her at their trysting place, promising that she will save him. Then she hurries into town to draw her own savings from the bank.

Bill is duly arrested by the sheriff on the foreman's charge, and when searched Nettie's note and a roll of bills which he has, point strongly to his guilt.

Returning from the bank Nettie is caught in a blizzard. She manages to reach the trysting place, but is exhausted and writes a note which she attaches to Rowdy's collar and sends him to the camp for help. Rowdy delivers the note to Ed, Bill's pal, and he at once informs Bill, who is in custody. Ed volunteers to go to Nettie's rescue, but cannot understand, from Bill's description, where she is penned. As a last resort, in order that Bill may lead a rescuing party, Ed falsely confesses to the sheriff that he stole the wallet. Thereupon the sheriff releases Bill and puts Ed under arrest in his stead.

After many difficulties Nettie's rescue is accomplished and the party returns to camp, where they meet the sheriff taking Ed to the county seat. Bill starts to explain the situation, when Rowdy joins the party, carrying the lost wallet.

The foreman at once recognizes his property and is forced to make his apologies to Bill and acknowledge that not he, but Rowdy, is the guilty party.

ECLIPSE.

PERCY'S VISIT (May 1).—Percy boldly invites himself to stay a few days at Charlie's house. The latter is not over-pleased with Percy's nerve, and tells the servants that he will double their wages if they succeed in getting rid of him.

The servants immediately set out to earn the additional stipend; they play all sorts of practical jokes upon the unfortunate guest, who, after many unpleasant experiences, decides to "beat it."

CHUMS (May 1).—Sammy and his faithful dog, Rover, are close companions. Rover is an exceptionally clever dog, and really takes good care of Sammy. At one time he rescues his master from prison, and then frightens the pursuers so thoroughly that they are glad to give up the chase, and allow the two rogues to return home in safety.

CINES.

'TWIXT LOVE AND WAR (April 30).—A soldier's superior rank in the army does not always assure him success over a rival in love. Such is the conclusion of Colonel Sani, when he discovers that his lieutenant has become engaged to the charming Marie.

One day the regiment is face to face with the enemy, and the colonel, seeing a possible opportunity to get rid of his rival, orders the lieutenant to the front, right under the enemy's fire. The young fellow leads a gallant charge, and wins a glorious victory, but is severely wounded and taken almost lifeless to the field hospital.

There the faithful Marie, now a Red Cross nurse, tenderly cares for him. During the convalescence the colonel happens to visit the hospital, and Marie, overcome with anger, reproaches him for his jealousy.

The soldier cannot face the accusation, and decides that the best course for him is to return to the front, and leave the field of love entirely to the young lieutenant.

GENOA, ITALY (April 30).—Picturing a beautiful panoramic view of the city, and such interesting places as "The Castle," "Corvetto Square," "The Lighthouse," and "Reggio Park,"

THE LOVE GERM (May 4).—Robert Scott, a prosperous widower, and his son pay a visit to Mrs. Turner, a charming widow, and her daughter. With the young people it is a case of love at first sight, a fact which pleases the fond parents immensely. And the old gentleman finds the widow's company so agreeable that he also gets busy.

Naturally, the valet, seeing his masters in many tender situations, becomes infected with the idea, and finds that the chambermaid in the house is the very ideal of his dreams.

Everything is progressing splendidly, when suddenly a hasty word starts the young people to quarreling, and the other couples follow suit. The result is that the three gentlemen leave in their motor car, bag and baggage.

On their way home they see the folly of their ways, and devise a scheme to bring about a reconciliation. They pretend to have met with an accident, and send word to the ladies that they are in need of assistance.

The ladies waste no time in reaching the injured, and it does not take long for the love germ to get in its fatal work once more

KALEM.

THE STOLEN INVENTION (April 29).—Rawley, a promoter, endeavors to obtain the plans of an invention which Conrey has made but without success. He then resorts to underhand methods and succeeds in establishing his confederate, Mark Hunter, in the Conrey household.

Mark finds his early efforts frustrated, when he attempts to gain possession of the coveted plans, and he determines to pay ardent court to Gladys, Conrey's charming daughter, hoping to have more liberty in the house. Floyd, Gladys' lover, sees the couple together and when the young woman notices that she is being watched, she decides to make Floyd jealous and pretends to listen to Hunter's words of love. Floyd, concluding Gladys no longer cares for him, prepares to leave the neighborhood.

Through the carelessness of the inventor, the Conrey work shop is set on fire. There is a general rush to extinguish the blaze and Hunter, seeing his opportunity, enters the house and makes away with the plans. Just at that time Floyd passes, and surmising what has taken place, follows in pursuit.

Returning from the fire, Conrey, receives a liberal offer for his invention, only to find that his valuable plans have disappeared. He and his family are at a loss what to do when Floyd and an officer return with the two criminals and deliver the valuable papers. Gladys, who is now quite repentant of her folly, makes things clear to Floyd and all ends happily.

A FISH STORY (May 1).—John, in order to get off for a day's fishing, tells his boss he is sick. Being excused from work he hurries home, secures his rod and basket, says good-bye to his wife and rushes off for a day's sport. After a long and tiresome wait John lands a fish. While he is baiting his hook a sea-gull swoops down and secures John's catch. This so rattles our hero that in the excitement of the moment while throwing the line, the hook catches in the dress of a very pretty girl who is fishing nearby. Through the misunderstanding that arises, John gets into difficulties that result in his being driven from the wharf and into the sea. The story he tells his wife is the usual fish story but it must be seen on the screen to be appreciated.

ALONG THE MEDITERRANEAN (May 1).—The spectator is taken for a visit to Algiers. A splendid view is shown of the Place du Government, the principal square of the city. We next visit the picturesque mosque for women. Passing on down the street we view the meeting of Young America and Young Algiers.

Our next stop is at the historic harbor of Genoa, Italy. Going ashore, we visit the most beautiful cemetery in the world, the Campo Canto. As we walk through one of the galleries of this celebrated burial ground, we are impressed by the wonderful carvings in stone that meet us on every hand.

Our next visit is to a little side street where we find the original home of Christopher Columbus, the discoverer of America, and read an inscription on the stone beneath his room window.

The next stop along the Mediterranean is the beautiful Bay of Naples. Skirting the harbor is the magnificent Santa Lucia Boulevard and in the background to the right we have a splendid view of the famous volcano, Mount Vesuvius.

GETTING THE MONEY (May 3).—Tom needs $2,000 for a speculative enterprise and on receipt of an appeal for the money, his benevolent Aunt Sally supplies the needed currency. Tom's excuse is that he wishes the money to take piano lessons. Six months later Aunt Sally writes Tom she is coming to the city to visit him and see how he is making out with the music lessons. This places Tom right up against it. As a subterfuge Tom engages a street musician with his hurdy-gurdy and places him in an adjoining room with instructions to play for dear life every time Tom sneezes. Everything goes well until Aunt Sally accidentally sneezes. At this moment Tom unfortunately was not pretending to play. This exposes the rascal and Aunt Sally is about to depart in anger when Tom's partner in the speculation arrives on the scene and informs him that he has made a big winning.

S.S. TITANIC THAT WENT DOWN IN MID-OCEAN

Captain Smith is seen on board the sister ship Olympic, ten minutes before sailing time, giving his boat a final inspection.

The Olympic, being a sister ship of the Titanic, was built by the same company and is exactly alike in construction. The very same life boats and rafts as well as other life saving devices are clearly shown, as well as the most interesting points of the boat, and the thousands of cheering passengers as the boat starts on her maiden voyage across the Atlantic.

THE POTTERS OF THE NILE (May 3).—This is a very interesting series of pictures and we observe the method of pottery making from the first process to the last as it probably has existed here since times immemorial. We believe this will prove to be one of the most interesting educational films ever placed on exhibition.

VITAGRAPH.

FRANK COFFYN'S HYDRO - AEROPLANE FLIGTHS (April 29).—The wonderful achievements of Frank Coffyn in his hydroplane introduces to our notice a most exhilarating entertainment. He takes us in his wonderful invention far above terra firma and imparts to us a most peculiar sensation as we look down upon different points of interest, over the numerous sky-scrapers of New York City. From Governors' Island he sails us over the Statute of Liberty, the Produce Exchange, the Singer, Liberty, Park Row and numerous other babel-like business towers, all of which appear like so many distorted and toppling toys, as we view them from the different angles of his hydroplane. Flying across the East River, he suddenly darts down into the water; his hydroplane is suddenly converted into a hydro-aeroplane, and we sail over the surface of the stream as safely as we would in a boat. Like a swan the plane glides out of the water and takes us under the Brooklyn and Manhattan Bridges, across and over to Brooklyn.

THE OLD KENT ROAD (April 30).—Bill Simmonds is a poor coster with a large family. His wife is a good woman, but with rather a short temper. The daughter Sue, the eldest, is their great comfort and the peacemaker of the family when things go wrong. The first pictures show the Simmonds family life, and Harry Gettings, a young coster who is paying court to Sue, with her parents' consent.

One day, to the old Kent Road comes Mr. Mallett, a lawyer, who tells Bill that his uncle at Camberwell, has quarreled with his only son, and dying, has left his house, a yearly income and his donkey and "shay" to Bill. Joy reigns in the Simmonds household. With money that Mallett advances they buy fine clothes, and Bill, in a new corduroy suit, drives the family in his newly acquired "shay," much to the admiration and envy of the Road. But Bill does not now think that Harry is good enough for his daughter, and breaks off the match, to poor Sue's great unhappiness. They remove to the cottage at Camberwell and put on great airs, but alas, pride goes before a fall.

In an old desk, Sue comes across a package addresed to Mr. Mallett, the lawyer. It proves to be a later will of old Mr. Simmonds, leaving all to his son, and so poor Bill, after his taste of greatness, goes dejectedly back to the Old Kent Road. But to Sue, misfortune brings happiness, for the faithful Harry is again received as her suitor and Bill and his wife try to make the best of things in contemplating their child's happiness.

SHERIFF JIM'S LAST SHOT (May 1).—Sheriff Jim goes in pursuit of "Black Burke," the notorious outlaw. He trails him to the desert. All day the man lay in ambush with a pool of water between them, tortured by thirst, until at last, "Black Burke," in desperation, crawls toward the pool. The sheriff shoots and wounds Burke severely. Then he, too, crawls out to quench his thirst. Passing clouds darken the moonlit sands. When they have passed by, the two men get a momentary glance at each other, until they come face to face at the spring, both with guns drawn and ready. As the moonlight penetrates the darkness they shoot, and as the clouds lift, both lay upon the ground, mortally wounded. "Black Burke" staggers to his feet and wanders deliriously off, to the very door-step of the sheriff's house. In the name of humanity, Jim's wife, who does not know the outlaw, gives him shelter and while she is attending him, he dies. Before he loses consciousness, he scrawls upon a piece of paper that Sheriff Jim's last shot got him.

He has scarcely passed away when a posse enter, carrying the body of the sheriff. Jim's wife cannot explain the circumstances, but the note written by "Black Burke," found upon the floor, clears the mystery and Sheriff Jim's widow receives the reward for "Black Burke's" capture.

RED INK TRAGEDY (May 3).—John Sport returns to his boarding house in high spirits. He enters the parlor and looks upon a bottle of red ink, mistaking it for wine. He starts to drink it and spills it all over his face and shirt front. He falls upon the couch and is soon in slumberland. The maid enters. Horrified, she decides a murder has been committed and calls up the police.

A young detective is assigned to the case. In the meantime, a boarder who is shaving, cuts himself, hears the confusion and rushes into the room with his razor in his hand. When the detective sees him he puts him under arrest and then calls for help and an ambulance. Assistance is soon at hand and when the surgeon discovers that John Sport is not dead—but "dead drunk" and the "blood" is only red ink, all hands join in a good hearty laugh at the expense of the young detective.

OLD LOVE LETTERS (May 3).—Sitting one evening at the table in the gleaming of life's passing hours, an old couple are looking over the correspondence of their younger days. The old love letters recall the happy days when their hearts were young and their fancies free. Each letter, as they read it, brings before them a vision of the past.

First can be seen the intervention of her stern parents, making her reject the man to whom she is now married, and wed for money instead of love. The martyrdom of their love, in their marriage to some one else, is most vividly presented in the scenes which are brought before us. The death of her first husband, and his first wife, her meeting again with the man of her first and last choice, now sitting beside her in sweet contentment in happy anticipation of the future.

THE HIEROGLYPHIC (May 4).—Peter Barton leaves his wealth to his niece, Mary, disinheriting his dissipated son, Edgar, who steals the will. Jack Smart, a rascal, an associate of Edgar's, keeps close watch upon him. At the point of a revolver he compels Edgar to surrender the will to him. Mary, the niece, is obliged to go to work, takes a position as a reporter, and meets Tom Swayne, who falls in love with her. Tom sees Jack Smart in a restaurant, and after the villain leaves, Tom picks up a menu card, upon which Smart has written some hieroglyphics.

Mary shows him an envelope which she picked up in her uncle's room, where Smart took the will from Edgar, after he had stolen it. Tom compares it and the hieroglyphics on it with those on the menu card. They are the same. Smart agrees to return the will to Barton for $10,000. Mary and Tom enter the restaurant where Tom found the menu card, and see Smart enter and leave. They ask the waiter who wrote the hieroglyphics on the card. He tells them the man who has just left. Tom and Mary trail him. Smart returns to the restaurant and meets Edgar Barton. They enter a private dining room. Barton passes over the money to Smart. Edgar is applying a match to the will when a policeman, with Tom and Mary, enters. The policeman rescues the will and gives it to Mary.

BIOGRAPH.

THE LESSER EVIL (April 29).—As per appointment, the girl goes to meet her sweetheart outside an old shack. This spot is selected as being the most sequestered. Unknown to anyone, this shack is used by a gang of smugglers for the reception of contraband goods for shipment. This gang is just preparing to take away a cargo when the girl arrives. Not finding her sweetheart there, and hearing voices, she imagines he is inside the shack, and enters. The gang becomes panic-stricken at the entrance of an outsider. It is not long before they realize the importance of the situation, and as she has discovered their secret, they dare not leave her behind. Carrying her aboard their ship they sail away, just as the girl's sweetheart, who was late on account of the stopping of his watch, arrives at the place of meeting, and helplessly witnesses their departure. The young man rushing off, gets the Harbor Officers to attempt a rescue. In the meantime, the girl is in great peril on the ship, as the captain, who has locked her in his cabin, defends her from the onslaught of his drunken, mutinous crew. Finally, his ammunition being reduced to one cartridge, she begs that it be turned upon her, choosing death rather than falling into their hands. Good fortune, however, ordains that the rescue party shall deliver her from her peril.

THE LEADING MAN (May 2).—Out of work, he arrives at the boarding-house and poses as a great actor. He is a great "hit" until the time comes to pay up, and then, having no money, he is a "frost." However, through a clever scheme, he manages to bluff it out, until his regular position is open to him. And such a job! The folks of the boarding-house receive an awful shock when, later, they see him in his true colors.

THE FICKLE SPANIARD (May 2).—To Marcel, the little Spanish Senorita, he swears eternal love, only to fall, later, a victim to the charms of Margot. Marcel sees their meeting while she is shaving her father, an accomplishment she had to acquire because of her father's arm being disabled. Well, in a moment her fiery temper bursts forth and she dashes after the perfidious Spaniard, who runs to cover in his house. However, she swears to be avenged, and her time comes, but how, we would rather let you see than tell.

REDMEN'S HONOR (May 1).—Into an Indian camp comes one day a stranger of another tribe who wins the affection of Blue Fawn, the wife of Lone Wolf. In the fierce fashion of the day, Blue Fawn, thinking only of herself, deserts her friends and tribe and goes away with the stranger. They are followed, however, by Lone Wolf, captured, tied together, thrown into a canoe, which leaks, and set adrift down stream. Blue Fawn's little children, however, follow the canoe along the shore and when the opportunity offers, rescue their mother from her perilous position. They come just in time, for the stranger is already dead.

COWBOY GIRLS (May 2).—Two girls in a preparatory school decide to try life on a ranch, and disguising themselves as cowboys they find employment. That they are green everybody knows and life is made so miserable for them that they are glad to escape back to the seclusion of the schoolroom.

THE SALVATIONIST (May 4).—A Salvation Army girl wins the admiration of a wealthy clubman, who does the best he can to pursuade her to leave the army, which she refuses. The next day the clubman drives his own car in a big automobile race and before doing so he makes over his entire fortune to the little Salvation Army girl in case he meets with an accident. He does meet with an accident, but it is not fatal. The careful nursing of the Salvation Army girl, who comes to his house after reading of the accident, brings him back to health and strength and ultimately they are married.

A LA FRANCAISE (April 30).—An Englishman is in love with an English girl who has a friend married to a Frenchman. She receives a letter from the latter telling her of the great affection her husband has for his wife and stating that no one knows how to love like the French. The English girl sends her sweetheart to France to learn the art of making love. He sees many peculiar things in France which he puts into practice on his return to England, but, strange to say, he wins out.

A SISTER'S DEVOTION (May 3).—A chemist has a most beautiful wife and also the misfortune to have his wife infatuated with another man. These two run away and the day they leave the chemist loses his sight in an explosion in the laboratory. When brought to his own home his wife's flight had already been discovered by her sister, and rather than let the unfortunate man add this knowledge to his suffering, she plays the part of her sister in comforting and nursing him. Two weeks later a delicate operation is performed, with the hope that the chemist's sight may be restored. Everyone is happy but the sister, who knows that in a few moments, if the operation is successful, the chemist will discover his wife's absence. At the moment, however, of taking the bandage from his eyes the wife, who has had an unfortunate time of it with her companion, enters and saves the day for everybody.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

AGREES WITH HARRISON.

Editor THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Dear Sir:—I have read "Something New," by Louis Reeves Harrison in your April 6th issue and venture to concur in his opinions as expressed in the first paragraph particularly. There is too much of the sort of things he describes.

I have been struck with the numerous photoplays wherein the rich man offers to save the unfortunate speculator, if he may marry the speculator's daughter. Such a play is un-American. Our men don't sell their daughters and our daughters don't sell themselves when they are in love with the "poor man," as is always presented in the photoplay.

Mr. Harrison's references to the cowboys brings us to the Indians; the sentimental Indian. An Indian has no sentiment, he is rarely ever grateful, it is not in his nature, and I suggest that scenario writers inform themselves about Indians by a course of reading of Tanner's Narrative, Henry's Journal, Lewis & Clark's Diary, Thompson's, Frazer's, Ogden's, and hundreds of others who lived among the Indians in the early days.

It seems to me the motion picture companies must have one or two men only to write scenarios. Of course it would be, or is, cheaper to hire one man at $1,200-$2,000 a year, than pay many writers $30 or $40 for each manuscript, but this system will kill the game. Fifty per cent. of the moving pictures are next to worthless, but a "fan" must endure these in order to enjoy the remainder.

In motion pictures there is offered the opportunity for naturalness such as was never possible in the strictly theatrical, and mere stagecraft with its limitations can be entirely avoided. Better allow the scenario writer "stage" his story than a stage manager, and thus the aim be, as far as possible, and I think it not impossible, to disregard the purely theatrical and bring the stage "back to nature" in the motion picture, by avoiding the clap-trap.

Mr. Harrison refers to the value of "travel" pictures, and in this connection would it not be more interesting and educational to label the industrial "news" giving the "locale." I have traveled a great deal and think I know something of my country and Europe, and I find my interest keenest when viewing familiar scenes, and would be interested equally did I know the places where the picture was made, and might go to that place or country did I know the locality. America is a nation of travelers. What a pity William E. Curtis could not have had a motion picture machine in his travels.

The moving picture is attracting the best minds more each year, thanks to Burton Holmes and others who are using them, and who first offered them to the "high-brows" and if the thing is to develop, all classes must be interested and not merely the "poor devil" who is supposed to enjoy only such dramas as are shown in the "ten, twent and thirt" houses. Like Mr. Harrison, I will "welcome the grand plays when they come."

INCITES TO MURDER?

New Haven, Conn., March 23, 1912.

Editor of the Moving Picture World:

Allow me to call your attention to the following somewhat typical paragraph that appeared in a local newspaper a short time ago about the guilty man in a sensational murder case:

"Among the habits of R—— which illustrate his abnormal character is his extreme fondness for moving pictures, which he attended almost daily. He himself had tried to write some scenarios, and he even subscribed to a motion picture magazine."

Well, Moving Picture World, what have you to say to the charge of being the kind of paper that incites men to murder? Do you realize the heinousness, nay, the abject wickedness of your calling? Aren't you afraid of being cited by some subscriber who is trying to prove his insanity? You ought to know that the perusal of a moving picture magazine is a sign that the last glimmerings of virtue and reason have departed. Avaunt, foul sheet!

But to alleviate your opinion of this town, let me cite as a token of progress that a moving picture show has been opened here in the building, and with the full co-operation of the local Y. M. C. A. That ought to help some. Yours with best wishes,

P. S.—Enclosed find a carload of questions, of which I wish you would answer as many as you find convenient.

BLAZING THE TRAIL (April 15).—The Cooper family is shown loading a prairie schooner with household goods and starting on the long journey. After traveling many days an emigrant train is sighted in the distance, and the Coopers join it. Arriving in the far West the Coopers decide to locate and part from the main train. Blake, a hardy young emigrant, has become very friendly with Jack Cooper, and has fallen in love with Helen, Jack's sister. He asks the elder Cooper's permission to remain with them, which is granted.

Preparations are made for the night's encampment. Blake takes a big canteen and goes to the far-off spring for water. In his absence a band of Indians approach the wagon. Alert, suspecting the savages, Jack Cooper and his father await them with ready rifles, but the Indians hold up their hands in token of peace. They are fed by the Coopers, and with assumed simplicity win the confidence of the emigrants. One of them asks Jack to let him see his revolver, and the moment it is in his hand he fires and wounds Jack. At the same instant another Indian strikes Cooper with a tomahawk and he falls lifeless. Mrs. Cooper meets a like fate. Screaming with terror, Helen is caught up by the savages, who steal everything from the wagon and burn the vehicle.

Blake returns and is horror stricken at the sight that meets his gaze. The still forms on the ground and the disappearance of Helen tell the tale. Overwhelmed with grief and rage, Blake swears to avenge the tragedy, and follows the trail of the Indians. In the Indian camp there is wild rejoicing as the fair captive is brought before the chief. The weeping girl is placed in a tepee and a guard set before it. Jack Cooper revives. Racked with pain as his senses return to him, he attempts to struggle to his feet. Slowly and laboriously he drags himself to the creek and quenches his fevered thirst. Blindly he gropes along until, exhausted, he falls fainting to the ground. The emigrant train passing on its way goes by Jack, and he is brought back to consciousness. Burning with anger, the emigrants decide to teach the Indians a lesson, and gallop toward the village.

Blake creeps to the top of a hill overlooking the Indian camp. An Indian sits there serenely unconscious of the white avenger behind him. Blake draws his revolver and takes careful aim. Just as his finger is about to press the trigger he realizes the folly of such an act, and picking up a rock he cautiously and slowly worms his way and brings the missile down on the Indian's head. He falls as though stricken by a lightning bolt, and Jack drags the body out of sight. Removing the Indian's apparel, Jack discards his clothing and dons the savage attire, including the head-dress and blanket, and then boldly walks into the Indian camp, concealing his face with a fold of the blanket.

He manages to reach the tepee where Helen is imprisoned, and slitting the back of the tent with his knife he effects an entrance. With a low warning he stills the frightened cry that leaps to Helen's lips, and she falls into his arms. Blake then resolves upon a daring scheme, and wrapping Helen in a blanket he attempts to leave the camp.

The plan fails. He is recognized and seized by a dozen savage hands. Tied to a post, he is turned over to the squaws for torture. Tiring of this sport, the Indians compel him to run the gauntlet. Wounded and exhausted, Blake falls, and as the chief is about to administer the death blow a startling interruption stays his hand. While the Indians have been engrossed in torturing Blake, the emigrants have massed behind the crest of the hill, and a volley of lead is poured into the ranks of the redskins. Reloading quickly, the emigrants advance and another deadly volley causes the surviving Indians to scamper for safety, hotly pursued by the exultant white men.

Blake and Helen are triumphantly carried back to the emigrant camp. The next day the bodies of the dead are buried, and Jack, Blake and Helen sorrow over the two mounds which mark the last resting-place of Mr. and Mrs. Cooper.

CHAMPION.

THE HORSE THIEVES OF BAR X RANCH (April 29).—Out on the Bar X, the boys were seated one day near the corral when long Harry came on the scene. They made fun of him, led on by burly Jim, the foreman of the ranch. But Harry wasn't the sort to stand too much nonsense, so he gave the foreman a clout over the ear that sent him to the grass. What might have happened then and there, there's no telling, had not the proprietor and his daughter Bess just then arrived and put a stop to further proceedings—Harry being engaged to punch cattle, that being his calling.

Now Burly Jim swore to get even, and with a few of the boys he set about his dirty work in a systematic manner. First he stole Harry's hat from his bunk house and placed it near the stable; next he stole a couple of horses from the same stable and tethered them in the woods. He then arranged to have himself tied hand and foot in the stable so that he could claim that Harry had done the deed, and he, Jim, would be evidence of the fact. Before this he had drawn the ranch-owner's attention to Harry's hat at the barn door; just after the discovery had been made of the horse theft. This made it look bad for Harry.

Now everything would have worked out fine had not Harry overheard part of the plot. He had then laid in wait at the barn and seen the fake arrangements made to entrap him. In the meantime he had caught and located the spot where the horses were tied which were supposed to be stolen. Now when the time came to make the charge Jim's pals worked out the game according to schedule and Jim was brought forth. But somehow Jim's bold statement went for naught. The trick was laid bare, the horses recovered and the whole plot to ruin Harry frustrated.

AN ITALIAN ROMANCE (May 1).—Marianina is a daughter of Sunny Italy, living with her old father, a shoemaker in the Italian colony. We see the old shoemaker pegging away at his shoes down in the cellar basement. A letter comes to Marianina from her lover in Italy, pleading to be sent for and protesting to her his undying devotion. She gets the money from her father and sends for her lover. In the meantime Giussepi, a foreman in a sweatshop, falls in love with the girl and desires to marry her; but while she appreciates his devotion, she is loyal to her sweetheart, Gambolio, in the far-away Soupthern clime.

Gambolio arrives in America, but when six months have scarcely gone by he proves himself a perfidious wretch to the girl who has been so loyal to him, flirting shamelessly with other signorinas. Mariana discovers this and vents her righteous wrath upon him. Then she casts him from her as she would a viper, and accepts the better man, the foreman Giussepi. A year later, Gambolio shows himself to be the scoundrel that he is. He tries to renew for himself the infatuation Marianina once felt for him. But she is a true wife and a noble woman and scornfully repulses the fellow's advances.

The scoundrel foiled, swears vengeance on her devoted head. He steals her photograph and later boasts a conquest of the woman in the teeth of her husband. The lie is given the wretch with a dash of wine in the face—an immediate duello is here prevented by friends of both parties, but is later arranged for. At Giuseppi's home his faithful wife is made to suffer the agony of wrongful accusation on the part of her husband, but overhearing the arrangements, she decides a plan to prove her love for Giuseppi.

Drugging his wine, she dresses in his clothes and betakes herself to the field of honor, and there she fights a fierce battle with her traducer. The latter is wounded dangerously, just as Giuseppi, who has recovered from the stupor, rushes on the field, and realizing everything in its true light, hugs Marianina to his breast.

THE REFORMATION OF MARY (May 1).—Mary Brammal, a female crook, is discharged from prison. Soon after, when she is at the end of her resources and starving in New York, she encounters Frances Van Brunt, the six-year-old daughter of cashier Van Brunt, of the First National Bank. Mary is being roughly moved on by a policeman, when Frances interferes and then gives poor Mary some money.

Later Mary meets some of her old pals, and as they are forming to plan to rob a bank, they induce Mary to take part and go back to her former life. She disguises herself as a boy and secures a position in a bank as a messenger. The bank is installing a new vault, equipped with a new time lock, and Mary listens while the workman is explaining to Van Brunt and Harding, the president of the bank. When their backs are turned, she moves the time lock so that it will open the vault at ten that night, as well as ten the next morning, and then conceals herself beneath a counter.

The vault opens and Mary removes the currency to a suitcase. She then closes the vault and leaves by a window. The next morning the vault is found to be empty when it is opened, and it is then discovered that the time lock has been set twice. The president suspects Van Brunt, and that evening goes with a detective to Van Brunt's home and arrests him. Frances is grief stricken at her father being taken away, and follows the men to the street, crying bitterly. Mary is passing at the time, recognizes Frances, and inquires the cause of the trouble. Frances explains. Mary stops the arrest, explaining that she has the money in the suitcase, and that she is the thief. The party hear the whole story and Van Brunt prevails upon Harding to forego prosecution. Mary then seeks refuge in a convent.

A QUESTION OF HAIR (May 3).—May, the cobbler's daughter, has beautiful blond hair and plenty of it. Her father's youthful apprentice is in love with her and her hair. They become engaged. Billy, who has a weakness for hair, is ensnared in the wiles of another charmer, who wears a great deal of store hair. He wonders why May does not fix her hair as prettily as Madge does. Madge is an artful young lady and soon has Billy tagging after her. Her hairdresser, however, gets after Madge for the hair goods she has not paid for. Madge refuses to pay because the hairdresser has turned her hair green. The case is brought into court, and by a remarkable coincident, Billy is summoned to serve on the jury. The judge orders Madge to prove her assertion that the hairdresser had turned her hair green. She pulls off all her false hair to show him, and Billy learns a few things about girls and hair that sends him back to May ready and willing to eat his humble pie.

THE TALE OF A KITE (April 30).—Ada and Dick are in love with each other. The girl's father objects to Dick, but the mother approves of him. Ada and Dick decide to elope. The girl writes a letter to her sweetheart, planning the elopement, telling him to be at a certain corner and have the same taxi they have used before, No. 999. Dick receives the letter and leaves it in his room, then goes out to keep his appointment. His small brother, Willie, has been trying to fly a kite, but without success, as the kite keeps dipping down all the time. Seeing Dick, he asks him to help him. He can't stop, but suggests to Willie that he tie some paper on the tail, so it won't dip. Dick goes on his way. Willie looks for paper and finally gets into Dick's room, takes the letter from Ada to Dick, and ties it onto the tail of the kite, which he then sails successfully.

Ada's father sits out in the back yard and reads his newspaper, but soon he falls asleep. We see the kite up in the air, finally the strings break and the kite sails over the village and falls on the head of Ada's father. He pulls the kite off his head, and in so doing gets hold of the letter. He calls Ada and her mother out, then locks Ada up in the woodshed, but the mother lets her out. This the father sees and takes after Ada. The girl meets Dick and they ride off in the taxi No. 999, just as the father arrives. He gives chase in another taxi. Dick's taxi breaks down. He quickly lowers the top to change the appearance of the car, then sees the No. 999. He breaks up the part where it says New York, turns it upside down so it now reads No. 666, then they hide in the bottom of the car. The father misses them. They go back to the mother, and are just about to be married when the father comes in; he admits that he has been outwitted and forgives them.

IN THE TIDE (May 4).—Fred Martin, pays attention to a rich young lady. His sole object is to marry her for her wealth. The past life which Fred has been leading begins to show on him and he becomes a victim of the cocaine habit. He still keeps his swell appearance and his proposal is accepted by the young lady. They are married and the time elapses—six years. Fred has been going from bad to worse. The wife begs her brother, a minister, to try and persuade Fred to quit his bad habits, but to no avail.

The minister meets a poor girl of the slums, and befriends her. His sister, who is in need of a nurse for her child, acts upon the minister's suggestion and engages the poor girl as nurse. The minister's interest in the girl ripens into love and the girl appears to return his love. The husband having noticed the new nurse girl, decides on making a conquest, which is resented by the girl. This does not stop him. He becomes bold and tries to force the girl to give him a kiss. The wife, returning at this moment, is told by the girl that she is going to leave. She is too angry to give any explanation, but leaves the room. The husband does his best to poison his wife's mind against the girl. He takes his wife's jewelry and places it into the girl's grip. The girl is about to leave. The wife discovering the loss of her jewelry, informs her husband, who throws suspicion upon the girl. Her grips are searched and the jewels found. The minister arriving on the scene, champions the girl, who thanks him. Seeing the minister a little doubtful, she refuses his offer to help her and leaves the house. She takes up her life in the poorer districts again.

The minister longs for the girl, but knows she will never be his with the disgrace over her head. He meets her, but she is still firm in her decision in refusing him. The husband is picked up by the minister in Chinatown. The husband's condition is serious.

He makes a confession to the minister alone. The minister then goes to the girl and tells her and finally all the obstacles that separated the lovers are bridged over. The husband dies, leaving the wife ignorant of the life he had led.

THE BURGLAR'S REFORMATION (April 24).—Harold Graves is in love with Myrtle Wisner, but Myrtle is wrapped up in her slum work and has an idea that Harold is too much of a "son of the idle rich," to please her strict ideas. She writes him a note, against her father's wishes, informing him that when he can show her that he has helped some one else than himself, she will consider his suit. The night he gets the letter a burglar enters his room and tries to hold him up. Realizing that his chance to do a little good work has arrived he prevails upon the burglar to give himself over to his way of thinking. He dresses him up as a gentleman and gives him plenty of money. Later he gives him work in his office, where he is compelled to handle large sums of money. The burglar at first is obsessed with the temptation to steal the money. He conquers and the man is pleased. He tempts him at home by leaving a large sum of money in his desk and leaving the burglar at home that night. Upon his return he finds the burglar still there and the money intact, although in the meantime the burglar had taken the money out, pocketed it and walked as far as the door.

The next day he takes him to see his sweetheart and explained to her and her father all about the burglar's seeming reformation. The father laughs at such a presentment, but the girl believes in its ultimate success. The father and his son quarrel over the question of money before the prospective son-in-law and burglar arrive. The son takes advantage of his father's absence from the room, greeting his daughter's friends, to try and rob his father's safe, but is unsuccessful, due to the fact that his father and the burglar repair to that particular room for a smoke. Finding no cigars at hand, the father steps out to get some and the burglar goes to the window hidden by the curtains, and watches the street without. The son thinking the coast clear returns and opening the safe is about to get away with his father's money when the burglar steps from behind the curtain and stops him. Hearing the father returning the burglar shoves the boy back of the curtains and tries to put the money back in the safe, but is caught by the father. The father calls his daughter and her sweetheart to witness that their experiment of trying to reform a burglar is a failure, for he points out to them that he has caught the burglar redhanded. He starts telephoning the police when his son steps from behind the curtain and makes a clean breast of it all. The father sternly disowns his son, but the burglar pleads with him to give the boy another chance. He finally agrees and leaves the room with his son. The burglar turns to the other two and seeing his presence is not needed, quietly leaves the room. Alone, Harold and Myrtle plight their troth.

BEDELIA AS A MOTHER-IN-LAW (April 27).—Bedelia writes a letter to her daughter telling her that she is coming on a visit. Upon her arrival she is greeted effusively by her daughter, but gets a very sad welcome from her son-in-law. She proceeds to make life unbearable for him and he in turn takes it out on his wife. He schemes to send mother back home by paying all his attention to her and entirely overlooking his wife. He showers her with flowers, candy and new hats, something he had not done for his wife in ages. Naturally his wife resents it. The culmination of the whole affair comes after Bedelia and her mother-in-law have spent the evening at a fashionable restaurant. Bedelia comes home much the worse for wear. The next morning the angry wife brings her mother her hat, coat and baggage and sends her on her way home.

LOTTERY TICKET NUMBER 13 (April 22).—The boys in Kenyon's office receive a number of lottery tickets, which are placed in a hat; then each man draws for his number. No. 13 falls to Ben Capewell. He puts the ticket in a drawer in his desk and thinks no more of it. Ben is in love with Florence Smith, a pretty nurse. He calls on her, proposes and is accepted. From then on, Ben works night and day in order to save up money enough to buy a little home for his bride-to-be. At the end of six months his health is gone and he is unable to work. Florence breaks the engagement, her love being of the shallow kind. She returns the ring and poor Ben's pleadings are in vain.

Following the instructions of his family doctor, Ben goes into the country to work on a farm and hires out to James Karker. Slowly he regains his health and eventually finds himself deeply in love with Ione, the farmer's daughter. They become engaged. Some time later Ben receives a letter apprising him that lottery ticket No. 13 had won one of the grand prizes and he returns to the city for a few days. Following Ben's departure, Ione is taken ill. A nurse is sent for. The nurse turns out to be Florence, Ben's old sweetheart. Florence finds Ben's picture, also the letter telling of his good fortune and the money he will receive. Perhaps Ben loves her yet. She will try to win him at all costs now that he has money. On the day of Ben's return to the Karker home, Florence gets Ione out of the way and is all alone when he comes. Ben lets Florence think he still loves her and as she holds out her finger to receive the ring, Ben squares up the account. Ione gets the ring and a loving husband with a nice bank account, on Lottery Ticket Number 13.

THE LITTLE NUGGET (April 24).—John, a miner, and Mary, his wife, are happily married. Their home is brightened by a pretty tot of five years, whom they call their "Little Nugget." Lewis, an old admirer of Mary, and Joe, another miner, call for John on their way to work. Lewis makes an excuse to return to the cabin, where he is severely repulsed by Mary. Later, however, when all work is suspended at the mines where the three men are employed, Lewis and Joe set out for a prospecting trip in the mountains and Lewis insists upon John taking his money and putting it in John's strong iron chest. Mary objects, but to no avail.

Two months pass. The beloved child is dangerously ill and the family on the verge of starvation. John wishes to take some of Lewis's money, but Mary pleads earnestly with him not to touch that man's gold, but get it elsewhere. John at last agrees, secretly planning to steal the money that night to provide for his wife and sick child. Going into the bedroom, he takes the cartridges from the revolver which Mary has in the drawer and, taking his rolled blankets, tells her he will return the next day and goes out to wait until night.

By night the child is better, thanks to the prompt action of the doctor, but John returns masked and attempts to open the door. Mary hears him as she sits by the child's bed and getting the revolver discovers it is unloaded, She promptly loads it and gains the room in which the iron chest is kept, just as John starts for the door with the money. Mary fires and faints, but John runs out unhurt. As he hesitates whether to go to his wife or hurry away before she discovers him, Lewis and Joe, who returned that afternoon after a lucky strike and were spending the evening with their friends, hear the shot and run to the cabin, capture John and tear the mask from his face. They are dumbfounded to discover their friend. John explains the situation to them in broken sentences, and then they hasten inside to revive Mary. As John is about to tell her the truth, Lewis hastily stops him, saying, "The thief escaped, but we got the money." Then, going into the next room, Lewis puts the bag of gold on the table with a note "For Baby Nugget," and hastens away to work his claim back in the mountains.

THREE OF A KIND (April 27).—The town of Glendale was stirred one day by the advent of Alice Reynolds. The next day she is searching about the station and, when questioned by the station-agent, tells him of the loss of a ten dollar bill, the corner of which was slightly torn. The station-agent acquaints the village boys of her loss and they all aid in the hunt, but to no avail. She leaves weeping and the boys' hearts are touched.

Bud Hoover, one of the boys, hits upon a scheme to try to get into the good graces of the young lady. He takes a ten dollar bill, tears the corner of it, calls upon Alice and gives her the money, claiming to have found it. She thanks him and gives him a flower as a reward.

Bud's success sets the boys a-thinking. He is no sooner gone than Silas Gray hits upon the same plan and gives Alice a ten dollar bill with a torn corner, telling her he had found the money. Still another boy, Cy Smith, thinks the same brilliant plan and he, too, gets a flower.

Bud proudly tells the station-agent of his luck. Silas comes next and Cy brings in the rear. They all have the same tale to tell. When notes are compared, they realize that they have been stung, and starts for the hotel as Alice leaves with suit case, steps into station bus, and tells driver she must catch the 2 p. m. train. The bus passes the boys on its way to the train, but they are not aware it contains the girl. At the hotel, the clerk informs them she has gone. They dash out and make a bee line for the depot. The girl sees them coming and with a laugh, steps on the now moving train.

AMERICAN LUMBER MILL, ALBUQUERQUE, N, M. (April 27).—In this film is shown operations at the largest lumber mill in the world, with a capacity of 300,000 feet of lumber per day; a panoramic view of the pond where the logs, which average 30 inches in diameter, are unloaded from the cars and stored until needed, from whence they are poled to the flume and floated to the log-jack which automatically picks them up, carrying them to the cutting frame where they are sawed into planks of various dimensions; thence to the sorting table which sorts the different sizes preparatory to being conveyed to the immense yards for piling, where 23,000,000 feet of white pine lumber, valued at $500,000, is stored in piles.

The creosoting of railroad ties is also shown, a process which increases the life and usefulness of the ties to fifty years, whereas, without this treatment, which is accomplished under a presssure of 175 pounds per square inch for six hours in massive steel tubes, the average life would be but five years. The capacity of this plant is 1,000,000 ties per year.

THE LURE OF THE PICTURE (April 29).—Antonio Morso is a struggling artist in Rome, devoted to his attractive young wife and baby. He cannot dispose of his picture, however, and as the story opens, there is no food in the house. His wife, receiving attentions from the famous artist, Pietro Novetti, becomes discontented, and as her husband leaves to make another effort to dispose of his work, receives the more prosperous painter, who makes passionate love to her, and tempts her to desert her husband. In a weak moment she succumbs and leaves her husband and baby.

Tony is successful in obtaining a pittance for his paintings and starts home happily with a few purchases. He finds his wife gone, and a note from her, in which she tells him she loves Pietro. The poor artist breaks down over his baby's crib, and then the vengeance in his nature asserts itself and he decides to bide his time.

He leaves for America, where for five years he struggles against misfortune. One day as he is painting in the Art Museum, he is brought face to face with a new picture entitled "Despair," which has been presented to the Museum by a wealthy society woman. In the model he recognizes his wife, and in the artist, the man who has broken his life. He learns that the artist will shortly come out to America and in a moment of frenzy he takes his palette knife and cuts the picture from the frame.

A great reception is arranged for the Italian painter, Pietro Novetti, and he is feted at Miss Caldwell's home. The unhappy Tony sends his little daughter with a note to Pietro, telling him to follow her, and he will find "Despair," the picture, whose theft has aroused the police forces of the world. Novetti follows the child, refusing the company of the other guests. They, however, rush in an automobile to police headquarters, where they secure the assistance of detectives and police.

Meantime, Pietro arrives with little Angelica, at Tony's home. In a dark corner is "Despair," carefully curtained from curious eyes. Tony faces Pietro after sending the little girl into the next room, where she seats herself at her small easel, and oblivious to what is to follow, paints her little picture. Tony throws aside the curtains and reveals the picture to Pietro. He, of course, recognizes Tony as the man he has wronged and tries to make his escape. The door is locked, however, and the moment of the unhappy artist's revenge is here. Tony seized Pietro by the throat, and overpowering him, is about to stab him, when little Angelica rushes into the room and prevents the act. Just then the door is broken open by the police who arrest Tony.

Pietro is seized with remorse, and to free the man whose heart he has broken, pronounces this picture "a miserable copy." The police then leave the two men alone, and the prosperous artist hands Tony a letter from his wife, Angelica, in which she writes, "You may well picture me as Despair. I have only loved one man, and I dare not return to him. This is the end." He offers his hand to the sobbing, broken-hearted Tony, but the latter refuses it, and is left alone with the one tie that binds him to life, little Angelica.

ALL FOR HER (May 2).—Old Tom and old Will are cronies, into whose lives a little child comes, attracted by the music of their violin and 'cello. Little Elaine sells newspapers for an old hag with whom she lives. She treats her cruelly. Wandering about in the cold, Elaine hears the strains of the old men's music, and following the sound enters their room, where she stands fascinated. The old men decide instantly to adopt her. They pay a visit to old Mother Lawton, who for a sum of money releases all claim on the little girl.

Years pass, the child has grown into a woman and is a great violinist. On the tenth anniversary of their meeting, after her triumphant appearance at a concert, she invites them to a dinner at a famous restaurant. The two old men are charmed with the idea and don their best clothes of fifty years ago, thinking to honor their child, but instead they imagine they humiliate her. They think they are only a burden, standing in the way of her progress, so they decide to pass from her life.

Fortune smiles on Elaine, but frowns upon old Tom and Will. Elaine marries happily and is the musical sensation of her time. Poverty overtakes the two old gentlemen and finally proves fatal to Will.

One day Tom is playing his 'cello on the street, trying to earn a few pennies, and unknowingly plays before the home of Elaine. She at once recognizes the touch of her old benefactor and rushes into the street. He is dazed at the meeting and gladly allows her to lead him into the warm firelight of her pretty home.

Just as he and old Will cared for her in the long ago, so she and her husband do for him now, and the picture closes with the old gentleman fondling their baby.

MELODRAMA OF YESTERDAY (May 4).—The story is that of a burlesque on old-time melodrama. The villain demands payment of a mortgage upon the house which shelters the persecuted heroine and her poor but honest parents. The machinations of the villain are defeated by the hero who providentially discovers a large sum of money which he digs up in a field, and arriving in the nick of time is instrumental in saving the old home and winning the girl.

BREACH OF PROMISE (May 4).—Lizzie Snodgrass, an unattractive lady of uncertain age, is betrothed to Michael Thomson, who has no affection for her, but who is terribly in need of the ready cash which she possesses. A short time after the engagement Michael is informed by a lawyer that he has inherited a large sum of money. At this information he is overcome with joy, as he can now break his engagement to Lizzie, having no need of her money.

He calls on his fiancée and declares the engagement off. She having read in a paper that Michael has inherited money, knows immediately that is his reason for casting her off. Before they part, she vows a breach of promise suit will be started against him.

A few days later, while walking on the street, Michael hearing a newsboy crying "Extra," purchases one and sees that he is being sued by Miss Snodgrass for $50,000. Looking up he sees Lizzie and a constable approaching him to serve the papers. Just here there is an exciting chase between the distracted man and Lizzie and the constable. Finally, he is caught and has no alternative but to accept the papers.

Shortly afterwards his lawyers notify him that they have discovered that he is not the right Michael Thomson and, therefore, the money is not his. Rather than face poverty again, he calls on Lizzie and pleads to renew the engagement. After much coaxing the lady consents and they go forth to find a minister.

While Michael enters a house to inquire if the reverend gentleman can perform the ceremony, Lizzie waiting for him, buys a paper, and is horrified to learn that her husband-soon-to-be is penniless. She then realizes why he returned to her. Upon emerging from the house the jubilant man is confronted by the angry woman, who denounces him bitterly and, jumping into the carriage, drives off, leaving Michael tearing his hair and railing at fate.

THANHOUSER.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN, Part I (April 30).—Little Alice, more fortunate than some of the others, was not always a child slave. She was the youngest of three children, and the pet. Wages were small, but her parents and her brother and sister found it possible to feed an extra mouth, although the margin between income and expenses was pitifully scanty. So little Alice, for a time, was a happy child, and not a tiny old woman, as were the other little girls in the manufacturing town.

The wife of the owner of the mill was a selfish, dissatisfied society woman. Driving out in her auto one day, she saw little Alice, and immediately was struck with the youth and beauty of the pretty child. A creature of impulse, she decided she wanted Alice for her own, and summoning the parents told them of the good fortune in store for them.

Much to the rich woman's surprise, they did not see it as she did. They did not want to give the child up, and said so. The mother, however, thought of the advantages that Alice would have if she accepted the offer. With true self-sacrificing mother love, she told Alice that she could go to the home where riches awaited her, but that decision rested entirely with her.

The child looked from the "pretty lady" to the homely, poorly dressed woman, and the man and the two tattered children awaited her decision with breathless interest. Her choice was made, and she threw herself into her mother's arms.

The "pretty lady" watched the happy, shabby group through her lorgnette. Then she entered her auto and was driven back to her beautiful home, where love and self-sacrifice did not abide.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN, Part II (April 30).—Little Alice was an odd figure in the grimy town she called home, because, unlike the other children, she did not work in the mill. Her father, mother, brother and sister worked there many weary hours a day, and made many sacrifices so that "Baby Alice" might remain a child, and did not become an old woman before she was in her teens. The wife of the rich mill owner had seen Alice, been struck by her appearance, and offered to adopt her, but although the parents were willing to give her up, for her own good, she delighted their hearts by declining to do so.

Later, trouble came to the family and to many others in the town. Wages in the mill were reduced, and the workers struck. It was a strike of desperation. The workers had no money, no helping hand was extended to them, and what the mill owner had predicted to them came to pass. They were starved out, and crept back to their old places at his terms, and were worse off than they had been before.

The strike made a great change in the future of little Alice. Her mother was frail, and the period of semi-starvation through which she had passed, weakened her more. She tried to go back to work, but was unable to do so. So little Alice insisted on being a wage-earner, and her parents could not forbid it.

In her new environment, little Alice speedily lost her freshness and beauty. So day by day the child faded away, becoming old and haggard before her time.

The mother of Alice was also growing weaker, and the child knew that only money and rest could restore her. So her thoughts turned to the "pretty lady" who wanted to adopt her, and she decided, for her mother's sake, to accept the offer. But the "pretty lady" scornfully turned her away, telling Alice that she was old and ugly now, and that no one would want her. Also she had a pet, a poodle dog, that held the chief place in her affections.

Little Alice returned to the factory, and lived out her brief life there. She was stricken while at work, and died there. The other children did not grieve, they envied her, but the "pretty lady" who met the mourners returning from the funeral, shuddered, and was serious and thoughtful for once in her life.

MISS ARABELLA SNAITH (May 3).—When Harold Hargreaves wrote the satirical society novel, "Like Lowing Kine," he achieved even more success than he had contemplated. For Harold, despite his name, was a shy, sensitive chap, and could not be a social lion, even had he desired to be.

Therefore it made him unhappy to receive invitations galore, flowers and mash notes. Also to find reporters and photographers lurking on his front door step at all hours of the day or night. Under the circumstances he decided to take refuge in flight, and sought seclusion in a seashore hotel, where he modestly registered as "John Jones, of Bayonne, N. J."

For a time he found that he was unknown, but then exposure came. A woman, once young, unmasked him, but consented to keep his secret at his earnest request. Under the circumstances he could not refuse to be polite to her, and she was his companion on many trips when he would have preferred to have been alone.

On one of these excursions they were unfortunate enough to be on an island and did not notice the rising tide until it was too late to return to the main land. The woman wept, but really did not mind. Her name was Arabelle Snaith and she would have preferred to change it to Mrs. Harold Hargreaves. Consequently when they had returned to safety she informed the unhappy man that she had been put in a false position and that only marriage could set her right in the eyes of the world. Hardly knowing what he was doing, he consented, but later regretted it. She had told him that only death could part them, so he decided to die, but only so far as she was concerned. There was a mock funeral, and the author, in disguise, acted as his own minister. Then, to his horror, he found that the fickle Arabella Snaith had transferred her affections to him in his new reincarnation.

He began to fear that Arabella would annex him after all, but being a resourceful man, as all good novelists must be, he decided to hire a substitute. His choice fell upon a friend who was hard up, and ready to do anything for money, as he had frequently boasted. The author gave him a chance to make good, the hardest test he could think of, but the friend "made good."

Arabella Snaith changed her name, but she is not Mrs. Hargreaves. She is the wife of his friend, and the friend was happy for a time, as Harold gave him a big sum of money for a wedding present. For the beautiful curved lines on the yellow-backed bills made him forget the lack of curves which were marked in the case of the once maybe perhaps fair Arabella.

LUX.

THE CRIMSON HEART (April 26).—Jean Legrand and his companions carry on a very successful campaign in some of the most fashionable Parisian hotels. Their occupation is thieving, and they adopt the most up-to-date methods of their kind. The arrival at the Hotel Rougemont of the famous singer, Miss Marie Barlowe, is noted by these gentry, and they are soon enstalled in an adjoining room. At the dead of night, a dark figure is to be seen moving stealthily in the upper corridors of the Hotel Rougemont. It attempts to enter a room, a woman's cry comes through the night followed by a revolver shot. Then all is silent; but not for long. The whole place is in an uproar, as the servants and guests of the hotel rush up to the spot whence the scream came. Miss Barlowe is found to have fainted in her room. She tells the story of the hand which was pushed through the opening door of her room. She remembers no more. Some time later, Miss Barlowe is attacked by a cowardly ruffian, but the assault is baffled by the opportune and highly romantic appearance of a handsome stranger who rescues the young lady. A friendship springs up between the young couple, and Miss Barlowe finally accepts the stranger's invitation to dine with him. They proceed to dine at the hotel, and the meal progresses merrily, but suddenly Miss Barlowe utters a cry and staggers to the window. She has seen something upon the stranger's hand which awakens memories of her first and alarming night at the hotel. She is terribly excited, but conceals this under a pretended indisposition. She then retires and summons aid. Returning to her captive, she entertains him until the police arrive and he is arrested. Miss Barlowe is thus saved from the deep traps of Jean Legrand, for he is betrayed by the brand upon his hand—The Crimson Heart.

POWERS

WHEN THE LILY DIED (April 30).—Mamie Judson is a most devoted little daughter and during her few years of life has always looked after the welfare of her sick mother. One day, while out shopping, she sees some beautiful Easter lilies and craves one for her mother, but is too poor to buy one. Performing a slight service for a strange gentleman, she is rewarded with a dime and hastens to the florist and offers him the money. The lilies are a dollar and a half each, but the florist reading the depth of the desire in the wistful little face, finally gives her a small sickly little flower and the child hurries home with it, delighted. The mother is also delighted with it, but that night the lily dies and Mamie is filled with despair. Then a remarkable thing happens. In dying, the lily droops to one side, and out of it falls a diamond. The mother and child are astounded, and the mother, realizing its value, writes the florist and informs him of their discovery. Then it turns out that the diamond was lost in the florist's shop by a wealthy young lady, whose father offers a large reward for its return. Mamie receives the reward, which enables her mother to procure the necessary medical aid and other comforts, but what pleases Mamie most is the gift of a number of beautiful lilies that will not die.

THE FIVE SENSES (April 30).—A little boy and a little girl go on a foraging expedition in their home; the boy going after tobacco, while the girl seeks jam. Both, then, experience five separate and distinct sensations: seeing, smelling, tasting, hearing and—last, but not least—feeling, and it is to be hoped that they are feeling it yet.

IN FRIENDSHIP'S NAME (May 4).—Ned Wright is in love with a handsome woman in Australia. She is known as Juno Temple and seems to be a wealthy member of society. She suddenly disappears and Ned learns to his consternation and sorrow that she is no other than Maud Hillis, a notorious English forger.

Some months later, Ned comes to the United States and visits his old friend Jack Wentworth, a wealthy young society man. During their conversation Jack informs Ned that he is engaged to be married and proudly shows the photograph of his fiancée. Ned immediately recognizes in the picture, Juno Temple, and warns Jack against her, producing a newspaper picture of her in proof of his accusations. Jack is at first hard to convince, but finally consents to having Ned confront Juno. This is done and she cringes before Ned and is bitterly denounced by Jack as a heartless adventuress. Ned withdraws and, in the scene which follows, Juno kills Jack and then informs the police that Ned has killed his friend in a jealous quarrel. Ned is arrested and convicted on testimony of Juno and her maid and is sentenced to life imprisonment. Later, Juno's maid has a vision which forcibly brings home to her the terrible consequences of her act in swearing away Ned's liberty and, filled with remorse, she rushes off to the police station and con-

MAJESTIC.

BOYS (April 28).—Doctor Andrews, a dentist, is a widower, who feels that it is not well to live alone. His son John, a lively boy of fourteen, does not share this feeling. The doctor bestows his attentions on Mrs. Lucy Brown, a widow, who also has a son named John, of the same age and temperament as the doctor's boy.

The widow sends her boy to the doctor's office, telling him to call that night and get his answer. While there, young Brown purloins a pair of forceps. Furthermore, when Andrews calls, and gets a favorable answer to his suit, the youngster enters, and makes fun of the lovers. But the dentist does not mind this, not knowing what is to come.

After the wedding, Andrews takes his bride home, and a pleasant surprise awaits her, in the person of young John Andrews, of whom she knew nothing. The doctor laughingly says that the two boys will make pleasant companions, and at supper the boys promptly refute this, by getting into a fight, and having to be led to bed. The parents, of course, take the parts of their respective children. A few minutes of peace follow, but when John Andrews is soundly asleep, John Brown pulls one of his teeth, with the purloined forceps, and pandemonium follows. The bride leads her son to her room, the bridegroom leads his son to his room, and so their married life begins.

The next morning the doctor's boy is so obstreperous that he is given a letter to his school teacher, which will insure him a whipping. Young Andrews bribes young Brown to deliver the note, and naturally the latter receives the punishment. He returns home, tells his mother, she upbraids her husband, explanations are useless, and she leaves the house, accompanied by her son.

Mrs. Andrews returns to her old home, from which her John goes forth, purchases a bag of candy, and proceeds to forget his troubles. But he is set upon by a number of boys who wish to share his candy, and is in dire straits when John Andrews happens along, and goes to his rescue. Together they vanquish the enemy, and then swear eternal friendship.

The boys now visit the lonely bride, and explain their friendly relations. Thence they go to the lonely bridegroom, with more explanations, and induce him to go to his wife. A reconciliation follows, with great hope for the future, cemented by the new-found loyalty of the boys.

THE SILENT CALL (April 30).—The clerk of a hotel wishes to marry the telephone girl, with whom he shares the "night shift." A traveling salesman fascinates the girl for a moment, taking her to the opera and to a fashionable café. Afterwards he tricks her into entering his room, where he demands a kiss. she tries to telephone for help; he takes the receiver from her, and they struggle in front of the instrument.

The silent call is recorded in the hotel office, below, by a light which comes and goes on the switchboard. This attracts the clerk, who answers the call, and hears his sweetheart's voice raised in altercration with her admirer.

He dashes upstairs, but for fear of raising a disturbance which might affect the girl's reputation, gains the room by means of a fire-escape and a window coping. He knocks down the lothario, rescues the girl, and when they are again at their respective posts an engagement ring brings about a happy understanding.

ECLAIR.

MIETTE'S ADVENTURES (April 28).—Pierre, after a long journey, comes back home. In the midst of the rejoicing, Miette alone, a nice young working girl, is bending over her work. Nevertheless, the young man has noticed her, succeeds in attracting her attention, thus giving him a chance to tell her how beautiful she looks. Mme. Duhaime has noticed their actions, and discharges the poor girl. The days have gone by, Miette has settled in humble lodgings. On the other hand, Pierre wants to see again the young girl; he writes her a letter. The girl comes to the appointed place, and together they traverse the plain, making future plans. An unfortunate accident happens, Pierre falls and hurts himself. Impossible to go back home, he must be carried. Miette brings him back, but remembering the severity of Mme. Duhaime she dares not go inside. Many days pass, the doctor cannot cure his patient. The wound on the body is a trifling matter, but there is something more serious. Braving the thundering of Mme. Duhaime, he himself goes to find the young girl, and places her in the arms of Pierre. As long as the doctor has willed it so, the mother cannot object longer, and later consents to their marriage.

GAUMONT.

THE SHADE OF AUTUMN (May 2).—Innocent little baby of five summers that he is, Bobby believes the literal meaning of the doctor's words to his father when he says, "she (Bobby's mother) will die with the last of the falling leaves." The words pall the youngster. While tenderly nursing his mother, Jimmie ventures a peep into the garden and sees to his horror, the golden brown and red tints on the stiff dry leaves, now rapidly falling and robbing the trees of all their foliage. He thinks of the doctor's warning and hurries to the thicket to pick up the leaves as they fall, fancying that by keeping them off the ground, his mother has a much greater chance for life. But alas, little Bobby finds the task impossible and with a cry of despair rushes back to the bedside of his dear mother only to find her dead.

BANKS OF THE DANUBE (May 2).—A scenic depicting glimpses of the picturesque Danube as it wends its way through the castle regions of Austria-Hungary.

DRIVEN FROM THE RANCH (May 5).—Cowboy Joe is certainly a bad tempered proposition and mighty hard to subdue when on the rampage. This particular afternoon, Joe had lost heavily at gambling and took his adverse luck out on several of his comrades. They came to blows, with the result that Joe received a discharge from his employer, who was also the sheriff of that locality. In vain did the cowboy seek other employment, but the meanness of his disposition rendered same impossible. Discouraged and disheartened, Joe is forced to spend the night on the plains with his faithful horse as his only friend. Early in the morning it so happens that the sheriff and his posse pass him in search of a notorious horse-thief. Inasmuch as they did not see him, Joe took advantage of their absence and in revenge for his dismissal stampeded the sheriff's horses. However, the daughter of the sheriff detects the sound of hoofs, learns the nature of the trouble and gallops to her father with the news. The leader and his posse then start in pursuit of Joe and are just in the act of overtaking him when he leaps from his horse onto a passing train and escapes. His daring climbing and maneuvering aboard the freight cars forms the most exciting and original picture ever produced. Raffled by his miraculous escape, a price of $200 is placed upon his head and each of the cowboys, together with the sheriff himself, vow to find the culprit dead or alive. They track him to a desolate marsh when they separate to hunt him down. It falls to the lot of the sheriff to come upon him and rather than see him hang, he offers him his pistol so that he may commit suicide.

THE FASHION REVIEW (April 25).—The Easter parade, the proud pageant of clothes, on the Boardwalk, Atlantic City, is more than an interesting exhibition of miles of style; it is a psychological study of colors and patterns and their influence and reflection on the minds and manners of their wearers. Spring hasn't dressed its new blossoms in any grander garb or with a more alluring distribution of tints than our American fathers and husbands have this year provided for the feminine percentage of the population.

After the parade itself has told its illustrated story, something like a few hundred feet of fashion-film, showing every item of apparel society will wear in 1912, from what they call hats to shoesies. Hats that are familiarly characterized as "dreams" by the women, and as nightmares by the men; soft, clinging, little things whose names we don't know, direct from the most fashionable and expensive shops of Paris, skirts and other relations of feminine apparel—one of the models who showed them off to such advantage, here corrects us and tells us they are not "skirts," but gowns—hose so unusual and so startlingly beautiful that you really forget what's in them; shoes that are poems in leather; bathing suits that couldn't afford to get wet—a galaxy of regal raiment.

THE SERPENT'S EYES (April 28).—The artist had a friend, a sincere person who earnestly desired to help the artist's weak finances. He knew the Serpent was interested in modern art, so he took some of the artist's work in the hope that they would be sold. The Serpent glanced casually at the paintings, but his eyes returned to and rested upon a particular portrait, the portrait of a sweet young woman, with a child's face and a woman's hopes and courage. He was interested in that face.

So he called upon the artist and questioned him as to the woman's identity. He found that she was his wife, but the man knew not that man's right and God's law were greater than millions of dollars —and perhaps they're not! All his life his whims had been the laws of others, his wishes the most important thing in the lives of thousands of his minions. Now he wanted her and determined to have her. And his eyes were the eyes of the Serpent.

He met her, and the devil's glance gleamed into her eyes. She was fascinated by the look, hypnotized by the lure. And another victory was added to the devil's list of conquests.

He invited them to a reception at his home, and there and then it was that the husband first became suspicious. One of the world's talkers came to him and told him that the Serpent and his wife were in the conservatory, but when he came there he found only the Serpent. But—he knew!

That night he declared war. He told his wife he was going to slay the Serpent, and he snatched a dagger lying near. There was a little struggle, she obtained the weapon, and rushed from the house to warn the Serpent.

The devil is an optimistic citizen, so it didn't worry him. She was there, alone, with him. Her husband and the rest of the world didn't count, so he took her in his arms. But suddenly the right and the truth in her were reinforced by some stronger power, and she plunged the dagger into his heart.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE DREAM OF DEATH (April 27).—The scene opens with a young man seated in his home waiting for his wife, who has gone to a theater. The impatience of the young man suggests that she is late in returning. A sound outside attracts his attention, and he goes to the window and, looking out, sees the approach of a motor car, from which his wife steps out, acompanied by a man. This circumstance arouses the jealousy of the husband, and when his wife enters, he upbraids her angrily for her conduct, and refusing explanations he suddenly throws her from him with such force that she falls upon the floor. The wife retires to her chamber in great distress and goes to bed leaving the husband in the agonizing pangs of jealousy. Wild with rage, he enters the chamber and going to the bedside makes a move as if to strangle the sleeping woman, but is turned from his purpose and leaves the room. Still greatly distressed, he sits down in a chair and goes to sleep. In his troubled dreams he sees himself approach the grave of his wife, upon which he throws himself, sobbing and remorseful. Two officers come upon him and the next picture shows him in a cell with the warden reading the death sentence. Then he is taken to the place of execution, where the guillotine and the executioner stand ready to carry out the mandates of the law. Just as he is about to be decapitated, he wakes with a scream, which brings his wife from her chamber. The young man is overjoyed in discovering that it was but a dream, and embraces his wife with fervor. She then takes from her bosom a card, upon which is written a message from her brother, explaining that he met her at the theater and took her to dinner, and asking the husband's pardon for keeping her out so late.

Bunk vs. Facts

There is quite a lot of piffle about a guarantee these days—Usually the strongest reading guarantee surrounds the cheaper and meaner product.

What you want is performance and not promise or excuse.

Were it true that the MOTIOGRAPH had no selling point other than its reputation for HIGH STANDARD QUALITY of MATERIAL and WORKMANSHIP, that one point would sell the machine.

THE MOTIOGRAPH IS GUARANTEED WITH THE MOST RELIABLE GUARANTEE ON EARTH, viz.—free replacement of any part through defective material or workmanship.

When you buy a MOTIOGRAPH and employ a competent operator you won't need to purchase insurance on receipts. The MOTIOGRAPH is your best and cheapest insurance.

SCENARIO WRITERS!

If your scenarios do not sell find out why. Perhaps your manuscript can be rewritten and made saleable, and your mistakes may be corrected in future manuscripts. The author of "Technique of the Photoplay," etc., will give your manuscript personal criticism and revision for a fee of only $2.

REVISION—Scenarios having a reasonable chance of a sale will be edited and revised and a typewritten copy supplied for one dollar per finished page. Send the manuscript and a reading fee of one dollar. If the scenario will not warrant further expense, it will be returned to you; if it does, you will be advised as to full cost. Please note that this covers no criticism.

Exhibitors!

THE FATHERS MAKE A HIT

WIDOWERS THREE

Three young college graduates spend their vacation on a ranch, where they meet and fall in love with three cowgirls. The boys' fathers, angry at the prospect of their sons marrying, hasten to prevent any such event. The fathers are widowers and themselves succumb to the charms of the prettier-than-they-had-expected girls. Fathers and sons become rivals for the hearts of the young ladies. It is a case of self-made men against know-it-all college chaps, with results that are quite as amusing as surprising.

Four Fascinating Fotoplay Features

Released Tuesday, April 30th

"NAPATIA, THE GREEK SINGER"

All the fine things to be said about this splendid drama would cover an entire page. Condensed, it is a wonderfully thrilling plot built on a romance involving the Fire Department, and spectacular to the highest degree. Photography absolutely perfect. You want the best, and this is par excellence!

Released Thursday, May 2nd

"HIS THRIFTY WIFE"

The "thriftiest" way to start the new month is with a corking good release. That's our motto, so here's a reel cram-full of furiously funny frivolity that will put you in the happiest mood of your life and send you home to eat even wifey's biscuits with a genuine relish. It sure is some comedy!

Released Friday, May 3rd

"THE CHAUFFEUR, THE GIRL AND THE COP"

Live combinations these, what? The chauffeur loves the girl—so does Officer Hogan. Hogan tries to arrest the chauffeur, but gets stung good and plenty. Can't you just see the comic possibilities sticking out all over this one? Will make you get on the Joy Band-Wagon and shout its praises! Demand it!

Released Saturday, May 4th

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE BANDITS"

A spanking good Western drama—just the right stuff to top off a week of features. A great, big sensational plot—thrills galore—and G. M. Anderson in his world-famous role of Broncho. Combinations de luxe!

NEXT WEEK!

"ALKALI" IKE'S BRIDE

Two Strong AMERICANS

EACH WEEK

Will go a long way toward solving the "Poor Business Problem." Some theatres never understand that a program that doesn't include AT LEAST ONE WESTERN isn't a complete program—isn't well rounded and thoroughly satisfying to EACH AND EVERY INDIVIDUAL IN THE AUDIENCE.

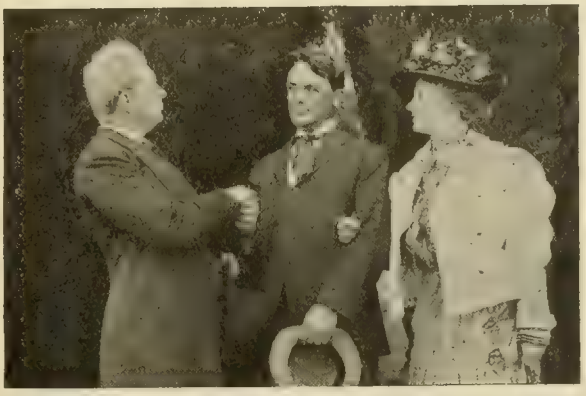
But—and here's an important thing to remember — STIPULATE "AMERICANS" when you call for "WESTERNS"—Don't forget that a company SPECIALIZING in the production of Western subjects is better equipped by experience to know just what is BEST IN WESTERNS. Two strong "AMERICANS" each week ARE A NECESSITY—If you know your business you will see that you GET THEM.

"COMING AMERICANS"

"END OF THE FEUD"

Release Thursday, May 2nd

A brilliant, deeply stirring exposition of the folly of deathbed vows and barbarous Kentucky feuds. How Bruce Jackson, son of a feudist, nearly wrecked his life's happiness and shattered three lives on the altar of solemn but silly promises. A bright love tale tinctured with the melancholy of a ghastly incident.



"THE WEDDING DRESS"

Release Monday, May 6th

How pretty Miss Betty, turned 38, became suddenly popular in Alexandria just because a letter came from an Eastern legal firm and the town thought Betty an heiress! And, by the way, Betty realized her dearest wish, which was to keep house forevermore for old Bob Plummer. A charming, well-told story you are certain to want.

Sunday Tuesday

The MAJESTIC

Is now recognized as the producer of the best high class comedy pictures in the business, and every exhibitor failing to secure both Majestics each week is losing his best opportunity to increase his profits.

SECURE THESE PICTURES

SUNDAY, MAY 5th. "HIS WEDDING DAY"—high-class comedy. A prospective bridegroom is entertained by his bachelor friends the night before the wedding. He oversleeps the next day and reaches the bride just three hours late, after a series of screamingly funny incidents.

TUESDAY, MAY 7th. "REDEEMED"— a strong drama. Jeanne, the wife of a Frenchman, loses her baby and husband the same day and goes to Paris to forget her worries. She at once is the idol of the studios. Hardened by her surroundings and temptations, she forgets her gentler feelings, but is finally redeemed by the tender touch of a friend's baby.

SUNDAY, MAY 12th. "TOM-BOY"—another comedy. A young girl, full of pranks, whose near-sighted father objects to her lover, succeeds in getting him to marry them unknowingly. She is the sole cause of the father's objection, because of her hoydenish tricks.

TUESDAY, MAY 14th. "BUNCOED"—Majestic comedy. A clever city girl, claiming she has lost a five-dollar bill, puts it over on five rural admirers and returns to town with twenty-five dollars.

APRIL 21st—"Down and Out"—Feature Comedy.
APRIL 23rd.—"The Installment Plan"—Comedy.
APRIL 28th.—"Boys"—Comedy.
APRIL 30th.—"The Silent Call"—Drama.

"THE POST TELEGRAPHER"

In Two Reels. Ready for Shipment on May 1st

A Cyclonic Presentation of War—Tremendously Sensational Scenes

A detachment of cavalry is caught in the Indians' "circle of death," and, fighting to the last gasp, all are exterminated. The post telegrapher, left for dead in the running fight, revives and drags himself to the telegraph wire, which he taps and sends a plea for help to the fort. The troops gallop madly to the scene, their coming being heralded by Indian scouts with smoke signals on hilltops. The Indians decoy the troops to the village by the use of dummies with headdresses, while they make a detour and attack the small garrison at the fort. Thrilling scenes are shown as the hordes of Indians batter down the stockade and endeavor to destroy the whites before the return of the troops, who are rushing back at breakneck speed. The final battle is ended by a sensational hand to hand conflict and a whirlwind cavalry charge. Through the picture runs a beautiful love story, showing the bravery of a girl who rescues the post telegrapher from the very jaws of death and carries him to safety on her horse.

Won by Waiting

Amos Randall, a rich old bachelor, leaves a big fortune to his ward, Arthur Wells, and his niece, Flo Fleming, provided that they marry within three months. Wells accepts the situation perforce, and Flo for love. The girl is a beauty but having been brought up in the country is bad on refinement. The husband turns her over to a club friend for companionship. The situation becomes very serious until an incident calls for an explanation and in the end Love triumphs.

Released Saturday, May 4th, 1912
Length 765 feet

"The Tin Can Rattle"

Jim Bledsoe, Editor of "The Rattle," is up against it, the paper does not pay and he has to pay his debts at the point of a gun, a stranded actress applies for a position and being pretty is promptly engaged. Among other innovations she proposes a voting contest to decide who is the most popular man in Tin Can. The Cowpunchers buy the papers by the cart load, but in the end Bledsoe wins the contest and the actress.

Length 262 feet

Turtle Industry in Florida

A very interesting picture of a Turtle Farm. The monsters are handled fearlessly by the keepers who give them their turn in the tanks. A boy rides on the back of one of the turtles, as a keeper prods the beast to improve his speed. The dressing for the market is done rapidly and on a wholesale scale. This is an educational picture which will be much admired by people who have not the opportunity to see a Florida Farm.

Released Thursday, May 2nd, 1912
Length About 1000 feet

"A SON'S DEVOTION"

Juan, a poor Mexican peon, being told by the doctor that his mother will surely die unless he can secure for her the necessary medicine and food, steals a horse and sells it. The theft is discovered and Juan arrested. At his earnest pleading the owner of the stolen horse and the sheriff accompany the boy to the home and find the mother has passed. Touched with Juan's despair, they leave him with his dead.

Released Monday, May 6th, 1912
Length about 1036 feet

LITTLE BOY BLUE

Little Harold and a number of other boys, members of the Star Baseball Team, with the assistance of a little girls' Friendly Society, give a Mother Hubbard Bazaar in the church vestry-room, for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Stone, a poor old couple who are in arrears for rent. The show is eminently successful, but at the close Harold is missing. A search is made and Mrs. Stone finds Little Boy Blue under a haycock, fast asleep.

"FRANK COFFYN'S HYDRO-AEROPLANE FLIGHTS" Monday, April 29th

Up above the skyscrapers of New York and under the Brooklyn Bridge in a flying machine that skims the water like a duck and flies like a bird. A chance to take an airing and a sail at the same time.

"THE OLD KENT ROAD" Tuesday, April 30th

Enjoying riches left by a relative, an old coster is told a later will gives the inheritance to another. He is obliged to go back to his old home and vocation. Poverty brings its disappointments but it brings joy to the daughter, who marries her poor sweetheart.

"SHERIFF JIM'S LAST SHOT" Wednesday, May 1st

It reaches the heart and stirs the red blood of life into realization of what it meant to the real men and women of the West to settle and pioneer the West in the interests of civilization.

"RED INK TRAGEDY"
"OLD LOVE LETTERS" } Two in One Friday, May 3rd

A double header. One a riproaring comedy and gloom-chaser. The other a poetic portrayal of "Love's Old Sweet Song," recalling tender recollections of the past.

"THE HIEROGLYPHIC" Saturday, May 4th

It leads to the detection of two rascals who stole a will; the recovery of a fortune by the young heiress and her marriage to a young newspaper reporter.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

An Unsurpassed Moving Picture Machine from every point of view. "Once used, always used."

The motion picture show is fast becoming the biggest factor in the amusement field—the biggest money-maker for the men who are playing the game with both eyes open. Go into the business now, while it's still young, but be sure to start with the right machine. A cheap machine is a bad investment and a losing proposition from the beginning.

The Edison Kinetoscope projects the clearest, steadiest pictures, is the simplest machine to operate, is absolutely safe and will outwear any other motion picture machine made. Write us today for a catalog and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

Facts and Comments

IT is interesting and instructive to gauge the tendency of the motion picture by examining the lists of releases for the last month or so. There is a marked falling off of "Western" pictures, the kind that deal with impossible cowboys, halfbreeds, outlaws and sheriffs. Out of about four hundred subjects filmed as regular releases less than ten per cent are so-called "Western" subjects and of these many are distinctly meritorious and not the stereotyped variety. The increase of pictures of a more or less distinctly educational character is striking. The percentage of such pictures reaches about twenty. Drama and comedy of course predominate as they are bound to do. There is too a sprinkling of "yellow films," which are frankly sensational and sacrifice taste, decency, art and skill to sensation in the foolish hope that they have struck the right road to the kingdom of Get-Rich-Quick. These objectionable films are about evenly divided between foreign and domestic makers. It is pleasing to note that attempts at historical pictures are getting more numerous, as are scenic subjects. There is still a large number of releases, that appear to be consistently on the wrong track and out of touch with the feelings and demands of our public. On the whole however the situation is a gratifying one for the friends of the motion picture and incomparably better than it was a year ago this time.

NOWHERE in the field of moving pictures has the improvement of the years brought finer results than in the accompanying music. Music is, always has been and always will be the most natural and suitable of the "added attractions." Today it receives more attention than ever. The number of competent moving picture musicians is larger than ever. Shockingly unfitting music is heard only on very rare occasions, more often we fear in this city than in other parts of the country. In all things appertaining to the successful management of a moving picture theatre, New York City is still lagging miles behind the pace set by the more progressive exhibitors of other American cities. Within the last few days we heard the orchestra of an up-town theatre play "Everybody's doin' it," while the subject on the screen was an intensely dramatic episode taken from the Napoleonic wars. Generally speaking however moving picture music is coming into its own and growing into a source of strength. The dying out of the illustrated song has no doubt helped to better the tone of moving picture music. There has been a most desirable refinement. Intelligence and skill more than ever before dominate the musical situation today.

LESS than three years ago it was a common thing to hear the motion picture denounced from the bench as a "crime-breeder." A judge of the General Sessions indulged in a bitter and indiscriminating attack on the picture and soon the vituperative echoes were heard in numerous other courts. It is therefore especially gratifying to have a judge in Brooklyn, well-known for his sternness and severity, give his qualified approval of the motion picture as an "educating influence." In a long interview printed in a New York Sunday paper Judge Fawcett, of the Kings County Court condemns "Cheap vaudeville and three cent poolrooms as breeding places of crime," but says a good word for the motion picture, the effect of which on the youthful mind he thinks is "on the whole good, especially if there is moderation." Praise that comes from such sources and from apparently unwilling lips has the merit of being entirely sincere. We may be sure the picture deserves all the kind words it draws from the bench.

WE have often been amused in the past by such yellow journals as The New York World, which daily abounds in pictorial garbage of the worst kind, yelling themselves hoarse for "Reform in Moving Pictures." The yellow journalist in this respect is sometimes rivalled by the so-called evangelist, the descendant of the old-time field preacher who was proverbial for the ultra sensational methods of his preaching. In a Western city one of these evangelists launched out against the moving picture, dwelling particularly on its "morbid sensationalism." In the course of his sermon he recited in a harrowing manner the details of several brutal murders that had stirred the neighborhood and ended his discourse by taking an axe and in a very melodramatic manner smashing a demijohn. Strange how we detest our faults when we see them crop out in others, but are unable to see them when they are in ourselves. A local newspaper, commenting adversely on the evangelist's methods and rebuking him for his illogical censure of the motion picture, is cruel enough to intimate that the motion picture shows have unfavorably affected the patronage of the contribution box and that the doughty evangelist is being hurt in one of his tenderest spots.

UNITED States Senator William Alden Smith, chairman of the investigating committee, which seeks to get at the causes of the recent Titanic catastrophe was asked for permission to have the cinematograph make a record of the sessions of the committee. The Senator declined to grant the permission. "These sessions," he is quoted as saying in explanation of his refusal, "are solemn affairs and they must not be 'hippodromed' or commercialized." We have no reason to doubt the sincerity of the Senator's motives. He probably feels just the way he talks. He is, however, falling into a serious error of judgment. The sessions are held in public, they are carried on by the delegated authority of the public and they are supposed to be for the ultimate benefit of the public. This being so it is just as sensible and just to exclude the representatives of the press as well as the representatives of the pictorial weekly gazettes. As a matter of right and public policy, the camera men ought to have been permitted to place a pictorial life-like and moving record before their "readers," who are to say the least, fully as numerous as the readers of newspapers, printed in black type on white paper. The day of the "enfranchisement of the motion picture," for which this paper has consistently pleaded ever since its birth will surely come. As the usefulness of the motion picture as a recording medium of great contemporaneous events is becoming more widely known, public sense and sentiment will enact laws, which will give equal rights to the cinematographic reporter with the newspaper man. The lesson of the Titanic disaster and all its incidents can be made far more impressive by pictures that move than by mere words in cold letters.

WE are glad to observe that the daily press of the city with the exception of one notorious enemy of the motion picture is following the attitude of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD regarding the preposterous ordinance providing for aldermanic censorship of motion pictures. One paper in particular urges the necessity of placing motion pictures as much beyond censorship as newspapers. The papers unite in condemning the aldermanic abortion and express their firm belief that the Mayor will make short work of it, if it ever reaches him. It would be interesting to know just what powers are behind this scheme. In its last analysis it has some features, that would make it a great instrument for what is known as "graft."

WE observe with regret, that one of our esteemed contemporaries, which conducts a moving picture section in its columns sees fit to attack Miss Jane Addams for some criticism she is alleged to have made of the abuses of the motion picture. Miss Jane Addams is a real and honest reformer and has proved her friendship for humanity by works as well as by her writings. She, like too many other sincere and well-intentioned people, may unconsciously have absorbed a prejudice against the motion picture; perhaps she just looked at some of the lurid posters, with which some moving picture theatres in prominent places decorate their lobbies and their fronts; she may have seen some bad pictures some time ago and still be under the impression which they produced on her mind. Whatever her reason for viewing motion pictures with suspicion there is no sense or justification in attacking her. It would be much better, if some of our manufacturers who are doing such splendid social work, just exactly along the lines of Miss Addams, were to urge her to look at their reels. She would then quickly revise her opinion. Women of the type of Miss Addams must be friends, not enemies, of the motion picture.

FOREIGN TRIBUTES TO THE LATE MR. JAMES P. CHALMERS.

The well-known British publication, "The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly," speaking of the death of the late founder and editor of the Moving Picture World, says:

"Death claims its victims even from the ranks of journalism, and I regret to add even from the kinematographic press. I was deeply grieved to learn by this week's American mail of the untimely death of Mr. J. P. Chalmers, the editor and proprietor of the Moving Picture World of New York. I had a personal acquaintance with the deceased and well remember his courtesy and urbanity when I had occasion to cross the herring pond. Mr. Chalmers, who was a Scotchman by birth, was the quintessence of what a journalist should be. His keen perception, ability to gauge the value of news and above all his sterling uprightness eminently fitted him to be the head of an organ connected with such an important and advancing industry as the kinematograph trade. The late Mr. Chalmers wielded his pen energetically towards the furtherance of the Weekly's policy, the uplift of the motion picture. He never hesitated to expose its failings or shortcomings. Nothing that was likely to bring kinematography into disrepute was ever countenanced by him, and I am but giving praise where praise is due when I say that to his efforts the moving picture industry in America owes much of its position to-day.

"Mr. Chalmers may be said to have died at his post. Ignoring the claims of New York to his presence in that city he went to Dayton, Ohio, to attend a State Convention of Ohio Exhibitors, and whilst going over the National Cash Register Co.'s premises, accidentally opened the doors of an elevator, and falling a distance of 18 feet, died a few hours after, from the injuries he had received. I extend to the staff of the Moving Picture World on behalf of myself and fellow scribes of Mr. Chalmers on the Weekly, my most sincere sympathy in the loss the New York press has sustained, and to the father and mother, brother and two sisters of the deceased I offer the condolences of the entire kinematograph industries of Great Britain in the sad bereavement that has befallen them by the death of a man whom kinematography could ill afford to lose."

SCENIC ART IN MOTION PHOTOGRAPHY.

By Wray Bartlett Physioc.

THE term scenic painting has a definite and limited significance too often disregarded in the production of good films. Its maltreatment seems the more inexcusable when we remember that it is not a word originally wider in meaning which has been narrowed by the custom of the studio with limited technical applicability; but that its etymological dictionary force is at one with its employment in artistic parlance.

In the production of a film, the director and the scenic artist should co-operate. They should select their scenes with care. That the director nowadays has no time to study out his scenic plots with the scenic artist may be the fault of no one but himself, and yet there are certain circumstances that force the artist to work out his own ideas without the least conception of the scene he is to paint. "Just fake this up," is a frequent slogan.

During the last few years many methods of painting scenery for photography have been practiced, and many excellent effects produced, at seeming defiance of the old methods, until the conclusion is forced upon the mind that the real vitality of any work does not consist in its methods, but rather in the hiding of its construction altogether.

When we begin to examine a motion picture in particular examples, we shall prize most highly those scenes in which its characteristic qualities are most perfectly exhibited, its limitations most loyally respected, since as Mr. Gasnier, of the Pathe studio, once truly told me, a scene is at its best when it is most thoroughly itself. Those scenes which are the most free and most personal in handling and the richest in tone and in which good composition is employed, will be the finest.

Of course, in this as in all other arts, there is something more than technical skill to be considered. There is the idea which it expresses or the period of style which it interprets. But scene painting is not an imaginative art, even to the comparative degree which some arts may be esteemed, as it is the most boldly and frankly interpretative of all graphic modes—original, valuable ideas must have existed where really fine construction is seen. And in so interpretative an art, where very many details must be omitted, their effects dispensed with altogether or merely suggested to the observer's memory, the converse power of synthesis is implied as well. Therefore the scenic artist must be possessed by a clear idea of the thing he is expected to paint. And so it is when we see a scene of really strong and individual workmanship, it vouches for the intellectual qualities of the producer as well—it presupposes, by its very existence, clear, individual ideas.

And as this fact implies that perhaps the chief thing to be prized in a scenic artist's work is economy of labor. As the art is essentially a free and rapid one, a scene should be painted with as much simplicity as possible. An elaborate, patiently worked up scene is never so delightful as one that is simple—provided the desired effect is secured.

I once saw a scene painted for the motion pictures in color. This was the scenic artist's first attempt to paint for the pictures. The scene was photographed, but the photographic copy was of no assistance in getting the true values of tone and color. Most artists paint their scenes in black and white, and a few use sepia colors. This is according to the camera man's point of view. I prefer the black and white, as this color is capable of expressing everything; every stroke of the brush answers back in the negative exactly as the artist paints it, and the nerve-power flowing from the brain to the hand determines its quality. Scenic art is capable of the finest artistic expression. The mind and the hand that can produce quality, can express it with a piece of chalk on the cliff, or with a stick in the sand.

It has been said that nothing is more difficult than painting a scene in a one-toned color scheme. I do not think this is true, but it has probably crept into our belief by reason of the fact that one-toned effects show up better in the picture than a scene painted in five or six different tones.

One of the chief temptations which assail the director and the artist of to-day is the temptation of too much useless elaboration, too little abstraction and condensation and instence upon the vital structure of their scenes. They have not always conquered the possibilities of the art in the way of breadth and strength and originality; but they have not often travestied these best things.

An aspiring photoplay writer once asked a well-known dramatist how he constructed his plays, and was told in reply that he wrote all of his scenes in great length just as they occurred to him, but when he came to arrange the parts of his play he left out everything not necessary to the artistic evolution of the photoplay and everything not absolutely requisite to its utility, the result being one of vigorous dramatic strength. This illustrates in a way the principle that might be applied to the matter of setting a scene of any sort. For good taste not only concerns itself with the question of what could be put into a scenic set, but quite as much with what should be left out.

Too often we find a scene over-crowded not only with useless, but with unbeautiful things. As though any sentiment in the world could excuse the putting in a conspicuous place an object that does not belong there. The day has arrived when it is possible with a little thought to have every unit in the decorating of a scene fulfill the asthetic rules one might lay down for selection.

It is difficult, and might be unjust, to use absolute superlatives when speaking of men so nearly on a par as our best scenic artists. But I shall keep within quite undisputed facts in saying that there is not one among them who shows a truer feeling for the requirements of this peculiar art than Mr. John Ruff, of the Edison Company, who knows so exactly what to omit and what to insist upon, and thus produces such complete effects by such synthetic means.

Mr. Herman Steuernagel is another artist worthy of all attention. He has experienced widely with his art, especially with his color-treatment. His early work was very careful and elaborate, but he has gradually made his way to far greater simplicity and far greater results.

Mr. Tischbauer's name should not be forgotten in this connection, nor that of Mr. George Ackerson, who studied with one of the best stage scenic artists of our day, and learned from him a delicacy and refinement in the management of his brush, which stood him in good stead in several of his productions.

Mr. Kelly is a very young man, and just beginning, with energy and serious effort, his scenic work. He seems to have been influenced a good deal by Mr. Porter, both in his choice of theme and his manner of working. But his taste is artistic, his individuality is visible, and his master is a good one; so we may hope the three facts will work together till the former predominates in an art of first-rate quality.

NEW YORK VISITORS OF THE WEEK.

Mr. Frank L. Talbot, of St. Louis, was a visitor this week in Manhattan to get wised up on things in general, as well as to spend some of his time in merry meetings with gentlemen of the trade. Mr. Talbot is one of the high moving picture moguls of St. Louis, as everybody knows, and one of the first men to enter the moving picture business.

Mr. Al S. Davis, the "Celluloid King," of Pittsburgh, was welcomed to our city for a few days ending April 19th. Mr. Davis combined pleasure with business while in our midst and while enjoying himself he kept his ear to the ground all the time, metaphorically speaking. When the Carpathia docked on Thursday night, he went down to the Cunard pier with Herb Miles and Sherlocko to see if any of his friends had survived the disaster. He was not expecting anybody, but he thought there might be one or two. He got through the police lines by sticking a Pittsburgh meal ticket in the band of his hat.

NEW EQUIPMENT.

The new Thomashefsky Theater, in Baltimore, Md., with a seating capacity of 2,200, purchased their entire projection equipment, consisting of a Mirror screen, a new Edison, model B moving picture machine and compensarc, from Chas. E. Calehuff, 50 North 8th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

AMERICAN WANTS SCENARIOS.

The American Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, is in the market for a new batch of scenarios in addition to those produced by its staff of writers. Strong Western subjects will receive first consideration. Omer F. Doud, manager of publicity, has assumed the duties of scenario editor for the Chicago offices.

Exhibitors League Notes.

KANSAS CITY LEAGUE NEWS.

Early in February the Motion Picture exhibitors of this city met at Hotel Sexton and formed an organization to be known as the Exhibitors' Association of Kansas City, Mo. At that meeting there was twenty-two exhibitors present, representing twenty-six theaters. This included both down-town and suburban houses. Since organizing the membership has increased until now it has a membership of thirty-six, representing forty-two theaters. By-laws were adopted and these officers were then elected to serve one year: Geo. H. Wiley, president; William L. Shelton, vice-president; John T. Hurtt, secretary; Jos. Steimen, treasurer; Earl Alexander, sergeant at arms; Board of Directors—J. Ray Samuel, N. J. Flynn, G. W. Flick, C. S. Sefferd, Malcom McKay.

Several weeks ago Mr. C. N. Christenson of Cleveland Local No. 1, also National secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, visited our club room and spent a pleasant day with several of the members. Mr. Christenson was given our application for membership to the National League and a Charter was granted to us for the State of Missouri and permission to take in membership from Kansas at the convention held at Dayton, Ohio, on March 26 and 27, 1912.

We are planning to hold a convention in Kansas City on July 9 and 10, to be attended by the exhibitors from the States of Missouri and Kansas and at that convention we will elect delegates to the National Convention in Chicago to be held August 13. We are preparing for an active campaign to secure every exhibitor in the States of Kansas and Missouri for membership of Kansas City Local No. 1. We have the co-operation of all the local exchanges, who have taken a great interest in our Association. We expect in a few days to be able to place in the hands of every manager of a Motion Picture Theater in the above States a copy of our Constitution and By-laws which is now in the hands of the printer.

We maintain club rooms at 312 Shubert Building and visiting exhibitors are welcome. They will find on file the current issues of the Moving Picture World and other periodicals.

BOOMING THINGS IN CINCINNATI.

Cincinnati Local No. 2 has an organizer in the field and is enrolling new members daily. Several business meetings of the new local have been held and the manner of conducting business has made a good impression on exhibitors throughout the city. It is expected that all Cincinnati exhibitors will soon be induced to join. The new local is affiliated with the National League.

DAYTON EXHIBITORS ALL IN LINE.

Reports from Dayton, Ohio, announce that all exhibitors in that city have become members of the Dayton Local and that the organization is in a prosperous condition. Clem Kerr, of Dayton, has been appointed organizer for the State of Ohio by President Neff. Mr. Kerr hopes to enroll every worthy exhibitor in the State.

TOLEDO LOCAL HOLDS BANQUET.

On Thursday, April 11, the Toledo Local No. 3 of the League of America, gave a grand ball and banquet. President Neff was present and addressed the assembled guests. Motion pictures of the occasion were taken as the guests marched around the hall under the rays of a strong spot light. W. C. Bettis of the Colonial Theater, Toledo, was master of ceremonies. This occasion was the first of the kind ever held by the exhibitors of Toledo and was a grand success. Toledo exhibitors are enthusiastic over prospects of a convention of the State League there July 16-17.

WEST VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

The Exhibitors' League of West Virginia held a meeting at Huntington, W. Va., on May 1st and 2d. Headquarters were at the Fifth Avenue hotel and the sessions of the convention were held in the Carnegie library. President M. A. Neff and Secretary Christensen of the National League were present.

"The Coming of Columbus."

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY AT LAST OFFERS TO THE WORLD THE GREAT HISTORICAL SPECTACLE OF THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA. THIS RESULT OF MANY MONTHS OF CONSCIENTIOUS LABOR IS A CREDIT TO MOTOGRAPHY AND A GREAT CONTRIBUTION TO THE CAUSE OF EDUCATION.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

I RECOLLECT that, in his essay on "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," Macaulay compared the author, in his undertaking of the gigantic task, to a lone axeman chopping his way through a primeval forest of unknown extent and difficulties. And, somehow, in beginning this review of "The Coming of Columbus," I am impressed that when William N. Selig first dreamt of filming this tremendous subject he must have felt somewhat like Macaulay's lone axeman, because of the bewildering barriers in his path. The great historian Gibbons struggled amid the abundance of myths and legends from which he had to sift the wheat of historical data; the filmer of "The Coming of Columbus" was puzzled what course to pursue, because of the great wealth of historical data right at hand. The difficulty lay in selecting the incidents that would best serve to portray the life and character of the Great Discoverer in a worthy manner, and on a scale that would fully measure up to the heights of his renown.

The Captains of the Nina and Pinta Attempt to Persuade Columbus to Turn Back.

There is a halo around Columbus that is clearly seen by the great eye of civilized humanity, and his lifework will inspire the human race as long as it will endure; and I am strong in the belief that his life, as revealed in the Selig pictures, is the greatest achievement yet wrought by cinematography. "The Coming of Columbus" is destined to win millions of new patrons for the moving picture; for the interest in it will be world wide, and it will clearly demonstrate the value and serviceability of the moving picture in the narration of notable historical and epochal themes.

To have undertaken the production of these films without careful research, well laid plans, the necessary facilities and abundant resources, would have resulted in regrettable failure. And, in addition to all these, the exact counterparts of the three caravels—the Santa Maria, the Pinta and the Nina—were required to give due realism to the story. Mr. Selig was especially fortunate in this respect; for, anchored in Yacht cove, in Jackson Park, the three vessels referred to have been in the care of the South Park Commissioners since the World's Columbian Exposition, in 1893. As is known, the Santa Maria was built in Spain and presented to the Exposition by the Queen Regent, Christina of Spain, being an exact reproduction of the flagship of Columbus. The Pinta and the Nina were reproduced in Spain, according to the most reliable records, by W. McCarty Little, of the United States Navy. These vessels crossed the Atlantic under their own sails, following as closely as possible the original course taken by Columbus. After reaching these shores the caravels were brought north, and passed up the St. Lawrence, through the Welland Canal, across Lakes Erie, Huron and Michigan, and into Chicago harbor.

These invaluable vessels were secured by Mr. Selig for use in the production, a bond of $100,000 being given for their safe return. The Knights of Columbus cooperated earnestly to secure the caravels from the Park Commissioners, the negotiations taking nearly three years before arrangements were made.

In this connection it may be stated that Mr. Selig's forces spent several weeks in docking the caravels and making them seaworthy. Their seams were recaulked, the bottoms painted and the upper works thoroughly overhauled. The rudder of one of the vessels was replaced and new sails were made for all three, at a heavy outlay. The manning of the caravels was another difficult task, as over 120 deep sea water sailors were required to handle them. When the men were secured, it took several weeks to familiarize them with the old style sails, so as to maneuver the vessels as required by the camera man.

It is worthy of note that Mr. Selig succeeded in securing the original log book of Columbus as a property for the Santa Maria. This was done through the kind offices of the Spanish Consul in Chicago, a bond of $10,000 being given for its return. Although this log book in the Santa Maria's cabin will catch but few eyes, its being there is an evidence of the great care taken in the matter of details.

The scenario was written by C. E. Nixon, a well known newspaper man, author, critic and playwright. Mr. Nixon spent three years in study and research for his material, and his completed work was afterwards carefully reviewed by the producing staff of the Selig Polyscope Company. The account left by Columbus of his voyages, and those of his associates, have been faithfully followed in the Selig production. Some of the incidents have been found in official documents and in the Spanish archives, and others have been taken from testimony given in the law suit brought against the Crown of Spain by Diego, the son of Columbus, after the death of his father. The aim throughout has been to give a moving, living picture of Columbus as he was and to keep close to historical accuracy and the atmosphere of the times.

Mr. Selig states that $50,000 has been expended on the three films in "The Coming of Columbus." Over 350 acting people were engaged in the production in addition to a host of supernumeraries and skilled workmen.

"The Coming of Columbus" will be released May 6, by special arrangement with, and under the exclusive control of the General Film Company. Harry J. Cohen, of the Selig Polyscope Co., left Chicago on a flying tour of the country, April 18, in the interests of these films. He will visit all the branch offices of the General Film Co., and private exhibitions will be given licensed exhibitors in the leading cities. Mr. Cohen left for the East and will next visit the South and far West and then the Middle West. His campaign will last 20 days, during which time he will never sleep in a hotel.

The publicity department of the Selig Polyscope has completed arrangements for an extensive advertising campaign for "The Coming of Columbus." Exhibitors can be furnished with all varieties of aids to boom the films by applying to the Chicago office. A special Columbus circular will be mailed them giving all particulars as to prices, etc., of the various aids. A special musical program for the presentation of the films is being prepared for Mr. Selig by S. L. Rothapfel, the widely known manager of the Lyceum theatre, Minneapolis.

THE PICTURED STORY.

As is known, Columbus visited nearly every Court in Europe for assistance to carry out his great project. The Selig films introduce him to us in Portugal, where he sought the favor of John II. We see him visit a quaint votive shrine in Portugal accompanied by his son Diego, who is seen leading the lone donkey, which carried their scanty effects. They are on the way to Spain, where the mariner hopes to gain an audience with the good Queen Isabella.

We next see the little party at an old mission in Spain, where Columbus stops and explains his plans and theories to the pious fathers. Most of the latter, we can see, are astounded at his views on geography and shake their heads gravely as they ponder. However, he interests Fra Antonio, one of the Queen's confessors, who succeeds in getting him an audience with her Majesty. The meeting takes place in the royal tent on the field of Granada, where at the time, a conflict rages between the royal troops and the Moors. Just as Columbus has won the Queen's ear and he has spread his charts on the table, messengers arrive from the battlefield and announce the surrender of the Moors, putting an end to the interview.

Isabella turns Columbus over to the wise men of Salamanca to test his sanity, and one can easily see that they look on him as a mad theorist. But Fra Antonio persuades the Queen to grant Columbus another audience, and we are treated to a splendid Court scene, where Isabella and Ferdinand listen to the great mariner. The Queen offers to sell her jewels to support Columbus on his quest, but she is spared the sacrifice by the generosity of Fernandez, the Court physician, who finances the undertaking. Next we see Columbus made an admiral by King Ferdinand, in presence of the Court, and a great procession of ecclesiastics, a vestal choir, famous dignitaries and other members of the laity as they march past the royal stand. This is one of the most imposing scenes in the three films and forms a fitting close to the first reel.

And now the three caravels pass before us in order; first the flagship Santa Maria, next the Pinta and then the Nina. They are first seen anchored in the quiet harbor of Palos, from which they set sail on an epoch-making voyage. We catch a glimpse of Sunday mass on board the Santa Maria as the little vessels plow their ways further into unknown seas. And soon we notice discontent and disaffection among the sailors. The captains of the smaller craft see it and, half in accord with the spirit, try to influence Columbus to turn back to Spain. They visit him again as mutiny flaunts its face, and we see the intrepid Commander quelling the turbulent spirits by his presence and cheering words of hope.

Shortly afterwards we see the faces of Columbus and others raised aloft in ecstasy, as the lookout cries, "Land Ho!" "Away to the West," he further cries in answer to the Admiral. And then, with hearts full of thankfulness to the Giver of all Good, we see the worn out sailors join with their Commander in offering thanksgiving. Then a bird is caught in the rigging by a sailor, and every eye is strained to catch a glimpse of the shore from which it has flown. Next we view the fleet at anchor and the landing on the island, on the coast of which a body of natives watches the strange white men from the clouds. The standard of Spain is reared on the new soil on which Columbus had first planted the emblem of the cross.

The third reel opens with a magnificent scene showing the welcome extended Columbus and his men at the Court of Ferdinand and Isabella. It is one fully befitting the occasion, and fairly flashes with royal and courtly splendor. In the midst of the great assemblage, where even stoical grandees applaud the success of Columbus, he is knighted by King Ferdinand.

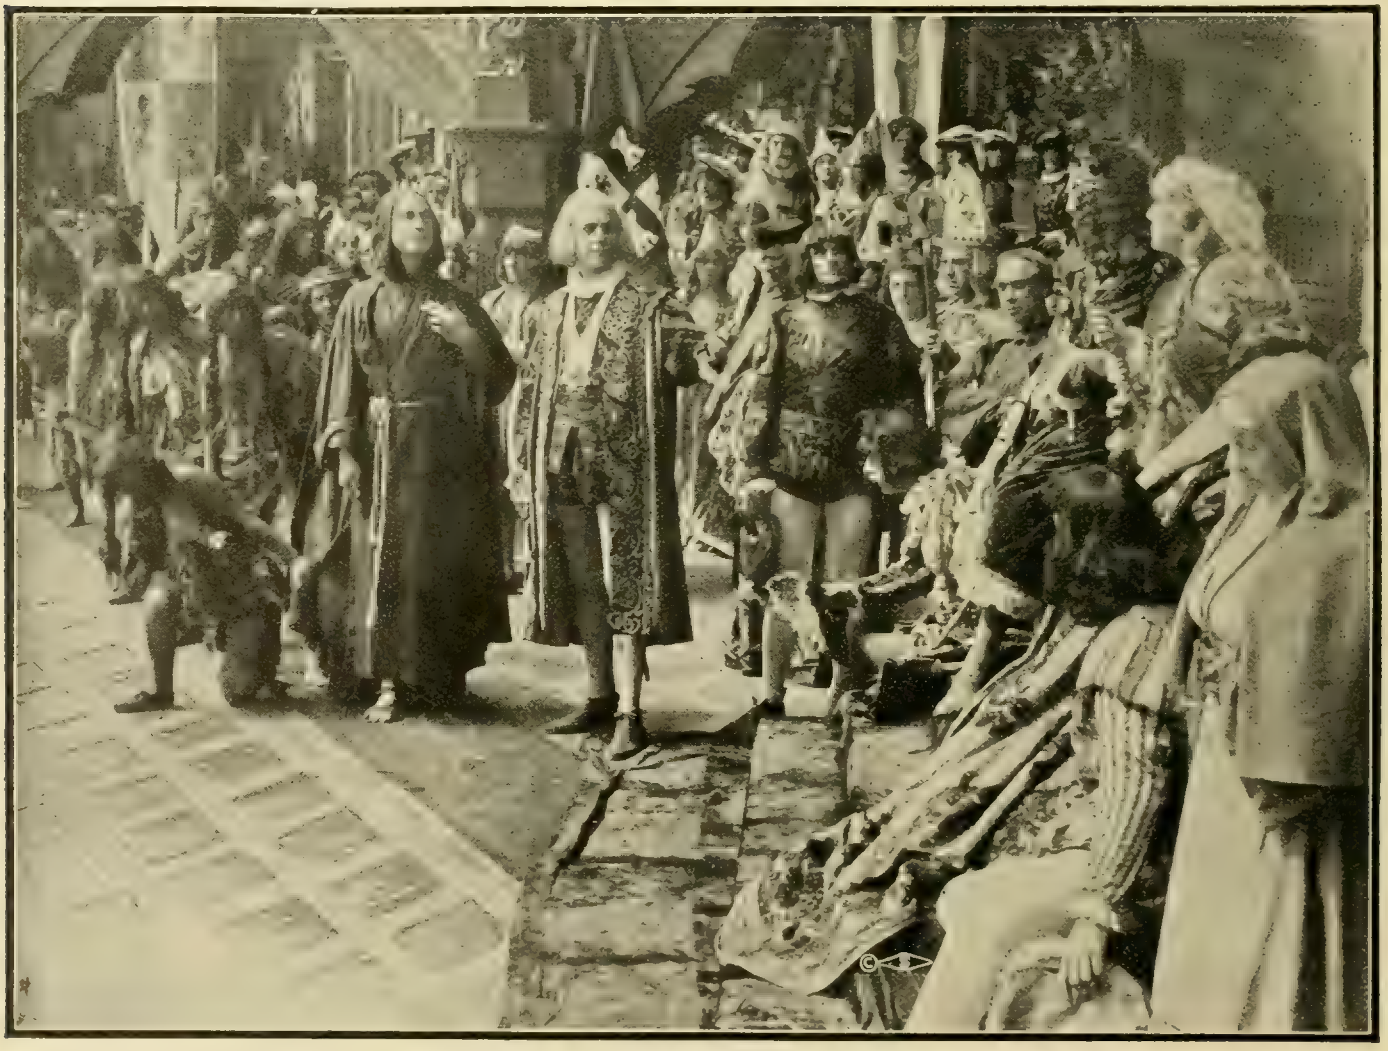
A fine interior scene is devoted to the "egg" incident. We see the insulting courtier, who had tried to belittle the feat of Columbus, humbled by the simple problem of standing an egg on end. This scene is artistically posed and is worthy of being ranked with a great painting. The third voyage is undertaken by Columbus and we see him mourning over the destruction of his colony, La Navidad. Insolent and avaricious Spanish nobles had wrought the ruin, and already they had planned the ruin of the Great Discoverer. While he is endeavoring to rebuild the colony and the fortunes of the natives who love him, Francisco de Boabdilla arrives to take him back in chains to Spain. As the arrest is being made the following proclamation is read:

"Whereas, one Christoper Columbus, governor of the Antilles, has been found guilty of malfeasance in office and has not accounted for much gold promised the Crown —the Commissioner of the Crown, Boabdilla, will cause his arrest and conduct him to Spain for trial.

"FERDINAND."

We see the natives determined to set Columbus free; but we also see him dissuading them from their purpose. Then our blood boils as we watch them riveting the cruel chains on his ankles, and witness the further shame of Spain as he sails away, bound and alone, in the vessel's hold.

The final sub-title in the third reel, "Sic transit gloria virum," is scarcely fitting in this case. True, the honors heaped on a man by the world may pass away, but the glory of great deeds performed by him for the human race cannot pass away. The glory of Columbus is greater now than ever before. While cheated of his right to have the great continent, discovered by him, named after him, the story of his life is known to all, while one is obliged to refer to an encyclopedia for information about Amerigo.



Court Reception to Columbus After His First Voyage. Columbus Returns to the Throne of Spain.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE UNCHANGED EAST.

THERE is not a student anywhere, no matter of what "age, profession or calling," but will be interested in "Egypt in the time of Moses" (Kalem), an outline of which was given in the last issue of the "Educator." This is not a picture alone for the Egyptologist, it is for the school boy (daily or Sabbath), the student of nature and the teacher; while every intelligent person will be interested in it. We have often been interested to notice the astonishment of the backward races when they first become acquainted with our modern evidences of progress. The automobile in the far east caused an awestricken people to call it a "devil-wagon," a phonograph was "bewitched," a balloon was "from the gods," and its occupants worshipped; while the people who possessed these advantages are considered as favorites of the "great white spirit." One of the promised benefits of the phonograph and cinematograph of to-day is that they are recording events for future generations.

When we look upon the film "Egypt in the time of Moses," we could well imagine that it is an historic record of the thousands of years ago; whereas, instead of being such a record it only reveals the Egypt of to-day, which has practically stood-still through these ages. The unchanged East is a marvel, no progress, no retrogression. A mighty and permanent continuity, and that with strange stability. While serving many important and valuable purposes, the greatest value of this film is that it confirms the only record of those times—the Scripture. What a mutuality of confirmation when the written word of the long ago and the pictures of the present time, yet continued from the unchanged long ago, come together!

Brick Making.

Beginning with Genesis xi. 3., nearly twenty-three centuries B. C. and continuing through Exodus 1. 14, and Exodus 5, 7, we have the first references to that process which we see depicted in these pictures in continuance to-day. The sun-drying of bricks is traced as of Egyptian origin and custom. The brick kiln was a later Babylonian development.

The use of chaff to-day in brickmaking is the exceptionally attractive feature, lending the interest it does to the proof of the increased burdens put upon the Israelites when in Egypt in that they were required to furnish their own straw or chaff, and yet "The tale of bricks should not be diminished. Ex. 5, 7-8.

Ancient Agriculture.

The ploughing is exactly as described in both the Old and New Testaments, a light stick or crook or two pieces joined at right angles which seemed to do little more than scratch the surface of the ground if one yoke of oxen were used, and made larger, as necessity required and more oxen were used. The reaping was either with a sickle or by pulling the stalks up by the roots, the earliest reference thereto being in Deuteronomy 16, 9, when the using of the sickle was a standard of the time. The gathering of the sheaves is common in all parts of the bible as in the way depicted.

Threshing usually took place upon a circular plot of hard ground, such places, or "floors," are repeatedly named from as early a time as Genesis 50, 10. Threshing was done in three ways; either with a stick or trampling by oxen, or by a "Norag," and which is perhaps first described in Isaiah 41, 15, or earlier still by less direct reference in II Samuel 24, 16. It should be noticed that now as then, the oxen are un-muzzled, in obedience to the injunction, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn."

The "shovel" or "Fan" indicates the process of ancient winnowing, Isaiah 30, 24, a conspicuous part of eastern husbandry, the "fan" (a broad shovel) threw the grain against the wind; an additional use of the sieve being made if necessary. The grinding of wheat into flour is identical with all scripture references, and one cannot see the "two women" who always ground together without thinking of Christ's prediction of sudden disaster when he said "two women shall be grinding at the mill, and one shall be taken and the other left." The kneading and baking are identical and comforming with biblical descriptions.

Making Cloth.

The art of weaving appears to be coeval with the first dawning of civilization. We find it practised with great skill by the Egyptians at a very early period. The "vestures of fine linen" such as Joseph wore, Genesis 41, 42, were the product of Egyptian looms. The Jews learned the art and so were able to produce the famous beautiful Tabernacle coverings. The Kalem pictures reproduce all these early and extant methods. This preservation of ancient peoples and customs seems to carry with it an Providential purpose; who can tell? Certain it is that a world of truth and knowledge is hidden therein, and should it be that destiny has fated that the modernizing influences of the West shall ultimately change "The unchanged East," these splendid film records will bear their powerful if silent testimony to the stability of the ages through which that section of the world has passed. The contrasts, comparisons and reflections which these pictures produce are educationally invaluable, and the whole educational world is debtor to these interesting pictures of "Egypt in the time of Moses."

NATURAL HISTORY.

The school world is again indebted to Mr. Paul J. Rainey for a series of pictures of wild animals in their native lair. Taken by this intrepid traveler, accompanied by Mr. J. C. Hemment as photographer in British East Africa, they exhibit thrilling encounters with lions, rhinos and leopards.

Thus there are brought into the class-room jungle scenes of thousands of miles away. A battle between a cheetah and a pack of dogs is described as most exciting, being shown to the finish, when the dead animal is hung up by the tail, with the dogs viewing the victim of their conquest. A captured baby rhino was sent to the zoological gardens in London, while a hyena and a wild dog are shown writhing in the traps in which they were caught and may now be seen in the New York zoological collection. This branch of educational cinematography is indebted to Mr. Rainey for his constant and valuable additions, which will always be most thoroughly welcomed and appreciated.

NOTES.

It is decidedly objectionable to read: "Approved by the National Board of Censorship" when a Biblical, scenic, industrial or any generally educational subject is shown upon the screen. The statement of such "approval" is entirely out of place under such circumstances and serves only to raise a doubt as to the suitability of the pictures shown. May the use of a superfluous piece of verbiage be omitted at the earliest possible date.

"An Excursion in New Zealand" (C. G. P. C.) is a recent release and is perhaps one of first scenics from the antipodes. It is a pleasure to anticipate the opportunity of becoming acquainted with this country now making a name for itself in the powers of self government and natural beauty combined with commercial prosperity. As an industrial picture, the same company are this week giving us "The Art of Printing," in which they flatteringly and, we trust, truly exhibit the Government Printing Office in Washington, D. C., as the most modern printery in the world.

Since the "dictograph" has played so important a part in many notable criminal cases, it has become a much-discussed instrument. Naturally the picture fans will wait with interest the appearance of the Selig picture entitled "Exposed by the Dictograph," in which the manner in which that wonderful little detector does its work will be shown. The picture tells the story of attempted bribery in high circles and

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

I HAVE just read a published account of the "singular triumph" scored by the Animated Weekly in securing the only picture of the Titanic wreck. In that account I have read that Chas. K. Hall, cameraman, who had been in Sydney, Cape Breton, awaiting a steamer that would carry him to St. Johns, Newfoundland, to take moving pictures of certain ceremonies there was obliged to charter a "big sea-going tug," owing to the non-arrival of the steamer; that, before starting for St. Johns, news of the Titanic wreck was received in Sydney and that "within twenty minutes his tug was pounding the seas, nosing its way to the disabled Titanic."

Evidently this was written in good faith, and sent in for publication before it was learned that the Titanic sank about two hours after she had been ripped by the submerged iceberg; but surely, after ascertaining the facts, the cancellation of the article should have been attended to by the writer.

It is too ghastly and horrible to imagine for a moment that this "big sea-going tug" could have been on the spot while the lives of brave men and devoted women went out under the faint glimmer of the stars, and that no hand was stretched out to save them.

No; there can be no moving pictures of this fearful catastrophe. To have any, reputed as being such, would be gruesome, ghastly and ghoulish.

From the Borderland of Rumor and Fact.

It is usually wise policy to deny Dame Rumor the privilege of publicity; but when one holds one's ear to the ground, in the borderland between rumor and fact, one often hears something that is worthy of credence.

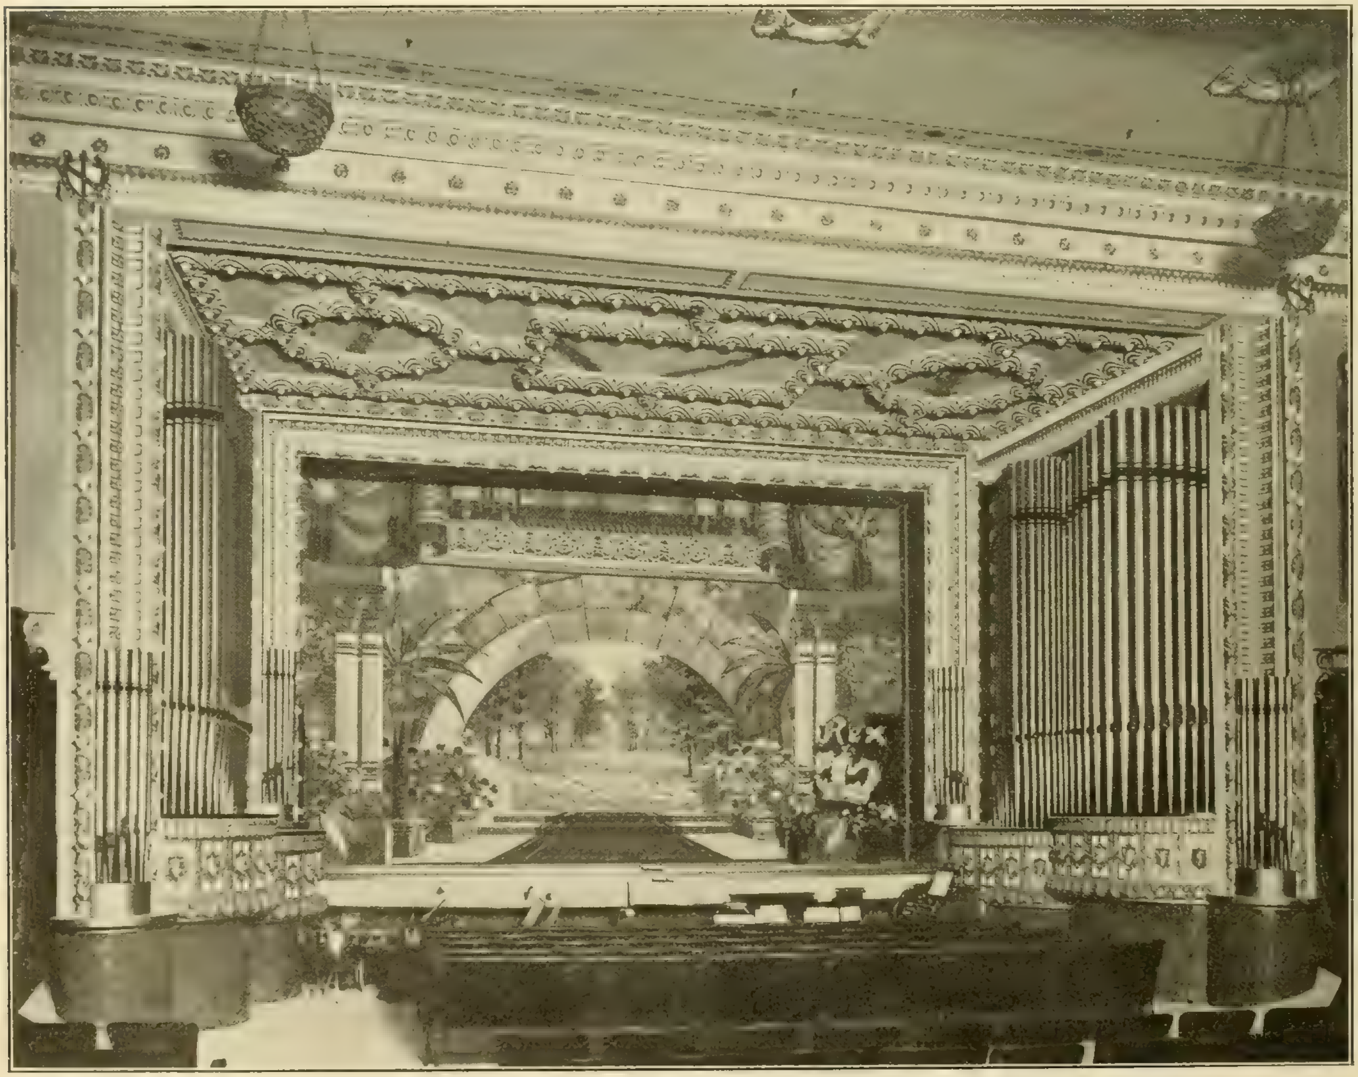
Just now, in Independent quarters, judging from these borderland indications, there is some cause for anxiety. The trouble does not come from the outside; it is within the ranks. There are clear indications of cleavage and, unless certain manufacturers show a disposition to consider the greatest good of the greatest number and that others can be brought to see that they also must be willing and ready to make concessions in order to maintain an unbroken front, there will be two Independent sections. One section favors a federalization of power; the other stands for the home rule principle.

At the root of the whole evil lies the ownership of exchanges by manufacturers. At present there is a grabbing of exclusive territory by exchanges, and a number of strongly intrenched manufacturers who own exchanges are trying to secure the most favored territory. It is needless to say that friction has already created ill-will.

For the good of the moving picture industry, especially the Independent end, it would be wise to call a halt and close up the ranks. The future is big with promise, and there is nothing to be gained by disruption. A live dog is better than a dead lion.

A Clergyman's Tribute to Motion Pictures.

The Rev. E. B. Stockton, a well-known scholar and divine in Orange, N. J., writes as follows to Wm. N. Selig, concerning "The Devil, the Servant and the Man," which was recently released:



View of Proscenium and Pipe Organ, Swanson's Rex Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah.

"You've done it and I want to thank you for it. For nearly three years I have been trying to convince church workers and educators, and also others more directly connected with the motion picture business, that it was quite possible to enact the person of Christ reverently and properly on the screen; and in your release, 'The Devil, the Servant and the Man,' I find that you have actually accomplished this with great reverence and perfect good taste.

"After studying the photoplay twice, carefully, the only criticism I could formulate was that the actor who took the part of our blessed Lord was a trifle too self-conscious; but I can thoroughly appreciate the difficulties under which he labored. Under the circumstances, the 'fault' is rather to his credit than otherwise, as it evinces the conscientiousness with which he was trying to carry out a part not only unaccustomed but very difficult, and one which he knew was likely to be severely criticized. I understand that the photoplay is a revival of one you put forward some time ago which was so criticized, and that your object in reproducing it was to show that the defects of the production could be corrected, and, incidentally, the progress of motion photography in the interval between the two releases. If so, although I have never seen the first release, I should say that you have been most successful, as I cannot see how even the most carping critic can find fault with the release I saw. Please feel at liberty to use this letter in any way you may wish."

An Operator's Joke Stops Panic.

"This blooming film is smoking, people. Will you please walk out slowly. There is no danger."

This admonition from Carl Shayer, the operator at the Glenwood Nickel theater, 3330 North Clark Street, about 11 o'clock Monday night, April 23, was given in such an apologetic voice that an audience of 150 rose jokingly and filed out. A woman pianist played.

Fire Battalion Marshal Conway arrived at the fire before all of the audience had left. Three reels were burned and a portion of the theater damaged. The operator was not burned.

Mismanagement of Former League Conventions.

John M. Bradlet states that several manufacturers of machines and of other supplies for motion pictures complain of the unsatisfactory treatment received at the convention in Dayton. They claim that the same mismanagement which prevailed at Cleveland and other places was the rule in Dayton. These manufacturers had hoped that the dissatisfaction over the management in one or more cases would have taught a lesson, but as they have been convinced otherwise, they feel disinclined to attend coming conventions, unless they are assured of more considerate treatment.

Manufacturers are of the opinion that it is needless to go to the expense of shipping goods and of sending demonstrators, if the whole time of a convention is to be given to closed meetings and banquets.

These manufacturers suggest that the local committee should appoint someone to take full charge of the exhibition, someone who could give all his time and attention and who could arrange such entertainments as would tend to bring a number of extra visitors to the exhibition. This could be arranged so that the members of the League could hold their closed meetings and without the least interference in the work of the convention.

It is known that on account of former mismanagement many advertisers who had paid for advertisements in the program and manufacturers who had donated to the general fund had no chance to exhibit their goods because the small available space for the exhibition of goods was taken up by men who had refused to advertise and who had contributed nothing to the general fund, and who had done nothing, in fact, to promote the success of the convention.

The mismanagement at Dayton was everywhere conspicuous. The program was not carried out on scheduled time; there was general confusion. Many members wore committee badges, but a general director was lacking. President Neff in his opening speech had to make an apology for the mismanagement of the taking of the first motion picture at the train, and the few feet of film, shown in Pathe's Weekly No. 16, confirms the above statement.

It is a well-known fact that Mr. Bradlet, who devoted much time and expense to the compilation and publication of the Dayton program, lost both time and money in the venture, although many who attended the convention openly acknowledged that his program had been instrumental in bringing them to the convention.

Chicago Film Brevities.

F. E. Nielsen, formerly owner of the Kimball theater, Kimball and Fullerton avenues, this city, has secured a ten years' lease of the Parkway theater, on North Clark street near Diversey Boulevard. The Parkway is practically a new house, which was built specially for vaudeville about a year ago. It will seat 700 people. Mr. Nielsen took charge Monday, April 23, and will close the house for extensive changes. The interior will be decorated throughout, and a new operating room will be built. An indirect lighting system will be installed. A $3,000 pipe organ has been purchased and a grand piano in addition will furnish the music. Musical and high-class singing numbers, with a high-class Licensed service, will form the program. Mr. Nielsen expects to have the house in readiness for opening about the middle of May. Ten cents admission will be charged. The neighborhood in which the Parkway is situated promises to furnish a splendid patronage. Mr. Nielsen is a modern, high-class manager, and it is expected that he will make a great success in his new house. The World and his many friends wish him well.

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Lyric, Minneapolis, writes that he ran the "Maine" pictures again by popular request, under the auspices of the Minneapolis Journal and the Board of Education. The pictures were repeated for three days with great success. Mr. Rothapfel believes that this is the first instance in which the press and the Board of Education joined hands in boosting any pictures. Mr. Rothapfel also states that E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe were his guests recently at the Lyric. Mr. Sothern was very enthusiastic at what he saw, and he and Miss Marlowe were delighted with the presentation given at the theater.

Walter L. Rubert special representative of the Motion Picture Screen Co., of Shelbyville, Ind., was a visitor at the World office last week. Mr. Rubert stated that he had spent about two months in the East recently, and had placed quite a number of orders. He is much encouraged by the fine prospects for both the mirror and transparent screens in every place visited. In February last he placed a mirror screen in the Nemo Theater, Johnstown, Pa. This house is owned by J. M. S. Blauvelt, of New York City, and is managed by Michael McCann. It is said to be one of the best conducted theaters in the country. It seats 984 people on the ground floor. The mirror screen has been giving great satisfaction to the management ever since it was installed. Mr. Rubert stated that a mirror screen had been shipped to Capetown, South Africa, a short time ago, and that orders are being received from all parts of the world. Mr. Rubert left on a trip through Iowa, to make various calls as requested by managers of theaters. From Iowa, he will proceed to Kansas City and other cities in the Middle West.

A special exhibition of "The Coming of Columbus" was given in the Fine Arts Theater, Thursday, April 25, to Licensed exhibitors of the city, on invitation of the General Film Co. and the Selig Polyscope Co. The Fine Arts Theater, managed by Lincoln J. Carter, is located on Michigan Avenue and seats 900 people. It was chosen, because of its convenient location and capacity, for the occasion.

Fred A. Apfelbaum, secretary of the Levi Company, Inc., 1560 Broadway, New York, was in the city last week and made a pleasant call at the World office. Mr. Apfelbaum stated that he had closed with the American Song Slide & Poster Co., of this city, with offices in the First National Bank Building, for the rights for motion song slides of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska. The rights of all other states have been placed. The first release will be made April 27.

A. Powell, owner and manager of the May theater, on May and 69th streets, this city, is very much pleased with the success of his new house. He is running Licensed films furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch, 429 South Wabash Ave.

J. E. Berkson, owner of the Roseland and Hamilton theaters of Chicago, and of the Family Theater in Indiana Harbor, Ind., was a visitor to the World office last week. Mr. Berkson is an intelligent and enterprising exhibitor, whose theaters are all well managed. He reports business very satisfactory. He uses Independent service, which is furnished by the Laemmle exchange.

The Exhibitors' Advertising Co., of Chicago, will move into more commodious quarters next week, the available floor space in their present location being inadequate to handle the present increasing volume of business. The new offices and poster rooms will occupy the entire second floor of the Hobbs Building, at 68 W. Washington Street. This company was organized just ten months ago and through the enterprise and business ability of its managers, a trade has been built up that extends throughout the country.

The May number of the Photoplay Magazine, just at hand, shows very considerable improvement over previous issues. Its size is increased, and a better quality of paper is used. The new cover is of handsome design and quite attractive. Glancing through its pages, it is noted that three new special departments are included in this issue. They will doubtless prove interesting and instructive to readers. The Photoplay Magazine will be issued hereafter on the 22d of each month.

PICTURE MEN WILL PLAY BALL.

Pathe Freres' Baseball Club has been organized, fully equipped and uniformed, and from all accounts is some swell team. This aggregation of popular Pathe players has been out on the practice diamond for some time now and is remarkably fast. The team is under the management of Mr. Harry Handworth and it is open to accept a challenge from any similar team of any motion picture manufacturer in the vicinity of New York. From all accounts the challenging team will have an awful run for its money. The tenth member of the team is "Mephistopheles," a goat which is the mascot of the team. Mefisto will be seen at all the games wearing his new summer blazer and bearing the slogan of the team: "You can't get our goat!" Address all communications regarding games to Mr. Harry Handworth, Pathe Freres' Studio, 1 Congress St., Jersey City Heights, N. J.

LUBIN COMEDY COMPANY RETURNS.

The Lubin Stock Company, of Jacksonville, Florida, Director Arthur D. Hotaling, returned to the home plant, Philadelphia, last Thursday. They report enjoying a most delightful winter, many pictures were made illustrative of the local atmosphere and folk-lore of the Peninsula. With the exception of two slight automobile collisions, no mishap occurred. One of them cut up the Lubin machine rather badly, but Hans and Fritz, who were seeing the sights of Jacksonville, were not hurt. The company will take work easy at the home plant for a few months and then make another trip, probably to Alaska.

"HAL" REID—ACTOR, AUTHOR, DIRECTOR

The Reliance Company has made another progressive move, this time in securing the services of Mr. Hal Reid, who will hereafter direct all of the Reliance productions. Mr. Reid, besides being a director of note, has written and directed such well-known photoplays as "Human Hearts" and "Jim and Joe," for Selig, and "The Red Cross Martyr," "The Seventh Son," "At Scrogginses Corners," "Old Love Letters," "War," "The Woman Haters," "The Victoria Cross," "Love in the Ghetto," and "A Rich Man's Son," for the Vitagraph. He is also a dramatic playwright of international fame. Among his greatest successes will be found "The Confession," "Human Hearts," "The Night Before Christmas," "At Cripple Creek," "The Street Singer," "A Midnight Marriage," and one hundred and eleven others. Mr. Reid has the honor of being the only director who has ever filmed the President of the United States and royalty of the British reigning family, by written consent. Among the prominent members supporting him in his new stock company will be Gertrude Robinson, Edith Lyle, Virginia Westbrook, Susan Balfour, Lola Lieferman, Wallace Reid, Charles Herman Sigman, and Robert Tabor. The first Reid releases will be "Father Beauclaire," under date of May 25th. These Reliance Reid releases may be relied upon and should be eagerly looked forward to.

HAL REID.

NEW THEATER AT PUEBLO, COLORADO.

Workman construction has been commenced upon a new picture theater for Pueblo, Colorado, to be managed by Mr. J. M. Morris. Plans call for a house seating 1,200, with a stage 32 feet by 50 feet, for the accommodation of vaudeville or other attractions if desired. It is anticipated that the house will be ready for occupancy about the latter part of May and will run during the summer as an exclusive picture theater.

The St. Louis Motion Picture Company, in addition to preparing their two weekly Shamrock releases, are preparing a feature picture claiming to surpass anything that has been produced in this country. It has not been decided whether this feature will be released on a state rights basis or disposed of to some feature film company. Watch for announcement regarding the same.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN.

"THE SPANISH CAVALIER" (Edison).

An Edison Drama After the Well-Known Song, With Music.

By M. Komroff.

ONE thousand feet of film places us in the heart of the Spanish Inquisition, with all its tortures, thrills and romances. The acting and settings help to portray the spirit of the time when heresy was taken seriously.

Two lovers on a balcony, a Spanish garden and a promise end the introduction. A priest is next taken into confidence and secretly weds the lovers. The cavalier is called away to war and, there being no photographer in those days, the lady traces the shadow of his profile upon the wall; then they part. While the husband is away at war, one of the powerful leaders of the Inquisition wooes the lady and is, of course, refused. This causes the fiery Spaniard to seek revenge. The portrait is discovered and the lady's maid arrested and tortured upon the rack till she is forced to accuse her mistress of heresy. The lady is again asked to marry the leader of the Inquisition and upon refusing is cast into a dungeon, charged with heresy. The good priest informs the cavalier of the episode and at night they visit the prison, kill the watchman and with his keys enter the dungeon. The priest bolts the door with his arm as others attempt to enter, and his arm does not leave the staples until a sword is run through a crack and pierces his body. The lovers in the meanwhile have fled, locking the doors behind them, and in a distant land they live safe from the fears of the Inquisition.

The picture was well acted, with just enough of the Spanish fire and passion to contrast it with other historic periods. We note with interest the ogee arches and Moorish architecture used in the balcony scene; the producer was right—Moorish workmen and architecture were used in Spain until the year 1491. The film as a whole is a fine bit of photography. It was released on April 19th and shown the same day in Proctor's 125th Street Theater, New York.

Music for "The Spanish Cavalier."

The story of this film is told in an old song of the same name. The song, however, is too short to entirely fill the picture, and, although it may be used at the start and finish, we need some descriptive and dramatic music for the scenes between.

1. "The Spanish Cavalier," during the balcony scene.
2. "Wedding March," Mendelssohn, as they visit the priest and are married.
3. "I Love Thee," Grieg, as the lady sketches the portrait of the cavalier, and as they part.
4. "Rhapsody No. 2," Liszt, the first movement, while the Inquisition leader makes love to the lady. And also during the fortune telling scene.
5. "Pilgrims' Chorus," Wagner, as the lady's maid is arrested and tortured.
6. "Chanson Triste," Tchaikowsky (Op. 40, No. 2), as the lady visits the priest and is arrested.
7. "Pilgrims' Chorus" as she is tried.
8. "Nachtstücke," Op. 23, R. Schumann, as she is placed in the prison.
9. "Traümerei," R. Schumann, as the cavalier sleeps under the tree.
10. "Polonaise," Chopin, Op. 40, No. 1, during the rescue of the lady.
11. "The Spanish Cavalier" as the lovers sing in a distant land.

PLAYING "A ROAD AGENT'S LOVE" (Essanay).

By M. Komroff.

A simple and effective way of playing "A Road Agent's Love" is to four themes or pieces, one dramatic, one descriptive, one sad, and a love song. They are then played as the thought of the picture indicates.

Dramatic—As the women try to lift the trunk, Marche Grotesque—Singing or Polonaise, by E. McDowell, are both good.

Love Song—As the young man lifts the trunk for them, Elgar's Love's Greeting Op. 12, or Rubinstein's Melody in F may be used for this.

Sad—At the home of John Mackley, who cannot meet the note, Greig's Asa's Tod or Moszkowski's Valse Melancolique, Op. 31, No. 3.

Descriptive—Something more spirited for a contrast and to be used for the horseback riding and capture of Bob Fargo, Delibe's Pizzicato (from Ballet "Sylvia") is light and lively. Play this when Fargo is hiding behind the rock and the stage nears the scene, but as soon as Lucy appears return to your previous Love Song.

Dramatic—As she returns home to learn that she must marry the money lender.

Sad—As she writes Fargo the letter—the same sad selection used before.

Love Song—As Fargo writes her in return and goes back to Rattlesnake Clave.

Descriptive—As they ride for the bandit.

Dramatic—As she pleads with the sheriff for Fargo.

Descriptive (lively)—As the mortgage is paid off with the "reward" money.

Love Song—As Lucy tells her mother that she will wait for her lover to return from prison.

PLAYING "TEACHING A LIAR A LESSON" (Essanay).

By M. Komroff.

The theme of this picture is so simple that it is useless for us to outline its music. It may be noted, however, that the action takes place in Russia; the wide-awake pianist will get the spirit by inserting Russian music. A short classified list of Russian music, popular in this country, is given below; one played from each class would just fill the picture.

Dramatic — P. Lasson — Crescendo. Rachmaninoff — Romanze, Op. 8, No. 2. P. Tschaikowsky—Chanson Triste, Op. 40, No. 2. Rachmaninoff—Prelude in C sharp Minor.

Love Songs—Tschaikowsky—Romance, Op. 5, or June, Op. 37, No. 6. Stojowski—Chant d'Amour, Op. 26, No. 3. Rubinstein—Melody in F. Iljinsky—Berceuse.

Descriptive — Karganoff — Sanott. Kowalski — Salut à Pesth. Arensky—Nocturne E Flat Minor. Liadow—Music Box, Op. 32.

Does It—Or Will It Pay?

By L. G. Coover.

I SUPPOSE the best and easiest way to start is to blurt it right out: "I am a scenario writer." Now I don't set it down because I am pea-cockish about it, neither did I hesitate because I was ashamed of the claim. Just a case of writer's fright, something like stage fright you know.

But to be serious or to the point. Does scenario writing pay? Can a person earn a living as a free lance scenario writer? Can a really competent or gifted scenario writer make enough to compensate for his time, thought and originality? Is the game worth sticking to? Has it any future promise? What would seem to explain the present poor conditions as concerns the steady, striving scenario writer? Can the writer himself help to better general conditions and so better his own? In a various order I shall try to make answers to each question, based on my own experience, observation, acquaintanceship and rather close touch with New York City conditions, where is the greatest market for disposals or sales of scripts.

Scenario writing pays if you can sell your stuff, it's the same thing with a peanut stand. But I do not believe many can earn a living at it as free lance writers for this reason: There isn't a big enough market. I doubt very much whether the combined market purchases fifty scenarios a week; for a number of studios have their staff writers or writers under a retaining fee. With less than fifty being bought and hundreds of an average sort being written each week, it doesn't reason out that many can live by scenario writing alone. Still if your confidence in your own ability is strong enough or has been proven, try it in spite of my conclusion to the contrary. But to those who will heed, I offer this advice—write all the stories you will or can, but don't, no! never! depend on them for your room and board and other things.

It doesn't seem to me that the regular or competent writer or the scenario-gifted writer receives a payment commensurate to his time, thought and originality. I mean the person who is just a scenario writer. To explain in a comparative manner. A few of the fiction or magazine writers have received fat prices for scenarios which in a comparative sense weren't worth it, whereas their magazine stories stand out and are worth the payment they receive and the reputation attending.

A man may be ever so clever a fiction writer and fail ignominiously as a scenario writer. A story is as it reads—a scenario isn't. The story writer depends upon dialogue for the greater part. The scenario writer upon action or physical assembling in various numbers. His is the imagination of the eye, as the painter or illustrative artist. The story writer uses another phase of imagining, his is to the mind and the ear sense and upon the reader's own imagination. I know that good story writers have failed to write acceptable scenarios. And as I've reasoned it would seem but logical that they might, or at least do no better than a fair average. Yet story writers receive a decent sort of payment for their work. And scenario writers do not. Lest I clash with some of the buyers of scenarios, let me say now that I aim my remarks at and in behalf of the actual scenario writer, the writer who has written and sold at least ten scripts and will continue to write and sell in a manifold measure. That writer is not receiving enough for his labor and invention of plot. This goes in an unqualified sense. But whose is the fault, Mr. or Lady Scenario Writer? Why, yours more than anyone's. See here, business is business—if you will not ask more for your wares and will accept the amount we are all kicking on, then the fault is ours. Why should the companies voluntarily raise the price without a business reason? Writers alone are to blame by suffering a continuance of unpriced scenarios. Start in and do your stuff better, give it more time, thought and care in writing and development, add the quality or master touch and then ask a price for it. Then stop your kicking—because if you have the story the producer likes and wants, ten, fifteen or twenty-five dollars more isn't going to keep him off of it. He will pay.

Stick it out, win your spurs Old Man, I beg your pardon, Fair Lady, too. Make yourself known as a scenario writer and your day will come. The producer is depending on you for his material, you are the one to improve its quality. Study and improve your output, so that just a glance will distinguish yours from the unwashed writer's product. Why, the game is just in its infancy and you're one of the pioneers. Think of the future, days when you are older, and how pleasant and comfortable a way it will be to earn money. But don't dabble in the game now—get in it. Ninety per cent. of the scenarios that flood the mails are written by "dabblers," persons of three or four ideas, then their bolt is shot.

My summed-up advice to you, if you will accept it, is this: Don't expect to make big money at present—think more of making good for the future. Several have made good and are making big money. Better general conditions by bettering your own. Do better work and ask what you know it is worth to you. You are an equal factor in the sale of a script. Be that factor. Stick it out and some day you can go to the producer and "talk turkey" to him—and he'll meet you in style, too. Just now the sieve is but sifting the gross—there will come out much dross and there will be some gold—it's up to you which pile you land in. Personally I don't give a "dum" things are as they is. And to the actual, stick-it-out scenario writer I extend my "skinny right." He and she will understand me.

"THE MUSICIAN'S LOVE" (Great Northern).

"The Musician's Love" is a pretty romance of the Northland with picturesque settings that gives it a charm that is delectable. Errol, a poor musician, loves Irma, the belle of the village and charms her by his sweet music and gallantry. Andrew, the son of a wealthy tradesman, is attracted by the beauty and charming simplicity of the girl but she shrinks from him. There is a dance on the village green and Errol plays. Irma is forbidden to go to the fete by her mother and wanders down by a pretty stream. Missing her from the gathering Andrew seeks her out and forces his attentions upon her. He is repulsed and, in his anger and mortification, attacks her, hurls her to the sward where she is found by a hunter and taken to his home.

Scene from "The Musician's Love" (Great Northern).

Returning to the happy party making merry Andrew attacks Errol and in the struggle the prized violin of the musician is broken and Errol is disconsolate. The father of the petted bully is informed of the actions of the son by the hunter, who brings the young man into his presence, and the parent denounces his offspring in a most scathing manner. Irma seeks out Errol and endeavors to comfort him for the loss of the precious instrument; but he is disconsolate and his grief is pitiful.

The father of Andrew, wishing to make reparation for the gross acts of his son, seeks and is fortunate in purchasing an instrument the handiwork of an old master, an almost priceless violin. He buys it at a fabulous price and goes to the cottage of Errol where he is confronted with a sad tableau, Irma and the mother of Errol endeavoring to distract the attention of the musician from his grief. The violin is presented to Errol, with a profuse apology for the actions of the son and the father leaves.

The violin is attuned and Errol plays. The effect is marvelous, the sweet tones of the instrument enchanting Errol and his listeners. Irma takes Errol in her arms and their troubles are forgotten.

"The Greatest Thing in the World"

(Vitagraph).

"MARSH" WILDER has the limelight all to himself in this picture. It is a Marshall P. Wilder picture from first to last, and offers an opportunity for that well-known comedian to do some original work that can well be appreciated by his many friends. Mr. Wilder, through the greater part of his prominent career, has been known as a funny man. Nobody ever accused him of being a play actor, because he was always telling funny stories. But, although he has achieved success as a humorist, Mr. Wilder, in this picture, makes it known very decisively that he possesses the dramatic instinct. The picture calls for acting of a high order. The wonderful mobility of Mr. Wilder's face is one of his best assets for moving picture work. In the department of facial expression, he is in a class with Miss Florence Turner, and it helps him very much.

The story is an idyllic little thing with an especial interest for children. There are only two principals, Mr. Wilder and little Helen Costello. Mr. Wilder essays the part of a miserly mender of shoes, who entertains a grudge against the world at large. To him the greatest thing in the world is money. It is his only friend, and he lives and works alone in a small, miserable set of rooms.

Love to him is a thing unknown. But at last there comes a change in his way of living, when one day he encounters a little lost girl on the street. He takes the child to his humble workshop and makes her comfortable there to the best of his ability. It is a great delight to him to observe that the child has no fear of him. All his life he has been shunned by mankind, and particularly by children, not realizing, of course, that the fault is principally his own, on account of his bad temper. For several days he cares for the child, making her comfort his great object. Unconsciously he loves the child, but he does not fully realize it until her parents come to take her away. It is then that he realizes that not money but love is "The Greatest Thing in the World." From that time on he determines to be good to little folks and, as the pictures closes, we observe the happiness he obtains by making others happy.

NOTES OF INTEREST.

Pathe's Weekly No. 17 will be of interest to all exhibitors of the moving picture, besides a large host of others, inasmuch as it contains a representation of the obsequies of the late J. P. Chalmers, editor of the Moving Picture World, taken in the Mount Kensico cemetery, New York. This last tribute of respect finds a most fitting place in the world-wide illustrated news.

"The Raven," by Edgar Allan Poe, as filmed by the Eclair is anticipated with pleasure as all such productions are. May it come up to the standard required and usually met by the American Eclair, who are at the same time giving the educational world two additions in "Arabian Customs" and "Andalusian Dancers." The former depicts Old World scenes of both Moslem and Jewish customs. The latter is doubtless intended to be more picturesque, as it shows the beautiful gardens of the Alcazar, Spanish dancers and characteristic musical and poetic manners.

The French film manufacturers keep us fairly well supplied with a continuous series of beautiful European scenery. Pisa and Assissi, Italy, are among the latest. Would that there might be a wider interchange of scenic pictures, making the Occident and the Orient better acquainted with each other.

"TREASURE ISLAND."

The Edison Company Attempts the Famous Stevenson Story in One Reel.

"Treasure Island" has long been considered one of Robert Louis Stevenson's best stories. It deals with pirates and hidden treasure and an expedition to recover the pirate's loot, supposed to have been buried at some distant island in the South seas. Stevenson related the circumstances leading to the recovery of the treasure in a most realistic manner, and the incidents told of are well adapted to the uses of the motion picture maker. In transferring this subject to the film, the Edison Company has given a series of scenes which illustrate that story as well as is possible in a thousand feet of film, but which emphasize the insufficiency of that thousand feet to properly portray the story. The picture was made under the direction of Mr. Dawley, working in Bermuda, which locality affords splendid scenic backgrounds, required to give the proper atmosphere.

Scene from "Treasure Island" (Edison).

The pictured story opens at the village inn with the death of the old pirate who carries the secret of the hidden treasure. The scene is quickly transferred to Treasure Island where the hunt for the buried treasure begins. Other scenes show the stockade, the fight with the pirates and the discovery of the treasure through the instrumentality of old Ben Gunn, who has it hidden in a cave.

There are some splendid characterizations in this picture. Addison Rothermel takes the part of Jimmie Hawkins and old one-legged John Silver is excellently depicted by Benjamin F. Wilson. Those who have read the story will readily recognize the scenes shown. The photography is excellent. The subject will be released May 10.

"THE BANK PRESIDENT'S SON" (Edison).

One of the series of pictures taken in Maine last Winter by the Edison Company, to be released May 14th, under the title of "The Bank President's Son." The son is a profligate young fellow and spends much of his time and money upon his fiancée until his father, out of patience with his shiftlessness, demands that he go to work and gives him a job in the bank. The cashier of the bank has been gambling and appropriates some of the bank's cash for that purpose. When the loss is discovered the president's son is accused, and the evidence produced is so strong that the father causes his arrest. His fiancée now comes to the rescue as the only believer in the boy's innocence. About this time a race on the ice has been promoted in which the fiancée drives the winning horse to victory, thereby winning a purse which enables her to employ a lawyer to extricate her lover from his predicament. At this race the cashier of the bank drops a "marker," which shows that he has bet $500 on the losing horse. When confronted with a question as to where he obtained so much money for gambling purposes, the cashier confesses that it was he and not the president's son that robbed the bank. Thereupon the innocent boy is liberated and with his fiancée receives her father's blessings, while the real criminal takes his proper place in jail. The novelty of this picture is the race on the ice, which is an annual feature at Waterville, Maine, where the picture was taken.

"EVERY ROSE HAS ITS STEM" (Edison).

A clever comedy has been produced by the Edison players under the title, "Every Rose Has Its Stem." The story is that of a young clerk, who has been making love to the little girl of the flower store, but who becomes infatuated with the beautiful stenographer later on. The clerk and the flower girl are very happily in love with each other until the stenographer appears on the scene, when the fickle young man transfers his attentions to the siren of the typewriter. This stenographer is a type of one who has been petted and feted until nothing counts with her. Consequently when the clerk pawns his watch to buy her $20 worth of roses, she treats his gift with haughty indifference, much to the young man's discomfiture. The fact that he is of so little consequence to the queenly stenographer, makes him glad to go back to the flower girl. There is a touch of sentiment in the pictured story that lends charm to the subject. Miss Gertrude McCoy's portrayal of the stenographer is clever. This picture will be released on May 11.

THREE-REEL SUBJECTS FROM ESSANAY.

With the beginning of spring, the Essanay Company announces it has in contemplation six mammoth three reel releases, definite announcement of which will appear soon. The Chicago studio is humming with the preparation of the gigantic three reel masterpiece, "The Conquest of Mexico," first announcement of which has already been made. The costuming of this wonderful subject will occupy the attention of busy costumers for weeks alone, the scenic work is already progressing with great rapidity, and the company, over two hundred in number, will soon go into rehearsal. Every attention and care to detail will be given this great subject toward making it a true and accurate representation of the early history of the Aztec Empire, ruled by that mighty monarch, Montezuma, and of the conquest of his proud domain by the doughty warrior, Cortez, and his brave followers. Every custom and tradition of the Aztecs has been brought to light after countless hours of study and research, and these have been inserted into the manuscripts for the production, and are being carried out accurately in order that historians and the most learned students will find little to censure.

GOLDEN GATE EXCHANGE IN PORTLAND.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange, of San Francisco, Cal., announces that it is opening a branch exchange under the management of Lester L. Kahn at Portland, Oreg., and Los Angeles, Cal., where all the good feature films produced will be handled. The Golden Gate claims its origin with the Nickelodeon Company which was formed four years ago.

"Beauty and the Beast"

A Tale of Modern Political and Social Life, Written from a Rex Picture Drama.

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

It was after a last waltz when I heard the whispered word that thrills, when the lilies she wore were expiring and it seemed as though she might breathe her last, so faint was the "yes" she uttered. Her tender body, clad in silken web as fine as the tissue of our dreams, was tightly enfolded in my arms and my senses were steeped in the fragrance of her hair. "Is it forever?" I asked hoarsely.

She peeped up with a tender reproach in her eyes—the Beauty was a tiny thing, and I so tall that she had to cock her head on one side to obtain a full view of my face. "Forever!" she lisped—it was all she could do under the circumstances.

I looked down at her adoringly—I loved every detail of her figure and its investiture—"I am giving you my heart's whole offering," I said, "and I care not if you make my happiness your toy, only I dread the day you'll tire of the plaything." Even before I touched my lips to hers I used all the eloquence at my command to play on the quivering strings of her passionate heart. It was my voice alone that won her.

What was I? More or less a political adventurer by profession, Senator Lewis Lincoln by title, quite as plain and lanky as the immortal President in physique, though lacking even a reflection of his great mental gifts. I had only a voice. I lacked charm of manner, was morbidly self-conscious, and was so sensitive about my homely face—few uglier ones were ever cast in human clay—that I had scarcely dared hope to quicken the soul of a woman so sweet as Cleo, a mocking little debutante, though the best-loved of the season.

She was a Mademoiselle Caprice, gay talkative, restless, and as inconstant as a humming bird. She was fond of excitement, enjoyed dancing quite as much for the variety of opportunity it afforded her as for the exercise, and it was impossible for her to be serious for any length of time. Strange that a girl so light-hearted should select from a host of worshipers one so selfishly occupied with political projects and much given in solitude to meditative gloom! Stranger still would it be if she ever settled down into the humdrum existence of a devoted wife, but it was not at all remarkable that we should all idolize every ounce of her—she was too fairy-like to be measured and too spiritual to be thought of in pounds.

After we were married I swore that no shadow of my making should ever come between us, and no woman, good or bad, ever held husband or lover in thrall so binding. I was simply her good genius, created to guide or aid her, or provide as she willed, the slave of her lamp. Her smile was my sunshine; her tears like her kisses were like spring rain upon the flower of my adoration. There is nothing in the world like unto the love of such darling women; its possession is a supreme counterbalance to the ever-present fluttering of Death's wings; those who have not known it have not lived.

What man ever gives a thought to the eternal triangle when he brings the friend he knows to be true into pleasant relations with the woman he loves most, especially when she is giving the best of her sweet self to the husband she has promised in good faith to honor? I did this with Phil Surrey several months after my marriage because I loved him as he had loved her. He made no secret of the fact that we were rivals; he attended my wedding in a manly way; he went away to hide his grief and disappointment from our eyes, and he only came back to hazard his private fortune in active support of my cause when I was running for high office, and even then he was acting from the noblest motives in the world. There was no half-heartedness about impulsive Phil; he would go to extremes for a friend, and he not only risked all he had but threw the weight of his tremendous influence in my favor with lavish generosity.

I knew every weak spot in Phil Surrey's character. He had a fiery temper and was flattered by his wide-spread popularity into a form of boyish vanity. He was so good to look at, so impulsive, so kind-hearted, so absolutely loyal to friends that I readily excused a childish preference shown by Cleo for his company in general society, and even when they were more closely grouped in my home. I gave him the freedom of my house because I knew him to be incapable of tarnishing my name or his own honor. What then could cause a deviation of the magnetic needle from the course it was expected to point?

What?

I can not answer; I can only illustrate.

Back mid the intricate and beautiful design of evolution is often found a tendency which has greatly puzzled the greatest scientists of this age, a variation from type. It may result from conditions of environment, from an innate adaptability to shifting circumstances, or may be merely one of those unaccountable changes which are constantly taking place in the working out of the divine purpose, but there is no doubt that it enters into the mystery and manifestation of human attributes. I noted a change in Cleo's conduct as soon as I became absorbed in the activities of my campaign, but I ascribed it to her youth and natural fondness for companions of her age and tastes. Phil was not much older and very much of a boy in his conduct.

The crisis came one night at an important function, an official reception, where I was compelled to give attention to my constituents and entrust my wife to Phil's keeping. They disappeared while I was engaged in making friends for my cause, and a vague uneasiness seized me. I began to realize that the child had played long enough with the toy of my happiness. All might have gone well, however, but for the accidental discovery of their mad infatuation in one of those incidents that turn the course of human lives. I went in search of them in a moment of relief from professional duties and found them together in a small withdrawing room otherwise unoccupied.

"She recoiled from his embrace, tottered backward toward the fire."

Cleo and Phil were standing before a grate fire, clasped in each other's arms, he kissing her passionately and she responding with all the fervor of her nature. A wave of murderous impulse clouded my brain for a moment, succeeded by a despairing sense of shame. I stood struggling between furious resentment and heart-sickening weakness when she saw me. She recoiled from his embrace, tottered backwards toward the fire and would have fallen but for a protective instinct that dominated every other sentiment within me. All the pity in my heart went out to the frail, little creature as I caught her in my arms—she had fainted—but I said nothing. The glance I gave Phil Surrey seemed to transfix him. He stood with bowed head, incapable of movement while Cleo slowly revived. When she had recovered consciousness, she accepted my arm in submissive silence, and we left the room.

No mental readjustment followed our return home. She stood benumbed while I made a few preparations to leave her free from other restraint than the dictates of her own heart. No formal arrangements were necessary—practically all my property, including the home, was in my wife's name—and I left without imposing an explanation. I went out into the night like a hunted creature, seeking some avenue of escape foom the haunting demons of my own thoughts.

I did not realize at the time that our sudden departure from the reception, I looking like the Beast I was called and she the Beauty that she was by natural endowment, might be made the subject of misconstruction by my opponents on the eve of election, but they closely connected the scene with the prompt departure for an unknown destination of Phil Surrey and even dared intimate that my wife had left home because of my cruel treatment. This was more than I could bear, I who had refused her no wish, including that deep in her heart, though unvoiced. I went back to my former home at night and found it deserted.

My defeat was inevitable, and when it was accomplished, when friends fell away like autumn leaves, my downfall became complete. I took to drink. During an unknown period I seemed to be in a strange land, one of isolation and desolation unbearable, where I was set apart for all time from other men, merely living over and over again the colorless days of existence which had preceded and now sharply contrasted with those of ineffable joy spent in the companionship of my wife. I was forever alone, beyond the reach of human sympathy, an outcast from the society I had striven to adorn.

I was in this state of mind, on the verge of demoralization, when I received a letter from Phil Surrey stating that he had gone into the wilderness immediately after the incident at the reception, was prospecting in solitude and found it good for his soul. I went immediately to join the man who had wrecked my life with some wicked purposes in my mind. I found him after a long, conscience-clearing ride on horse, and he greeted me as though he was longing as much as was I for companionship and sympathy. We were brought into a relation almost fraternal by the circumstances—he took me into partnership—but neither of us knew what was in the other's secret thoughts.

Phil had discovered a small quantity of native gold in the sand and gravel of a mountain stream which could be separated from the refuse by the slow process of washing in a cradle, and at this sort of work we labored for months, our only knowledge of what was going on in the world coming from old newspapers occasionally procured at a far-distant station. He attempted on several occasions to tell me all about it, but I refused to listen. Any man will tell a golden lie to save a woman's good name, and he will do this with masterly ingenuity to the injured husband. I could accomplish nothing at the scene of my wrecked reputation and former happiness, but I could afford to bide my time in brotherly attitude at the side of my destroyer.

A break came when Phil found a personal in one of the home papers asking Beast to forgive Beauty and come to her aid—she was lying ill at her mother's house. There was no other course open but to respond. I was ready to devote the last energies of my existence to saving the little humming bird who had fluttered away among the flowers of her caprice. I had not ceased to love her. Even when the sands of life are running out, when the fire of man's passion is in the soft glow of sunset, his mind turns most fondly to his days of true love. They are the sweetest of all to remember. My heart ached for the sound of her childish voice, for the mere fragrance of her presence.

"I may never see you again," said Phil, when I was mounted and ready to ride away.

I turned my head away from him. I had my hoard of gold in my pocket, and he was utilizing this instant of distraction to affix all he had accumulated to my saddle bag. I did not discover what he had done until it was too late for me to return what he offered in compensation for destroying all I held to be of real value in the world, so I replied with an ugly significance that might keep him guessing: "I will come back," I said, "if she dies." Then I rode away on the wings of hope.

The fighting male depends upon pugnacity and determination to sustain him in an emergency. These, with his cunning brain and highly-cultivated physical strength, have enabled him to overcome prodigious obstacles in his evolution, but a woman's means of defense sometimes lies in her weaknesses. I suspected that my wife had fallen back on sex prerogatives for a defense, but I found a physician at her mother's house and was immediately conducted to a dimly-lighted bedroom where Cleo was lying very still and white, and left standing on the threshold. I was breathless until she spoke.

"Close the door," she said faintly. "I have something to tell you."

I did so and advanced a few faltering steps. She was as beautifully dressed as on her bridal night, all in white with an abundance of lace to set off her girlish arms and innocent face. My eyes burned with tears that would not flow. She lifted one tiny hand from the coverlid and beckoned. I went to the bedside and kneeled down there. The clasp of her slender fingers in mine thrilled me as it always had; I pressed my lips on them and sighed.

"Has Phil told you?" she asked.

I found voice at last. "He tried to explain," I said.

"You would not believe him," she guessed.

"I would not listen," I said gloomily.

"Will you believe me?" she implored.

I gulped—there was sharp pain in my breast—and bowed my head. She told me gently that women often denied themselves to make others happy, whereas men seldom did. Wives often gave all they had to give in their natural longing for affection and sympathy with scant return from their husbands. She had done her best to keep me close to her heart, she was satisfied with our position and means, she would have enjoyed working at my side, but I drew away from her to follow my own ambitions regardless of her happiness and deliberately threw her into the society of a man who loved her as much as I did, who was more willing to make life what she had expected it would be with me.

My vision cleared as my wife held up the mirror of truth before my eyes. I began to realize that a few words mumbled by an ecclesiastic or a city official did not entirely constitute marriage. A man could only wed spiritually by welding the authorized relation with unfailing affection, even if the act involved sacrificing his dearest ambitions. He must choose between selfish gratification and more enduring mutual happiness. There was simpicity and infantile faith in her reasoning, but every word she uttered struck home because of its very innocence. She need not have said more, but she told me what I had longed to know for the past half year of utter desolation.

Phil Surrey had exhausted his slender means in supporting my cause and had determined to seek his fortune in the gold fields for that and other reasons. He could not bear being thrown into relations of growing intimacy with her, his love uncured. He had acted with great delicacy and refinement up to the last moment, and even then merely told of his plans so that she could explain his absence to me. She was lonely and did not wish him to go. She tried all the little persuasions she knew to keep him near her during my hours of neglect, then she deliberately flirted with him. She dropped her fan; they both stooped to pick it up; her hair caught on a button of his coat; they rose to unfasten it, and Phil seized her in an impulsive embrace. His generosity and his sorrow both appealed to her so strongly—she pitied him from the bottom of her heart—that she gave vent to her feelings as I entered the room.

My wife seemed to think that I had come in saint-like attitude to sit in judgment on her conduct. I who had acted on impulse often enough in similar situations and insultingly in not permitting her to explain before abandoning her to the mercies of coldly critical society, but I had been actuated by better motives. I could not tell her, so I could only kneel there and worship her. Suddenly she smiled at me, and a great flame sprang from the dead ashes of my hopes. Perhaps she still loved me!

"Come nearer," she begged. "Put your face close to mine as you used to do and tell me that there is no regret between us."

Then I confessed, omitting nothing that justified the name I had been recalled. I was a beast. She smiled mysteriously during my recital, not at all distressed about my shortcomings, and drew me closer when I had concluded. She lifted the coverlid a little from her breast and showed me a tiny baby—a pink and white flower—lying there. "Now," she said, brightly, "will you be good?"

THE SELIG PLAYERS.

Collin Campbell, a director connected with the Western studio of the Selig Company, has recently joined the ranks of the Benedicts. The name of the fortunate young lady has not been given, but Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have taken a bungalow near the Edendale studio.

Mr. Henry Reimers, a well-known cameraman, is now connected with the Selig Chicago studios.

Mr. William V. Mong, for some time past scenario editor for the Selig Company, is now with Roland and Clifford, having been engaged to stage that famous production of "Divorce," which opened at the Whitney Opera House, April 20th.

Miss Phyliss Gordan, for some time connected with the Shubert musical productions, has been engaged for leading parts in the Selig Western Company. Her first appearance in Selig pictures is in the subject entitled, "The Hand of Fate."

Mr. George L. Cox, who has for a long time been a member of the Selig Company of players, has recently developed into a writer and producer of considerable ability. His first two pictures are said to be very good. They are entitled, "The Other Woman" and "The Law of the North," both released during April. Fred W. Huntly, another member of the Selig players, has graduated to the producer class and is making good.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

A Squeakless City.

FREE oiling of baby carriages as one of the attractions at a matinee as much mention as the show itself in Grand Junction, Col., where baby show is something of a novelty, but the oiling feature got almost S. B. Sturtevant of the Majestic, announced the oiling feature and prizes for the finest babies, wisely leaving the audience to judge the latter. Most baby carriages need oiling and some doting mothers probably regarded that as a consolation prize for the trophy the neglected kiddie should have won. Baby contests are no new feature, but the carriage oiling seems to be a novelty that should commend itself to others. There were fifty-one carriages in line outside the theater, to serve as an additional advertisement, and we imagine that this, in itself, was enough of a feature to pay the cost of the prizes. If you can make the passer-by look twice at your house you've accomplished good, and if you can make them go away and tell others about it you've done something even more important.

The baby contest that takes place inside the house is a good advertisement, but the fifty-one carriages outside the entrance with a man busy oiling them is even better because it is where everyone can see. Probably that was why the oiling was promised, since many of the children could have been brought to the theater in their mothers' arms.

Get All You Can.

Getting all you can out of what you do is one of the great lessons in advertising. What happens in the house is good, but what happens outside is better since it is more widely spread. The smaller the town the greater the value of the outside work. There are times to hide your light under a bushel, but there are other times when it is better to set fire to the basket and help along the light.

If you plan some novelty plan to get as much publicity out of it as possible. Make it something that can be talked about, that will draw a crowd. Recently both the Licensed and Independent companies have released pushmobile race films. Why not arrange with the exchange to get this film, getting it back if you have run it once; then, on the day it is to be shown start a race half a mile up the street just before the matinee or shortly after school. The pushmobile team that gets to the theater line first can have free admissions for a month, with two weeks to the second team and a free admission to all entrants. A scheme like that in any town of 10,000 inhabitants will be talked about a week before the event and for weeks afterward. If you try the idea let us know how it works with you.

The more elaborately you plan it, of course, the better the effect. Have banners printed for the sides of the pushmobile, or let your house man paint some and they'll decorate some of the carts as long as the paint holds on.

Free Advertising.

There are many ways in which free advertising may be had, or for a cost so small that it is practically free, and many of these methods are more valuable than work that costs important money. If you can get hold of some good baseball team of junior players, get them to change their team name to that of the theater, buy them an outfit, or at least shirts and caps, to be worn in play; help them manage the team and use your influence with the local editors to boom the team. Give their star pitcher a job as usher so that you can keep your hand on him, and if you get the right team you can get advertising that will last all summer.

Far be it from us to suggest dirty ball, but if the losers are entertained, or, to put it in a better way, if the house team is permitted to entertain the vanquished—only the vanquished—at some performance, the team's percentage will be a good one all season.

Wesley Plays with Dolls.

W. A. Wesley ("Wesley Says So") is playing with dolls these days. In a prominent window on the street most prominent in Gardner, Mass., he has a life-sized doll with a card stating that it is the prize to be given on May 4th to the little girl receiving the greatest number of votes. Each admission ticket carries with it a vote printed on light card and reading:

DOLL CONTEST

For Most Popular Girl Under 12 Years

I WANT TO VOTE FOR

Child's Name ....

Contest Closes May 1st, 1912.

"Wesley Says So."

The tab of the vote is kept by means of lantern slides on the screen, and by working it up in the Wesley fashion he is making an old scheme give good results. Old schemes are sometimes best when they are worked right, but they have to be done as carefully as the new if they are to bring results. Wesley, who seems fond of the audacious, also sends a heavy card with "Go to hell, I've got troubles of my own," on one side, and the inevitable "Wesley says so" on the other. He is careful to add the explanation that these are not the votes in the doll contest.

Such advertising must be carefully handled, for in many houses it might give offense, but here it's just a part of Wesley's breezy personality.

Don't Dream.

Another example of the Wesley style is found in this heading from a recent announcement. If you can do this sort of thing and keep it going you'll find that people will come to look for the dodgers for the sake of the heading, and then, having read that, will read the rest because they have been started. If you can put snap into your stuff try it, but remember that nothing quite so saddening as labored humor can be located. Here is the Wesley sample:

DON'T DREAM

Roll Over, Wake Up, and See Things as they are. Lots of men spend two dollars worth of worry over the loss of a quarter. Spend Ten or Twenty Cents and See the Vaudeville and Moving Pictures at the Garden Theater and don't worry.

From the Tenth Street.

Here's a good clipping from the Tenth Street Theater program, Kansas City. It reads:

> To that large class who are advocating "Early to bed and early to rise," motion pictures are useful as a means of evening entertainment. If one goes to a regular theater, one can hardly expect to get home before midnight; whereas if one attends a photoshow, one can begin at any hour and get back home at any hour. Furthermore, where one play is seen at the regular theater, four or five are seen at the photoshow, and in half the time.

The Tenth Street is giving more space to general matter, but it is developing a fondness for stuff continued from week to week that should be gotten rid of.

Even where the program is read weekly the audience will not carry an argument from week to week, nor will it get interested in a long article. For program work the short, snappy article that runs three or four hundred words at most is better, and four hundred word stories are better than one of the greater length. Make your stuff short, snappy and telling, and you'll get readers, but if you are prosy you might better try and sell the space to an advertiser, since it is being wasted.

Writing on the Wall.

St. Joseph, Mo., is making the discovery that good singing is better than cheap vaudeville. Two of the houses there offer the photoplays and some singer of local note, not a singer of illustrated songs, but a concert singer with concert selections. These are all light classics, vastly different from the "popular" music, and yet from personal advices from residents of that city it is apparent that the programs are well received.

With the photoplays constantly improving in tone and the vaudeville getting worse as the demand for low-priced stuff lets down the quality, the purely musical program is more in keeping with the filmed drama, and it will pay you to test your house, say with one "Musical night" a week as a starter.

From Down East.

H. Lee Craig, manager of the Dreamland Theater, Caribou, Me., sends in this letter:

> I am very much interested in your page "Advertising for Exhibitors." Have not noticed anything from any of the exhibitors in Northern Maine, and thought I would take a chance and send you in a sample of what I use. I am located in a small town, and I use this form of advertising on the street three times a week, or with every complete change of show.
> Am running a special program next week with a lecturer. Have never run matinees, but we are trying to boost our matinees, and we take the way of opening same with a strong bill on Monday, free for the ladies. Have also sent out invitations such as enclosed to the clergymen and different leading men of the town.
> Would like to know your idea on such stuff.

Needs More Ink.

Caribou is so far up in Maine that it couldn't be much further away without getting over into Canada. Mr. Craig is made welcome to this department as our first Maine visitor. We've been trying to get some stuff from a man down in Waterville, but we have been forced to the conclusion that the Waterville man is cheating the coroner out of a fee.

The first thing that strikes us about Mr. Craig's advertising is that the printer is one of the most economical men with ink we ever ran into. The special invitation is set in a modified Old English that is more easily read than most, but the impression is so gray that the suggestion of copperplate work is wholly lost. The same holds good of the letter-head, set in the same face and Post Monotone. They are well chosen faces, and intelligently displayed, but there is not enough ink on the table or not sufficient impression on the platen. It seems a pity to spoil good composition with poor press work, and the house is apt to be blamed for the work rather than the printer.

Fill of Schemes.

Mr. Craig seems alert. The idea of introducing matinees with special features is a good one and the effort to get in the local dignitaries by means of a special invitation is off the same piece. As a further incentive a character reader and occultist has been engaged and gives a free reading with every paid admission, the admission carrying this card:

DREAMLAND
The Family Theater.
H. LEE CRAIG, MANAGER.
This Card Entitles the Bearer to a Private Interview, Absolutely Free, With MISS SALEZ,
The Eminent Character Reader and Occultist.
Hours: 2.30 to 4.30 P. M.

Use More Text.

The throwaway is well displayed, but we think Mr. Craig would find it worth his while to give more of his space to a three or four-line description of the reels. It seems to us that in prohibition Maine more than "the beautiful two-reel subject" should have been used for the C. G. P. C. in the Grip of Alcohol. The sample sent is scarcely a fair one, since the special features crowd the regular releases, but as a general thing it is much better to boom the film both by title and subject.

Primarily a throwaway is something to be glanced at and thrown down, but even on a circular there can be one or two lines of appeal, a crisp gripping sentence that makes the reader feel that he simply must see the reel, and this should be done wherever possible. We should like to see more samples of Mr. Craig's work.

From Exeter.

J. C. Rathbone, resident manager of the Exeter (N. H.) Opera House, sends in a batch of samples that is almost an embarrassment of good things, and in his letter he traverses our suggestion in connection with his earlier submission that it is a good thing to adopt a distinctive color of stock. He writes in part:

> Your point, as regards adhering to one color in advertising, is well taken, if not observed. I prefer (there being no other house here) to use different colors for two reasons—that our patrons may know it is a new edition and then by using odds and ends left from books, my stock costs almost nothing.

There are arguments both for and against the change in color of the stock, the cheapness of the stock being the most pronounced argument in favor of a change. Some large houses spend thousands of dollars just to gain recognition for a line or some special form. It doesn't matter whether or not the advertising is new. It's the advertisement of this or that, and in itself this is the advertisement sought.

Some Good Lines.

Mr. Rathbone offers some good lines in his work, and one that makes a particular appeal to us is this: "The night school that is open the year 'round." We do not know of anything that better indicates the educational value of the motion picture in a line. Along the same lines is this announcement:

POPULAR OPINION
Always decides every vital question. There has never been but one verdict regarding
MOTION PICTURES
And that is universally unanimous—
THE BIGGEST AND BEST VALUE FOR THE MONEY OFFERED IN THE MARKET TO-DAY.
Amusement, Literature, Science, Art, Geography, History, with never an overdose of either, wisely blended and rolled into one.

The form might be improved upon slightly, but the argument is there in the last few lines, and it is an argument that will make an appeal to all classes of theater-goers.

They Will Be Sore.

As a good argument for the photoplay there is frequently run this paragraph:

Just Facts.

> Four years ago only a small class of people attended moving picture entertainments. Now, thanks to the marvelous improvements, both in regard to subjects and projection, only a small class of people stay away. And won't they kick themselves good and hard when they finally do learn what they are missing?

The Opera House is the home of the traveling combinations, the Photoplays being given on the off nights and this argument will appeal to many who attend the dramatic performances but regard the pictures as things not worth while. There are literally thousands who don't know what they are missing, and if you do any advertising at all, a part of it should be directed to these who are not now patrons of the Photoplay simply because they know no better.

With the Colleen Bawn the reels were held for a second day and this was the announcement: "Shown for the first time Wednesday night and given as an extra added feature Thursday night with three other new reels. Entire change on Saturday." This seems to solve the problem of running a feature more than one night for the advertising to be had from the first day and yet getting in the crowd that came the first night. This regular crowd is an important factor in a small town.

Some Good Advice.

The Surprise Theater, South Bend, has a new line on a recent program that we like. It runs: "Try and know the actors. You will enjoy the pictures more." Playing up the personality feature is what holds business, but the simple program appeal must be backed up. The Surprise helps by giving small cuts of the players in the program description, but a Philadelphia house goes a little too far when it posts pictures of all the photoplayers and announces "Our Big Stock Company." We are inclined to think that since this announcement will not be believed it is better to credit them to the various companies. It makes for better effect.

With most companies offering photographs and cuts at absurdly small prices there is no excuse for not availing yourself of the opportunity to make your programs and your advertisements smart with illustrations. All popularity is based on personality. Play up the personality and get the popularity.

INQUIRIES

L. P. B.—Thanks for your letter but communications written in lead pencil and understamped are regarded as not available. We'll stand for the postage due, but not for the lead pencil.

MRS. E. N.—Photoplays are made all over the Northern part of New Jersey and we do not think that the Imp or any other company has any special section marked down. It all depends on the picture. We have not the slightest idea where the Biograph's "The Girl and Her Trust" was taken, and it's a waste of two-cent stamps to ask the Biograph.

J. R. K.—The Essanay Company supplies casts of the productions, but recently the Western casts have come in with the feminine leads marked "Unknown." A direct question as to the presence of Miss Mabel Normand with the Western section was replied to with the statement that the Chicago office did not know. Mr. Gilbert M. Anderson has been too busy to reply to a courteous question to the same effect asked of him. A number of persons have identified the player as Miss Mabel Normand, formerly of the Biograph, but until Mr. Anderson can divert his attention from his tin sheriff's badge, we shall have to wait for official verification. Mr. Anderson seems to be in the same class with the Carpathia's wireless operator when it comes to giving out news. The best way to get back numbers is to send ten cents for each copy direct to the publishers, provided that you do not want them too far back.

B. A. S.—The officer of the society in Edison's "Children Who Labor," was William West.

D. J.—Vitagraph offers several styles of photographs. Write them to 116 Nassau Street, New York. The Kalem Company also makes several offers. The straight photographs are 15 cents each.

SEVERAL INQUIRERS.—Mr. Owen Moore is not with the Thanhouser Company. Miss Gladys Fields has left the Powers Company. We have no record of any new connection.

GEM.—Licensed exchanges cannot sell second-hand film because it is not their property to sell. They merely lease the film for a period of six months. Film costing two or three cents a foot could not be in very good condition. It is probably worth just about the price asked for it in proportion to the sale price of ten cents a foot. If you want cheap film without date it would be best to try and get "cold" copies, which are prints made for, but not sold on the release date. These sell as low as five or six cents a foot and are practically new, though they may have been run a few times in the studio or sales room. Address the various manufacturers.

S. de V.—We cannot give the list of pictures in which Mr. Johnson has appeared since "Shall Never Hunger," but possibly the press department of the Lubin Company will oblige you if you enclose a stamped and addressed envelope for reply. Our filing system regards the titles and not the appearances of the individual players.

MIGNON.—John Halliday was the leading man in Lubin's "The Cure of John Douglas" and "Rice and Old Shoes." Marc McDermott was the leading man in Edison's "An Island Comedy." We stated that Miss Wayne was the lead in Biograph's "The Battle." It is correct. Remember that the Biograph issues named sets of its players for the English market, even while it tells its American admirers there is nothing doing. Possibly Markt & Company, Gerrard Street, London, will name a price for a set if you are interested.

NO NAME.—We're going to shut down on unsigned communications, so after this sign your name. Miss Bessie Eyton and Herbert Rawlinson were the lovers in Selig's "Me and Bill." There were several girls in "When a Man's Married." Tell their names as well as the names of the two men playing chess. We'll be glad to answer if you can identify, but we did not see the picture and you'll have to call their names. The second Essanay is nearly a year old. Too late. In Essanay's "The Deputy's Love Affair," Olive was Miss Vedah Bertram. Dolores is not known to the Chicago office.

G. S.—We do not keep tabs on the Biograph productions and are unable to advise you whether or not the late Verner Clarges took part in "The Old Bookkeeper."

R. W.—Maurice Costello directs the pictures in which he appears. His understanding with the Vitagraph is that he shall produce one a week, playing the leading role himself.

H. A. Z.—We do not think you stand much chance of getting into a studio as camera man to study the business. Most of the men who have come up have "just happened" or have had some sort of pull. You might get in as an assistant and so learn the game, but there is small chance of an opening. If, as your letter suggests, you are a field camera man already, you might advertise in this paper and find an opening, though not all field men are good under the lights.

J. A. M.—We are getting to miss you when you do not come in every week. The American has not answered yet. In Majestic's "The Closed Bible," Miss Anita Hendrie was the poor man's wife and Paul Scardon the District Attorney. We couldn't even guess at the nationality of James Cruze. Kenneth Casey seems to be somewhere between twelve and fourteen. The keepers in Thanhouser's "The Poacher," were Jack Noble and David H. Thompson.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

WE thought the genius who sued the Kalem company for a script he was told he might have back if he would send the omitted stamps was coming as close to the limit as the most careless fool killer would permit, but that there is need of a new exterminator is proven by the receipt of a letter from George W. Terwilliger, editor for the Reliance company, who very temperately remarks that perhaps the photoplaywrights might like to know that editors, too, have their troubles.

This letter is signed by J. H. Frank, of Columbus, Ohio. The letter is too long to print in full, but here are some of the gems of courteous inquiry:

> If mss. is sent and subject is "not available at this time," will the ideas all be returned with the mss. or will the theme "stick" to be transposed and appear later garbled and disguised?
> This is a rotten way of addressing a firm on a business proposition, but I am an extemporaneous dramatic, descriptive and comedy lecturer on moving pictures and am seldom "at liberty." I have had "my draw" and have no intention of backing a sucker's game after I have learned the way the cards are dealt. I have sent and accepted pay for scenarios two years—and more—ago, and I have submitted scenarios to producers and have been required to lecture on the same theme and seen the same characters portray the same idea, but, as above stated, transposed and issued under another title."

The writer goes on to state that the practise of stealing scripts is so common that a bill is to be introduced into the Ohio General Assembly requiring the name and address of the writer of the photoplay on all film titles.

Just to prove his cleverness, he sketches what he thinks is a novel idea and goes on to state that he has never seen or read of anything similar. It is a commonplace story of a wayward daughter, done scores of times and we are led to the conclusion that extemporaneous comedy lecturers get small chance to see the pictures they lecture on if he thinks this at all out of the common.

This is precisely where others make their error and where a majority of the stories of theft originate. Some would-be author develops a trite idea. He sees something similar produced and immediately comes to the conclusion that his preciously original idea has been stolen. His mental attitude and, most probably, his mental development, prevent him from reasoning it out that perhaps others have thought of the same combination of common essentials, and thereafter he is convinced that all film makers are thieves.

He doesn't drop from the ranks, however. He keeps right on sending out his rehashes of old plots in the calm belief that he is doing original work and whenever he sees another parallel he shouts louder than ever.

This Ohio genius announces his firm determination not to send out more of his brain children to be abducted until he gets positive assurance from some manufacturer that he is not a thief, so that removes him from the common class, but there are hundreds of others who keep right on sending stuff out and working themselves into a frenzy over the repeated "thefts."

We receive almost daily similar charges, but that any person should be so lacking in intelligence as to attempt to open a business deal with a flat demand as to whether or not the correspondent is a thief seems almost unbelievable.

If the consequences of such an act affected only the offender it would be all right, but there are literally hundreds of incompetent persons who are shouting the old cry of thief even as they shove fresh scripts into the mail box and their clamor reacts upon those intelligent, earnest beginners who may some day develop into photoplaywrights if given the opportunity. If you cannot play a game fairly do not spoil it for others who are willing to learn, and it is because the men who are entitled to a chance have to pay the price of the asininity of others that we object.

Already many companies refuse to do business with others than the few who have been found reasonable and clever. They will not bother with the incompetent fools for the sake of the few good writers who may be developed and others will follow their example if some effectual gag cannot be found to stop these ever-open mouths.

Get Imp's Address.

Those who have the Imp address as 102 West 101st Street, should note that scripts should be sent to the photoplay department at 515 West 56th Street, and not to the main office.

They're Coming Slowly.

Campbell MacCulloch, who is well known to magazine readers as a writer of short stories, has become interested in writing Photoplays and already has a number of scripts to his credit. Fiction writers who are recognized by the leading magazines have been slow to take up the writing of Photoplays, but with Bannister Merwin, the Edison star, and MacCulloch in line, there is promise of others to come.

Reliance Market Slow.

A few weeks ago we announced that the Reliance company was willing to pay $50 and $75 for first chance at really good scripts. We have received no advices to the contrary from the company or its editor, but we note that Hal Reid, who is a dramatic author, has gone from the Vitagraph to the Reliance company and we believe that this will reduce the number of scripts needed, since he writes his own stories.

The Demand for Exteriors.

The request of J. E. for information as to the use of interior scenes in summer is timely. He writes:

> Is only exterior stuff wanted during the spring and summer months, or is interior stuff also in demand? If so, how great is the demand for interiors during this period? My specialty is heavy dramatic photoplays requiring mostly interior settings and lately I have been advised that a greater number than usual are not available "for present use."

J. E. supplies his own answer. Interior settings are not much in demand so long as it is possible to work outdoors. A pretty landscape is far more pleasing to the eye than the best interior ever painted and the photographic quality of the poorest outdoor scene is apt to be better than the work under electric lights even under the most favorable conditions.

Such being the case, it is not surprising that the present demand is for stories told mostly in exterior settings and these exterior scenes should be supplied from now until the end of August.

It is a comparatively simple matter to throw the action out of doors once you catch the trick. The elaborate parlor proposal will gain new value if the sofa becomes a fallen tree trunk and the wall paper gives place to verdure. Unless there is some vital reason why the scene must lie indoors there is no good reason why the scene should not be played out of doors. Even the breakfast table may become a lunch on the lawn under the trees and if you'll take the winter script and work over it a bit you will be surprised to find how little it matters just where it is played.

Some interiors are essential and some are permissible even in the summer script, but keep your action out of doors as much as possible.

There is another reason in many studios why the exterior settings should be used as much as possible. Generally the field companies are called in from the South or West and with three or four directors working in the space usually given over to two or even one, they cannot all be looked after with many interior sets in all scripts.

For Editors, Too.

We are printing this letter from L. M. Perkins, of Durango, Colo., partly for the benefit of photoplaywrights and partly for the editors. It might interest some of the producers, too, but the great point is that Mr. Perkins explains what writers really mean when they speak of the superiority of their stories over scripts produced. It is not the script that is at fault, as a rule. It's the director who is permitted to do just as he pleases on the theory that their artistic temperaments will suffer and they will make a poor production of a picture that does not "appeal" to them. We will never have really good photoplay productions until the director is assured that he'll make a proper production of whatever is given him or be kicked into the oblivion he deserves. The one greater menace to the production of good pictures than the director is the director who writes all his own scripts. Now let's get on to Mr. Perkins, who has been waiting all this time:

> I always read with great interest your articles entitled "The Photoplaywright," and, in connection with your remarks headed "Naughty," in the issue of April 6, some of my own experiences may be of interest.
> To begin with, I have always been treated well by the various companies, my inquiries as to manuscripts have always been promptly answered by them and only once in the nine months during which I have been writing plots has a scenario been returned mutilated in any way.
> The plot stealing idea seems to me absurd; because during the few months that I have been writing, I have noticed no less than four productions in which the titles were the same and the plots more or less similar to scenarios I myself had either written or outlined in my notebook. In these cases I can hardly claim that any one purloined my ideas inasmuch as my notes were locked up in my desk; not because I was suspicious of having my ideas stolen, but for fear my sister might expose my literary efforts to ridicule.
> When I first read your article this week, I was fresh from the sight of what I considered an especially rotten example of "western drama." I felt, as I guess every one in similar circumstances feels, that my rejected manuscripts were far superior to what I had witnessed on the screen. After reading your remarks I made a mental comparison of the horrible example and one of my own unrecognized gems. A little careful study convinced me that I was wrong in terming the play in question "rotten." My criticism mostly fell under the head of errors in production and the worst thing that I could say about the plot was that it was an old, rehashed subject; as a plot it might have even been called good, if originality were not to be considered. The play was ruined by the careless methods of the producer. The little details were shamefully neglected. For instance, miners come rushing out of a dark tunnel where they had presumably been at work, yet not one of them carried a light. These same miners all wore high heeled riding boots and were dressed to type (heaven knows where the manager got his ideas from, for riding boots would be the last thing a man in his senses would use as footgear in a mine). Their actions, too, were what one might expect from men arrayed in such fashion; they left out every possible thing which would have gone toward making the thing seem real. They could not even muster style enough to tie a proper hangman's knot in the scene where the hero was about to be lynched. I have seen good western plays, but as a whole, they are foolish: dress, manners, everything connected with the West seems to have been produced by formula. To stage anything different from these rule-of-thumb beings would doubtless be considered sacrilege, but the writer humbly suggests > that there is much that is uniquely western that is still to be shown. To illustrate my meaning: literature has been flooded with "Diamond S's," "Flying U's," "Lazy H's" (some of the above are hardly practical stock brands, though they are all used in stories), but I do not recall a single instance where the equally important earmark has even been mentioned. Are not such terms as "Swallow Fork," "Overbit," "Crop," "Swinging V," etc., equally picturesque? The average man is just as wise after reading one set as he is with the other; so why neglect the earmark?

Having eradicated the above from my system I feel much better. No doubt you do also, since the end is in sight; but I call your attention to the fact that you invited correspondence.

Kiss It Good-Bye.

From Philadelphia comes the plaint of James J. Tighe, that about nine months ago he sent a photoplay to the Belmar Company, on Staten Island, and has not yet received it back. He wants to know what we would do in his place. We do not believe that we would have sent a script to a company not in the Licensed list or the Sales Company, but having done so we think we would have given it up for good long ago. Some of the companies in the National seem to be treating photoplaywrights very fairly, but others do not seem to be inclined to play fair.

Mr. Tighe also writes that a western photoplay handling concern made accounting of all but one of his scripts, which last they stated was retained by the Vitagraph, but which the Vitagraph states was sent back the day of its receipt. In this case we think that we should insist upon a copy being made at the expense of the agency and we think we should market the stuff personally in future. At this stage of advancement the photoplaywright can sell his stuff just as quickly as can an agent. As Mr. Tighe has sold 84 out of 112 scripts we don't consider that he has much to complain of.

Fine for the Professor.

We have replied to this letter in the Inquiry Department, but we want to repeat it here, where we have more room for comment. A San Francisco correspondent writes: "Enclosed is the card of a man who told me that to write photoplays properly, I would have to learn to be an actor of them. Is this procedure advisable?"

The card is that of a man who announces himself as a "Photographic Artist, Independent," and without wishing to hurt his feeling we will add that he is one gaudy liar. He professes to teach "eye and facial expressions, movements and gestures for the silent dramatic motion picture play acting. The taking part in motion picture plays."

If this advertiser knew anything about the making of motion pictures he might be able to tell a would-be photoplaywright something about the limitations of the camera, but we don't believe that he does. In other words, we think he is a grafter, pure and simple, else he would not have made the astounding declaration that to write photoplays it is first necessary to be able to act in them.

"Independent" in this case does not mean that he is affiliated with the Independent companies, though this seems to be the impression he seeks to convey, it is all a part of his pretense.

It is not at all necessary that photoplaywright should also be a photoplayer. It is sufficient that he have a good idea of dramatic values and this must be inherent. It cannot be obtained from a man who teaches you to bat your eyes in approved photoplay fashion. We thought a photoplay school conducted by a real estate editor who does not write scenarios was going some, but this San Francisco genius is miles ahead of him.

There is only one school for the writing of photoplays and that is to watch the work of the best companies on the screen and study instead of merely look at it. If a man or women can write plays the experience gained in the theater will prove invaluable, but no course of lessons in acting will help. We would hate to see William H. Kitchell playing a love scene, or Emmett Campbell Hall doing an Indian, yet they can write photoplays that bring in regular checks. We have seen some photoplays by Bannister Merwin that have almost the fulness of a libretto, yet we never heard of him as an actor.

If you are told that you must be an actor in order to be a writer just laugh and forget it. Such advice is fine for the professor, but it is costly to the pupil and brings no result.

Check and Script, Too.

And now comes a correspondent who certainly seems to merit space if only because he tells of a company that not only buys a script but which sends it back to you. We never have contended that the present system of handling scripts that obtains in some studios is ideal. Quite to the contrary, we wonder why some film makes stand for such a laxity of method, but we still stick to the suggestion that if you don't like the way the work is done you do not have to submit scripts to that particular studio. There is no real excuse for holding scripts longer than two or three weeks and the system of sending scripts from New York to Los Angeles and back again to New York before it is returned to the writer—who may live in San Francisco—is all wrong. The editor should be a person qualified to make selection of stories that will suit the company and he should have the power either to accept or reject on behalf of the company. He should not be required to let a director retain the script several weeks and then possibly pass it on to another director for an equal length of time. This sort of thing is all wrong and eventually it must react upon the company. The correspondent writes:

> Your corner for several weeks has not touched on the subject "Holding on to Scripts," and thinking that everybody apparently is well treated and that I am the "fall-guy," I would like to advise you of some of my late experiences, which I think will interest you as well as others.
> One of your comments on the question "Why is it that some editors hold scripts for months, while others pass on them in less than a week," was, that if we don't like the policy of the firm, don't submit them any scripts. This, indeed, is to the point, but going a little more intelligently into the matter and judging from the experiences quoted below, can't you extend us a little more sympathy or encouragement than in the above assertion?
> On December 15th I forwarded a script to a well-known Independent company and after getting an acknowledgment of its receipt and a notation thereon, that it was a good story, it was apparently placed in cold storage, taken out and returned March 14th, three months later, with the usual dope "Not available for present use." Three months is a rather lengthy time to determine what their requirements are, I should imagine. Well said. On January 24th I sent them another and it was returned April 1st with the same advice. Sent them another February 28th, no word as yet (April 13).
> Here's one that got me. Five months ago I sold a script to a firm, signed their necessary documents, received their check, etc., and have been anxiously awaiting its being billed for release and lol the other day this same script was returned "Not available for present needs." Sold the story five months ago and then get it back as not available. What next?
> Another. I forwarded two scripts to another Independent company on December 14th and in short terms, will say that I have written them three very courteous letters enclosing postage each time, asking for their decision. Still no reply. Letters having been sent about a month apart. What sort of a problem is this? Another firm has been holding a script since February 13th.

Plenty Others.

A correspondent who doesn't quite realize that we were making reference to the printed slip in our recent allusion to Lubin, writes:

> Under your "Extracting the Sting," let me tell you of companies beside Lubin which give like encouragement. With one of my rejected scripts, I received a letter from the editor chuck full of good advice. In conclusion he said, "Keep at it. You write well and ought to succeed. We shall be glad to examine anything you have." Another generous editor wrote: "This is not exactly in our line, but the merit is there. We predict an early sale." These letters I have kept. They are the next best thing to the check. Indeed, in the end, they may prove of more value than the check. They have spurred me to greater effort, and I believe better work. All good befortune the Big Brothers, who cheer us on our way.

Most of the editors are nice about a hint or suggestion; more helpful, by far, than the editors for magazines, and we print this letter that they may know how much their work is appreciated. It is not an easy matter to note perhaps forty or fifty slips, but it is done in a dozen studios. What we had reference to in the Lubin article was the printed slip that supplemented the formal rejection list.

GOOD DEMAND FOR CHINESE WAR PICTURES.

The Oriental Film Company, of San Francisco, announces that State Rights for these Chinese War pictures are in demand. Up to the present writing, nineteen of the principal States have been sold. The rights for old Mexico have also been disposed of and negotiations are on for Great Britain.

OTTO MEYER—MELIES PRIZE WINNING COWBOY.

At the great Annual Western Sports Conclave, nearly all the prizes worth having were won by Otto Meyer, such as the prizes of roping, riding, bucking, etc. Mr. Meyer is a member of the Melies Western stock company, appearing in their dramas of frontier life.

Comments on the Films

Licensed.

"THE INSURGENT SENATOR" (Edison), April 17.—The Edison Company more frequently than some of its rivals gets away from the beaten path and gives the exhibitor something new and striking. It must also be said that the Edison Company has frequently shown itself thoroughly alive to the problems of modern society and has dealt with them in progressive and vigorous fashion. The strongest political picture play at this writing is undoubtedly "The Insurgent Senator." The plot, while slightly reminiscent of political plays on the stage and of magazine stories, is a strong one, and the settings and the acting often reach absolute perfection. The part of the insurgent senator was played with a happy combination of cleverness and reserve, while the small but difficult role of the boss's daughter was rendered with consummate skill. The groupings of the senate while in session and the workings of the legislative lobby are portrayed with faultless fidelity to life and give the picture a very desirable atmosphere of realism. The director as well as the players seem to have taken unusual pains with this picture and the results of their co-operation is most gratifying. "The Insurgent Senator" is not only a novel and splendid theme for the moving picture with a powerful lesson, but it has the additional advantage of being a timely topic and catching the popular spirit of to-day, which is everywhere working for a renewal of old-fashioned honesty in politics. It may well be featured and will get money and prestige.

"WORKING FOR HUBBY" (Vitagraph), April 17.—This is a very clever comedy in which the principals, especially the "merry wives," Leah Baird and Lillian Walker acquit themselves nobly. Not only is the story strictly original, but it is developed in a very able fashion and keeps the audience in good humor and likewise in suspense pretty well to the end. The uniformly clever work of Bunny is one of the features of this comedy. Comedies of this kind are a welcome boon to the exhibitor at all times. The atmosphere is refined and true to life in every inch of the film. The situations are genuinely laughable and the climaxes are especially well carried off. Settings and photography are of the perfect kind, which the Vitagraph Company has made us familiar with.

"EASY MARK" (Pathe), April 17.—This picture has the usual fine finish of detail which is found in all Pathe productions. It has the great merit of originality besides. The plot is extremely interesting and developed in a natural way, which at no time does violence to the probabilities. The interest of the spectator is kept alive through every minute of the running of the reel and the sudden unexpected changes are very funny. The good humor of the audience keeps growing in volume as the laughable errors and mistakes concerning the real and the pseudo burglar are unraveled on the screen. The scene in which the gay company discovers that it has surrendered its valuables to a real burglar instead of to the one that they expected to come on a bet with their host, is particularly good and sets the audience in a roar.

TRAINING FIGHTING COCKS IN CUBA (Pathe), April 17.—This is one of the best sporting pictures ever made. It describes in every minute detail the training of game cocks who are made ready for battle. While those interested in the sport will be particularly delighted, the picture is an interesting and instructive one to the general public as well. It forms the second picture on one reel with "Easy Mark," and ought to be a decided success.

"THE LOVER'S SIGNAL" (Lubin), April 17.—A courtship farce, well photographed. It gives some fine views of Florida scenes. The girl's father objects to the young man. Some friends, for a joke, write to the girl that he is a married man. She becomes idiotic. Through a love scene they try to awaken her to her senses. The lover's signal at length accomplishes it.

"THE RIVALS" (Essanay), April 19.—A very pleasing village picture, romantic and quite truthful. The rivals are young girls at the romantic age, they are sisters. There is a young man with whom both have fallen in love. His preference for the older of the two brings jealousy to the younger. She shows a little touch of spite but is contrite and in tears at once and no harm is done. The picture's village scenes, with deep snow, and beautiful trees are especially attractive. The young girls are pretty and engaging and the home scenes are truthful.

"THE BOSS OF LUMBER CAMP NO. 4" (Edison), April 19.—A romantic melodrama with a lumber camp in the Maine woods as background. The audience seemed to watch the story with interest. It is a winter-time picture and there are some interesting and well taken views of the snowy forest and the lumber camp village.

"THE CRAVEN" (Vitagraph), April 19.—Miss Ann Schaefer puts a good deal of imagination into her interpretation of the woman, born of very brave people, who had married a coward. This craven had boasted and she had believed him. He boasts so much that the cowboys elect him sheriff. His wife demands that he make good, but he caves in completely when the time comes for him to go out and do something. She goes out and gets the bad man "Black Pete," and then compels him to deliver up the body and get the credit. It has a tense situation and there are flashes of ironic humor. The photographs serve very well.

"THE DEVIL, THE SERVANT AND THE MAN" (Essanay), April 18.—It will be remembered that there is a play called "The Devil," and one called "The Servant in the House." The "Devil" and the "Servant" come to a man in this picture in his dream. He has been neglecting his wife, has just been to the theater with another girl, and to one the evening before with still another. The Devil conducts him through a nightmare; but the Servant, later, shows him that every thing is all right—his wife is at home and asleep. So it is a sort of morality play. The photography of the studio scenes, where the camera man could centrol his lighting, is good. The other scenes have fair photography.

"THE UNKNOWN TRAVELER" (Eclipse), April 17.—A picture telling a simple story in a subdued, quiet way. It is slight; but it gets much charm and beauty from its truthful settings and its sincere, natural acting. The backgrounds, glimpses of a small fishing village in France, are unusually interesting. In the first scene, a room in a humble inn, we see a lover about to start on a long sea voyage. He takes leave of his peasant friends; then the inn-keeper's daughter goes with him, up the queer alley with stone steps that run past the door, to the village church. There, by the altar, with beautiful light streaming in through the window on her head, she prays for him. She then gives him a scapula. We now are shown the dock and the final parting, although she has a chance to wave to him again as the ship goes out under full sail. The final, beautifully acted and dramatic scenes take place in the room at the inn. It is several years later when he returns, the unknown traveler, to find her still waiting for him. The photography is beautiful.

"SAM SIMPKINS, SLEUTH" (Essanay), April 18.—Mr. Messimer plays Sam Simpkins in this very amusing farce. Sam, on try-out work, for a detective agency, covers himself with glory, but the men he gets, though wanted, are not the particular men he was out for. The photography is good.

"A GAY TIME IN JACKSONVILLE, FLA." (Lubin), April 18.—As usual in these Lubin "gay time" pictures, a couple of comic characters, Germans, are used to give human interest to the views and make a few laughs. The views take in the chief streets and parks of the city. Some are very beautiful; some are extremely hard on the eyes. The spectators seemed to like it.

"THE OTHER WOMAN" (Selig), April 15.—The other woman was an assistant in the man's studio; his wife and baby were at home. In spite of some artistic shortcomings, such as one will find in many pictures, this film has a subtile interest. The story of a broken home isn't pleasant; but, on the other hand, it tells us that the man and his assistant had made a new and important discovery in color photography. Again, the more sordid, second half of the picture is its most dramatic part. The camera work is of a high order.

"THE ADVENTURES OF AMERICAN JOE" (Kalem), April 17.—In this story of early California, an American sailor, who is ship wrecked, is compelled to join a pirate crew. The chief sends him to a ranch as a spy. He warns the Spanish ranchman, and the pirates are repulsed. Later, their scheme for vengeance is frustrated by the ranchman's pretty daughter. It is exciting. The costumes, especially of the pirate crew, except, perhaps, the leader, are perfect. Some of the scenes are filled with romantic atmosphere. There are faults; but the picture, as a whole, seems to be popular. The photographs are all that could be asked.

"THE CAVE MAN" (Vitagraph), April 16.—This is, indeed, a most wonderful picture. It tells a story of men and women in the days when their clothing were furs, spoils of leopards and deer. They were stalwart, beautiful men and women. Their weapons were crude, flint-headed axes, helved with hickory, and rough bows and arrows; but we see in them folk who could rob the white bear of his skin. They can grapple and leap and run. Their arms are bare and their well-knit sinews ripple as they move in grace and strength. The beauty of humanity transcends all other beauty; and the human figures in this living picture would delight a Michel Angelo.

The camera work is perfect, and the backgrounds were so well chosen that they seem to breathe with the story. It is winter; there is snow on the earth and the rocks and on every twig and fork where it could lodge. The place is full of briers and tangles; no garden, but wild. These backgrounds give to the picture a vtality as real as the stinging north wind. It is also spring; and the quickening wave of new life wells up the rough hillside, from the south. It wakens joy, need of freedom and love; but it also demands labor; the fields have to be tilled. This is a human picture; there is work in it as well as love and jealousy and struggle. The struggle is both spiritual and physical. It seems as though no cast could be better for this picture than the one that plays it. Miss Edith Story, Miss Rose Tapley, Mr. Teft Johnson, Mr. Harry Northrup and Mr. Ralph Ince play it. Here, in truth, is a feature picture.

"THE DUMB WOOING" (Edison), April 17.—A comedy that is human and very amusing. The fun comes partly from the disabilities of two of the characters; but it isn't at all heartless. Who ever feels pity for a man who stutters; he doesn't even himself. Miss Mary Fuller, a most versatile player, but especially pleasing in comedy, plays in this picture a young miss, quite roguish, who has two lovers. One (Barry O'Moor) can't speak without making the most laughable mouths; the other (Yale Benner) can't say anything without making a ridiculous twist of the neck and pull at his collar. Her father (Charles Ogle) fears that she is playing with the affections of these young men and gets them each to propose by dumb signs. The third man is played by Marc McDermott. The finished sets used in these scenes are worthy the highest praise. The photographs are excellent.

"JUST LIKE A WOMAN" (Biograph), April 18.—A very artistic and well-acted picture full of brilliant moments of insight into human moods and showing imagination in a marked degree. The story is quite fresh throughout, although the situation or situations very close to it have been used many times. The unusually high quality of the work comes chiefly from the almost faultless naturalness with which the story is led forward by the producer who astonishes us at times by the unconstrained way in which a group of figures in its scenes, with the perfect illusion of unconsciousness, affect each other. The ability to accomplish this is often considered to be the surest hall mark of a true dramatist, and even prized above clever plot construction. The camera work and the sets and backgrounds are perfect and add much interest to the story.

We are shown the rather selfish society matron in financial straits, and her pretty daughter who has awakened the love of a middle aged, good man of wealth. We are now shown a glimpse of married life as these two found it, with heart-break ending in reconciliation. Beside these three characters, there is the younger man and many really human beings who perhaps enter the little sphere in which the story seems truly to live.

"THE WAY OF A MAN WITH A MAID" (Vitagraph), April 20.—A very good picture, presenting in a dramatic way a study of feminine character and masculine character in the first stages of a serious courtship. Perhaps it was ever thus, for, although one can always find people to differ from any proposition, the Greek poets, or at least Theocratus, can be cited in support. Such a picture as this gets over by means of a thousand subtile little things. Merely to say that, at first, the girl seemed to consider the man her enemy; but that, when she feared to love him, she surrendered to his plea and consented to marry him, tells hardly of the picture. It has a bloom on it like that of a bunch of fresh grapes. Mr. Costello plays the man; Miss Leah Baird, the girl. The producer, with these players' skill, has made the picture pretty, as well as significant. The camera work is perfect.

"THE ART OF PRINTING" (C. G. P. C.), April 20. A very commendable and instructive picture. The photographs are good enough to show everything in the process of book making from the type machines to the final putting on of the covers. It is an unusual picture.

"BATHING CAVALRY HORSES" (C. G. P. C.), April 20.—A picture pretty well taken, of fine horses being made to swim across a pool. The scene is also pretty. There is splashing of water and the wet coats of horses emerging in the sunlight.

"QUEEN ELIZABETH'S RING" (Cines), April 20.—An historical drama in gorgeous costume, telling the story, founded on fact, of Lord Leigh, whom the queen loved and of the ring that, had it reached her majesty, would have saved him from dying on the scaffold. The picture is dramatically and smoothly constructed and leads up to a tense climax when the villainous countess places the ring, too late, where the Queen can find it. The costuming is very good and the stage sets give wide and deep space that very well suggest a great palace. The acting is very fair and the photography good.

"THE GHOST OF SULPHUR MOUNTAINS" (Melies), April 18.—A well constructed story set in a mountainous mining country. It runs smoothly, doesn't drag and the acting is natural and very convincing. The early scenes show the coming of a pleasant-mannered stranger who is received in a friendly spirit by the miners; but who excites the hatred of a villainous Mexican. By this man he is wantonly stabbed. Being cared for by a young miner and his wife, he becomes very friendly with the family, and the miner's jealousy is awakened. The villain also has a hand in this. The miner pretends to kill himself and lives as a hermit in the hills. His home is an interesting cave, with an entrance through a hollow tree. He is the "ghost," and the picture continues, showing us how the stranger discovers him, having seen his face peering in through a window one night, and brings him home to his loving wife. It was after a baby had come. The closing scene is very poetic, showing the reunited father and mother and the little new arrival. The camera work is excellent.

"BESSIE'S DREAM" (Selig), April 19.—A dream comedy that made many hearty laughs Bessie is pretty She wants to go fishing, but doesn't want a beau-tagging along. As she fishes, she falls asleep and dreams that she and the man are out fishing on the sea. A very big fish pulls her overboard and carries her to a cannibal island. The man approaches and wakes her. She is now glad to see him. It is very amusingly pictured and the camera work is good.

"THE FISHERMAID'S LOVE STORY" (Pathe), April 18.—A dramatic and very interesting story set among the fisher folk of Gloucester, Mass. The heroine has a charming role and Miss Gwendolyn Pate adds her good looks and good acting to make it doubly so. She wins for the girl she plays a very true sympathy. The picture, although tragic, has a happy ending and it is a pleasant picture. There's a villain in it and murder; but the girl's three lovers, rivals, are on friendly terms, they are all men whom one would not be ashamed to meet. The lover whom the girl preferred is wrongly accused of killing one of the others. It looks dark for him; for the clearing evidence, a bit of paper, has been blown under a chest. The third lover helps him get away and is about to marry the girl when he comes upon the evidence. What he does with it the picture shows. The picture has fine scenes, interiors and bits of the sea, and gets a strong grip on the audience.

"A HASTY HONEYMOON" (C. G. P. C.), April 19.—A slight, but amusing story of a ship's mate who got leave of absence to get married, but was recalled immediately after the ceremony. The girl dresses as a boy and follows, getting a job on the same ship. The picture's pleasing quality comes from its backgrounds, a little fishing village and peasant marriage costumes and customs. The photography is excellent.

"AN EXCURSION IN NEW ZEALAND" (C. G. P. C.), April 19.—This very desirable travel film is on the same reel. The views include a picture of a sea shouldering dolphin bringing the vessel into port; beautiful lakes; wild mountain roads and Alp-like glaciers. It is beautifully colored and the camera work is very fair.

"THE TRAIL OF GOLD" (Kalem), April 19.—An interesting Western picture with the popular elements: the sheriff's posse and horses in a speedy dash; the arrest of a good man, wrongfully suspected of a crime; the finding of the true culprit by a pretty, young heroine. The thief had stumbled in carrying away the bags of gold dust and one had become broken. After the arrest of the village doctor, she happens to drop her riding crop and, stooping to pick it up, makes the astonishing find of a heap of gold dust. This gives her the trail which she follows to the culprit's cabin and then she brings the sheriff. It is pretty well photographed.

"THE CATTLE KING'S DAUGHTER" (Essanay), April 20.—An absorbing Western story that is made convincing by good work on the part of the players. Anderson's part is in his usual vein, romantic outlaw; but he plays it with his usual excellence and wins his usual favor with his audience. He seems, in these romantic parts, very popular, judging by the remarks we hear. This picture, even to the reviewer who has seen all these pictures of Western life, has much freshness and was truly entertaining. We commend it. The camera work is good.

"THE BRAVE HUNTER" (Biograph), April 22.—A real, live bear makes this well-constructed farce, which has been used by more than one company, fresh and truly worth while. Very interesting backgrounds and good acting (it is here quite free from coarseness or vulgarity) also add much to it. It tickled the audience.

"WON BY A FISH" (Biograph), April 22.—On the same reel, this farce provoked even more merriment than its partner. It is fresher. Dad refused his consent as usual. Dad was fond of the bottle and went fishin' on a pier near the sea. Dad went to sleep. Young couple bought a big fish and fastened it onto his line, taking plenty of photographs and getting conclusive proof of the fraud. Dad pulls in the big fish, about four feet long, and proudly gives a fish feast. He is serving it up planked when young man calls him out of the room and threatens to show him up. It is well photographed.

"A MARDI GRAS MIXUP" (Kalem), April 22.—A picture with New Orleans as its background has an element of freshness and interest at the very start. This picture-farce is set in New Orleans at the Mardi Gras and shows views of the parade. The rough outline has been used before, but some novel twists have been given to it for the sake of freshness, and we overheard strangers in the audience express high approval of it. The views of the floats are just a trifle misty.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 17" (April 22).—This week's topical has a large number of interesting items. Among them is an oil well in Louisiana on fire and casting up hot oil and water; a tall brick chimney felled by a novel method; a glimpse at what is going on in Tripoli; another Jersey hurricane's work at Clifton, N. J.; Indian chiefs calling on Champ Clark; Mrs. David Beach beginning her 1,000-mile walk; spring hats from Paris, and the funeral of Mr. James Petrie Chalmers, Editor and Publisher of The Moving Picture World.

"A NEW BEGINNING" (Lubin), April 22.—A pretty picture; many of its scenes have great beauty and there is beauty in its significance. Miss Ormi Hawley and Mr. Jack Holliday play in it a young married couple who, in the throes of a serious disagreement, are brought together again in the last scene with love renewed. The lighting of some of the scenes is extremely striking.

"THE HAND OF FATE" (Selig), April 22.—A picture with backgrounds first in Germany and later in America. It is a somewhat sensational story of a young German army officer, married, who falls into the hands of a clever and very unscrupulous adventuress, "the mysterious blond," who was foretold on the palm of his hand. These scenes, showing German Bohemian life are very interesting. The adventuress and the officer flee to America; the deserted wife follows and is vindicated by fate with the help of the police. The camera work is very good.

"HOW HE PAPERED THE ROOM" (Vitagraph), April 22.—A very laughable comedy that was received with great pleasure by a large audience. John Bunny, Kate Price and Flora Finch play it together. It would be hard to find a stronger comedy three anywhere. The situation is of the slightest and, in weaker hands, might have degenerated into mere horse-play farce, whereas these players have kept the situation alive with real comedy all the way through. The photographs are fine.

"MARSHALL P. WILDER" (Vitagraph), April 22.—The great monologist, ten minutes before he is to meet his audience discovers that a bottle of ink has spilled and ruined his one white shirt. He is in his dressing-room at the theater. The trouble in getting another gives him all the chances he needs to give much amusement by facial expression. His face kept the audience in a ripple of merriment.

"THE LITTLE WOOLEN SHOE" (Edison), April 23.—Miss Mary Fuller and Mr. Marc McDermott play this tragic picture with a happy ending, and once more show their remarkable versatility. The husband in the story, played by the latter, is drunken and his wife, played by the former, in despair, abandons her baby on the porch of a wealthy family, in the hope that, under any circumstances, it will have a better chance of growing up into a useful, happy life than with its own unhappy parents. The picture shows how this loss woke the erring husband and wrought upon him so that he reformed. They became well-to-do; but it was years before they found their little daughter again. It is very well acted and the camera work is good.

"COUNSEL FOR THE DEFENSE" (Vitagraph), April 23.—If this interesting and closely knit melodrama had been played by any other players, it could, nevertheless, have been recognized as a Vitagraph product. It is just the kind of story, leading up to a court scene, that the Vitagraph Company likes. They are all played by excellent actors and all are effectively set, conducted and photographed and all have freshness and life. This one surely has and it won favor with the audience. Miss Leah Baird plays in it a girl who is loved by a young lawyer, played by Mr. Costello; but who, for her parent's sake, marries a rich ruffian, played by Mr. Broake. This ruffian wrongs an Italian, played by Mr. Phillips, in some way, and is stabbed by him. The wife is accused. The lawyer, counsel for the defense, cross questions the Italian so sharply that he breaks down and confesses.

"DREAM DANCES" (Edison), April 20.—A poetic picture of dancing by a fairy-like little girl, Virginia Myers, five years old. It is best described as delicate, sweet and pleasing. The camera work is good.

"HOW PATRICK'S EYES WERE OPENED" (Edison), April 20.—On the same reel is this very fresh and commendable comedy. The idea is that Patrick, a rich politician, has fallen in love with a "beauty." A salesman puts an instrument on his telephone that enables him to see who is talking at the other end of the line. The first time he calls up, it is afternoon and what he sees makes him jealous. The next time it is later and he sees a wig removed and a set of teeth taken out of a wide mouth. He "plays the right cards" to assure the rival's winning the widow. The photography is good.

"ALKALI IKE'S BOARDING HOUSE" (Essanay), April 23.—A farce that made the audience laugh harder than any picture we have seen in several days. There is crockery smashing in it, and the throwing around of coffee pots and pans and whole-boiled potatoes; but underneath this, there is a real situation and there is good fun in it. The trouble begins when the woman cook serves up dishwater soup. Ike is delegated to courteously remonstrate; but her majesty flies off the handle. After she has departed, and the boys have come from their hiding places in the barn, Ike is once more lucky in being the choice of fate. He is promoted to be cook. He becomes a potentate. There is fun before dinner is ready; but the best part comes when breakfast is ready next morning and more added after it is finished. The camera work is good.

"THE TREASURE CAVE" (Cines), April 23.—A picture with some very interesting scenes and backgrounds. For all that one could tell, it was made in Africa, and shows us the cave of a band of Arab robbers. These villains made a bad mistake when they captured the charitable wife of Ben Ali, for that stately merchant first frees her and then brings the Bey with his picturesque soldiers to take the outlaws. The photographs are pretty good.

Independent.

"LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW" (Eclair), April 23.—A pleasing picture made from Washington Irving's famous story of the school teacher of Sleepy Hollow. There's a schoolhouse scene, with little Dutch-American children that was much liked, as was the quilting bee where the elder young folks are having a jollification. It isn't an exciting picture, and the headless horseman won't fool even the children, naturally. Yet we call the release a fair feature; it represents a famous and widely popular story. The little stone church of the picture looks very much like the Sleepy Hollow church at Tarrytown. It is well photographed.

"THE ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 6" (M. P. Distributing and Sales Co.), April 17.—We have a big number this week with many items of interest. Perhaps the best item shows views of Carlisle College (for Indians) during commencement week. The cadet students show fine, soldierly form in their parade and review. The Co-Eds (Indian girls) also pass before the camera. One pretty maid gives, in the sign language, a rendition of "Nearer, My God to Thee." Another item shows the steamship "Ontario" still burning. It was beached near Montauk Point, L. I. Still another item shows how the people along the Mississippi River are fighting high water floods. There are among many other things a view of the women motormen and conductors (not so bad looking, either) on the street cars of Del Monte, Calif.; the removal, with military ceremonies, of Gen. Phil Kearny's body; carnival views in Paris and Athens (an interesting comparison); a fashion plate; a new kind of bridge that opens to let ships pass under, and a picture of crowds cheering the King and Queen of Italy.

"GLIMPSES OF SOUTHERN FRANCE" (Great Northern), April 13.—A beautiful picture of Lyons, France, and scenes on the Riviera. The views are magnificent and the photography perfect. There are carnival parade views taken at Nice, in it.

"JOKE ON MR. HENPECK" (Great Northern), April 13.—Henpeck is the tavern keeper. His patrons play the joke on him. They steal his overcoat, pawn it and sell him the ticket. Then they drink up the money at his house. The man, his wife, and especially his hired girl are excellent character sketches. The incident is interesting, cleverly told and clearly photographed. It will amuse, especially where the audience is a little rough. There is nothing offensive in it.

"THE CRIMSON HEART" (Lux), April 26.—A cleverly composed picture showing with sustained suspense the attempts of two crafty crooks to obtain a case of valuable gems and how they were foiled. The crimson heart was a tattoo mark on the hand of one of the crooks, and by it the woman who owned the gems and was, it seems, about to be deceived recognizes him in time. The photographs are good.

"THE MINER'S CLAIM" (Lux), April 12.—A picture by the American company. It tells an out-of-doors love story in which Mr. Geo. Gebbert plays the leading part. Mr. Gebbert was recently with the Nestor Company. The story of this first Lux American picture, while it doesn't rise very much above the commonplace, affords a well utilized chance for a very tense struggle between two men, and a sharp race to the sheriff's office to file claims between the same men. This race is as tense as clenched teeth. The early scenes drag a bit and show some camera consciousness in the steeping forward to the center near the lens, of the characters. It is only fairly photographed. It is good, because of the thrills.

"BROTHERS" (Champion), April 24.—These brothers are newsboys. They are, say, ten and fourteen, and the sole support of their mother, a widow. One is arrested for playing crap and sent away by the juvenile court. This was just before the mother died, and the priest promised to care for the younger one. The picture now skips thirty years. It shows one brother as a priest, the other as a tramp and burglar. The priest protects him, fleeing from justice, and finds that it is his brother. We fear that this will cause some discussion as have other pictures that have shown priests or religious people doing things that are not commendable. The acting is simple and the picture is the kind that, aside from this one thing, is likely to be popular. The camera work is good enough.

"A MILLIONAIRE FOR A DAY" (Imp), April 22.—A machinist (played by Mr. Gumpson) gets an inheritance of $50,000 in money. This comedy picture shows how he spent it. It includes the start in his home city, the trip to New York, and the metropolitan experiences. This was doubtless suggested by the doings of a Scranton man. The photographs are pretty good, except one of an interior of a theater, which the man hired so that he could be the only spectator. The scenes are well chosen and give a glimpse into the great city's "white light" places. The man was glad enough to get back to his old job.

"BANGS' BURGLAR ALARM" (Powers), April 23.—Bangs, the inventor, had a burglar alarm novelty that everybody was fighting for. When a window was pried up it would make a report and scare the intruder away. The picture's situation is well worked up, and the interest well sustained while Bangs, out late with the boys, is about to give his own invention a tryout. It worked. The photography is a little dull. The picture seemed to amuse.

"COALING SHIPS BY MODERN METHODS" (Powers), April 23.—On the same reel we find the pretty well photographed picture of some marvelously working coal conveying machinery. It is very instructive and interesting.

"THE SEWER" (Solax), April 24.—A sensational, two reel subject with scenes in the great sewers like those of Paris. Naturally it deals with the roughest side of life. These demi-monde scenes, pretty well photographed, are realistic and very interesting. The melodramatic story plays first on our sympathy for little Oliver (Solax Kid), a child kept by a gang of thieves and forced to steal. On the other hand, it excites our loathing and hatred for the villain, a dark-bearded man, who among respectable people passes as a great philanthropist. This double life gives to this character a very good chance to work his malignant purposes. Oliver has a very great adversion to the dishonest practices he is compelled to do, pick pockets, break into houses. On one of these expeditions he makes a friend of a doctor who is kind to him and whom, later, he rescues from a dangerous trap into which the gang of criminals have lured him. The way of escape leads through the sewer, and on his way out through this the doctor has sensational adventures. He is lost. He wades through slimy waters. He is attacked by rats. Nearly sickened by stench and gases, he finds a way out. The police are warned, the thugs arrested and, in a fitting climax, little Oliver finds a good home.

"BEDELIA AS A MOTHER-IN-LAW" (Reliance), April 27.—We have become acquainted with Bedelia in other pictures. She doesn't disappoint us here. Mr. Johnson and Miss Fearnleigh play the married couple. There is something refreshingly new in the farce's situation and it is very well acted. It will undoubtedly make many hearty laughs. The photographs are good.

"PYGMY CIRCUS" (Reliance), April 27.—This is another of the Reliance Company's extremely well photographed natural history series. Some very queer animals are shown with their ordinary names and their Latin names. Such pictures need no praise; there is, we understand, a great demand for them. We find them exceedingly interesting.

"THE AVERTED STEP" (Republic), April 23.—This picture's first scene shows us a real sweat-shop and introduces us to a young girl who longs for a pleasant life with pretty things. She gets them by a marriage with her employer who then neglects her. The second man, who exerts a baleful influence, comes and is hypnotising her when the husband returns. He fires him and the evil man turns into the Devil. This turns out to be the young wife's dream added to her day, like real life. This keeps her from the wrong step. The husband has grown rich and takes her to Europe. The heroine is very pleasing in this role and her husband also will be popular. The picture is very fairly acted and photographed.

"THE MYSTERIOUS CIGARETTE" (Gaumont), April 21.—In this picture the Gaumont people show their usual artistic sense in choosing backgrounds. The story is set mostly in the gardens around a great summer hotel, perhaps in the south of France, with stone steps leading up into piney, mysterious glooms and with bright sunny spots in which are benches on the lawn in front of hydrangeas in bloom. There are also wider views of merit. It is, as its name suggests, a detective story. A very large check is cleverly stolen from a banker by a pair of swindlers who get him to make a "doped" cigarette. They are found out by a peculiar perfume that the women uses. The banker's daughter helps in uncovering the crime.

"DRIFTWOOD" (American), April 22.—A well-acted picture in the usual Western backgrounds. It deals with piteous things and there's an incident in it that might have been suggested by Ibsen's "Rosmersholm," but the situation is vigorously an dfreshly worked out in a new way. It is a story that is American in its spirit, not European. Miss Pauline Bush plays the wife of the drunken man (Mr. Kerrigan). Mr. Richardson is the false friend who wants to get him out of the way so that he can marry her. Miss Von Trump plays a young girl who brings help and persuades the drunkard to reform. The photographs might have been a little better.

"THE BURGLAR'S REFORMATION" (Reliance), April 24—The maker of this picture believes that the surest way to make a man honest is to trust him. He here shows how it works out. Whether it convinces or not as a picture of real life, we are compelled to follow it as such, both by the logical way in which it is developed and by the natural way in which it is acted. It is set wholly in interiors, which are very well made, and the camera work is perfect. Mr. Henry Walthal plays the burglar, Mr. Johnson plays the man who reforms him, by giving him a chance. A new player who does very well takes the leading lady's part.

"WHEN MANDY CAME TO TOWN" (Thanhouser), April 26.—A very well acted and convincing picture. We don't necessarily call it truthful of theatrical life with many interesting views of back stage doings. The stage manager is the pivotal character and, on the other side of the picture, we see his pleasing, simple home, with his wife and little daughter, the "Thanhouser Kid." The part she plays, even though it may not be strongly convincing, relieves the picture's rather sophisticated theme and will make it popular. The photography is perfect and in two of the scenes the lighting is poetic; one is a fireside picture of the mother darning stockings; one is the child at the moonlit window.

"REJUVENATION" (Thanhouser), April 23.—A Florida picture showing how a bored and aimless millionaire (Mr. Cruze) drifts out to sea in a boat; is rescued by a lighthouse keeper's daughter (Miss Florence La Badadie), The picture also shows how this adventure was his step to happiness. It is naturally acted. The scenes are typical views among the magnificent Florida hotels, with their beautiful arches, fountains and palm gardens. There are also sea scenes and scenes around the lighthouse on an island. The last scene is very charming; it shows the man, his wife and their pretty little girl. The photographs are very good.

"THE LITTLE NUGGET" (Nestor), April 24.—This picture, taken in the Western mountain lands, freshly develops an old situation, and makes it fairly dramatic and convincing. The "Little Nugget" is a very pretty little girl. Mr. Jack Conway and Miss Eugenie Ford play the leading roles, as father and mother of the child. The woman's affections are besieged by a man who is distastful to her and her husband's character is such that she is left open to attack. The outcome, though, is pleasing and is brought about by Little Nugget, whose helplessness on her sick bed makes a strong appeal. The photographs are good.

"LOTTERY TICKET, NO. 13" (Nestor), April 22.—A love story, clearly told in pretty backgrounds and well photographed, if it has a pretty heroine and a manly young hero, will give good entertainment to a large number of people even when it is not artistically conducted. This picture has these virtues in large measure; but it seems unusually melodramatic. The lottery ticket is used to make the hero rich. This is a weakness of another kind. Miss Victoria Ford is the heroine; Mr. Carl Von Schiller is the hero; Miss Josephine Ricketts is the heavy villainess.

"THREE OF A KIND" (Nestor), April 27.—A fairly amusing farce comedy in which three country swains have their legs pulled by a pretty stranger stopping in the town. It is briskly conducted, well photographed and good natured and will probably make some good laughs.

"AMERICAN LUMBER CO." (Nestor), April 27.—Some of the photographs of this mill, the largest in the world, are thin; but one or two are very good. It is instructive.

SELIG WILL DO "KATZENJAMMER KIDS."

The famous "Katzenjammer Kids," created by Gas Dirks, and which formed the principal feature of the comic supplements of the Sunday papers some years ago, are to be immortalized by the Selig Polyscope Company. It is the plan of the Selig Company to release one "Katzenjammer" picture each week, beginning May 3, as half of a split reel The characters will be impersonated by the following persons: The Captain, Chauncey B. Herbert; Mrs. Katzenjammer, Lillian Leighton; Hans by Guy Mohler; Fritz by Emil Nuchberg and Uncle Heine by John Lancaster.

CARNEGIE MUSEUM PICTURES EXHIBITED.

The big game hunting pictures, taken by Capt. F. E. Kleinschmidt in the Arctic Circle for the Carnegie Museum Alaska-Siberia Expedition, were exhibited for the first time in the big auditorium of the Carnegie Museum, Pittsburgh, during the past week. Upon the invitation of Dr. William J. Holland, director of the Carnegie Museum, Normal and high school classes filled the hall and enjoyed the pictures and Capt. Kleinschmidt's lecture immensely.

There can be no doubt that pictures of this kind and of like educational character are going to be the most popular with the better element of the American public, and will be the means of ultimately making picture fans of those who even at this late day assail the moving picture blindly whenever the opportunity presents itself. Schoolteachers in particular have long been classed as the avowed enemies of the moving picture. It is therefore interesting to read the letters from school principals which are printed below; strong in their praise of the moving picture when it contains anything really worth looking at. First is a letter from Dr. Holland, the Carnegie Museum director, to Captain Kleinschmidt, which is followed by letters to Dr. Holland from the director of Pittsburgh high schools and from the superintendent of the Department of Biology, Pittsburgh Normal School, thanking him for inviting their classes to the lecture.

The letters are as follows:

CARNEGIE MUSEUM
(Department of the Carnegie Institute)
Pittsburgh, Penn., April 20, 1912

Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt,
145 W. 45th St., New York City.

My dear Captain Kleinschmidt:

Herein please find enclosed a check to cover the expense of your trip from New York to Pittsburgh, in order to lecture to us last Wednesday evening.

It may be of interest to you to know how the matter was viewed, and I have therefore had my secretary make a copy of two of the letters which have been received, and enclose them to you.

For my own part I wish to say that your lecture was a revelation. I have seen multitudes of moving pictures presented by men who have a national reputation, but none which have ever given me so much pleasure as those which you showed. My friend, Mr. Shiras, who is famous in both hemispheres for his snapshots of big game taken by flashlight in the night, remarked to me during the intermission of the lecture that these were the finest pictures of the kind which had ever been to his knowledge shown anywhere. Your audience was simply delighted, and there is a great demand in all quarters for a repetition of the display if it could be arranged for.

I cannot take more time at present to write, but I wish to thank you from the bottom of my heart for the pleasure of the evening, and only regret that we cannot see you oftener and for a longer period. I am,

Yours very sincerely,
W. J. Holland,
Director, Carnegie Museum.

PITTSBURGH HIGH SCHOOLS
Director's Room
Edw. Rynearson, A.M., Director
April 10, 1912.

Dr. William J. Holland,
Pittsburgh, Penn.

My dear Doctor Holland:

This morning hundreds of boys and girls as well as the teachers in our high school are singing the praises of the Carnegie Museum because of the pleasure given them by Captain Kleinschmidt's lecture last evening. Many of the teachers have said that they never before heard a lecture that gave so much natural history as the one last evening. At times, the audience was excited with the dangers that beset the captain in his investigations and journeyings. The icebergs, the nesting habits of the birds, the movements and characteristics of the seals and walruses were so vividly shown that if the temperature of the hall had been lowered sufficiently we could easily have imagined that we were taking the trip.

We are certainly grateful to you for the kind invitation that you extended to the teachers and pupils of the high school. The fact that the lecturer held the attention of so many boys and girls for over two hours is the greatest compliment that can be paid to his ability. Our only hope is that he may return to Pittsburgh some time in the near future, so that those pupils who could not get tickets may be able to enjoy the same treat that their more fortunate classmates enjoyed last night.

Most sincerely yours,
(Signed) Edw. Rynearson

PITTSBURGH HIGH SCHOOL
April 10, 1912

Dear Dr. Holland:

We wish to tell you how very much we all enjoyed that very realistic lecture on the auks and polar bears. All I have heard express an opinion—and they are many—regard it as the most wonderfully interesting lecture of the season. Educational work would be much more rapidly advanced had we more such opportunities as you so generously afforded us.

The Senior and Junior Normal Classes of the Fifth Avenue High School join me in expressing our appreciation of your favor.

Sincerely,
Anna M. Deens,
Dept. Biology, Normal School, City.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch, the morning after the lecture, spoke in highest praise of the Alaska-Siberia pictures to the extent of a column. These pictures will be presented as a complete high-priced exhibition in a leading New York theater shortly and elsewhere on the road. They will also be offered to state right buyers.

WESLEY SAYS SO.

William A. Wesley may become known some day as the George Washington of Picturedom, on account of his slogan: "Wesley says so," which means that he cannot tell a lie. Now Wesley says that he has leased the Park Pavilion at Gardner, Mass., and during the coming summer will conduct a dance hall and moving picture entertainment. Whether the dancing and pictures will be simultaneous, consecutive or parallel is not stated, but we should hope simultaneous a la Young's million $ pier at Atlantic City.

MISS JEANETTE TRIMBLE.

This charming actress plays the part of Josephine in the Cines feature production of that name to be released May 11 by George Kleine.

GENERATOR VOLTAGE.—Virginia (name of town suppressed by request) writes: "Have a 110 volt generator which has maximum capacity of thirty amperes. Would it be possible to change it to a sixty volt dynamo delivering higher amperage? If this could be done, kindly explain how."

Yes, it can be done by rewinding the machine. It is also possible that the change could be accomplished by changing the field coils, though whether this would be practical in your case I could not say, but you could submit the proposition to the manufacturers of the generator. At sixty amperes the generator should be capable of delivering 55 amperes, and the rheostat loss would be far less than when generating at 110 volts.

HAT IN THE RING.—Mass., (name of town suppressed by request) writes: "Salt Brine, Washington, Ind., needs to brush up on his chemistry. Brother Gregory certainly started an original stunt, and should have the credit for it. Even if chemistry disproved his assertions theoretically, I would take the word of the ones who have given it a practical test and reported. I can see nothing to the chemistry argument of our Indiana brother. Indiana is right when he says that sodium compounds burn with a yellow cast in an alcohol flame. But he forgets that pure alcohol gives a flame rich in hydrogen, and therefore the flame from the alcohol itself is almost colorless in the daytime, and shows only a light blue tinge at night. The sodium imparts its yellow color because it can easily show stronger than the blue of the alcohol. But does Indiana forget that if he introduced potash, or a potassium compound with the soda, that the yellow would be entirely obscured and the color of the flame would be a deep violet? What about the chlorine gas that enters into the composition of salt? Suppose there was a slow chemical union between the chlorine gas and the carbon, and that the soda was left behind in the brine, and did not enter into the composition at all. It is easily possible in chemistry, but not probable. What color would we have then? Now Indiana, tuck this bit of chemical information into your brain and keep it there: Any light that contains carbon, lime, (chemically speaking, the last is calcium) or magnesium, and possibly barium or strontium, will give a pure white light of great intensity. Why? Because solid particles introduced into any flame will increase the intensity of that flame, if the particles are very finely subdivided. And the greater resistance the particle shows in its melting power the greater the intensity of the light. Carbon, lime and the magnesium oxide have not yet been melted, though they will soften in the intense heat of the electric arc. Now, if you remember your chemistry you know that the flame of hydrogen is practically colorless. Blow fine particles of carbon dust through the flame and it becomes brilliant. Oxygen gas is a pale blue flame, also when burning. Burning both oxygen and hydrogen together the flame is still colorless. Now, place the flame from these two gases against a stick of lime, and what results? An intense, brilliant light of at least 1,000 candlepower (2,500 c.p. is possible.—Ed.), and before this was done the light would not equal one candlepower. The particles of lime becoming intensely heated, disintegrate into minute particles, and intense brilliancy is the result. That is the oxy-hydrogen light as it is used to-day for stereopticon and even moving picture work. And the funny part of it is, Indiana, that the salts of calcium (lime) burn with a yellowish red flame. Strange the oxy-hydrogen flame isn't red, eh? Further, magnesium burns with intense brilliancy to magnesium oxide, and the magnesium oxide wouldn't burn if you placed it in a blast furnace. There is a possibility that Epsom salts, which are magnesium sulphate, as the editor supposed, might be chemically disintegrated into magnesium, sulphuric acid, and carbon dioxide or monoxide. But in my opinion the magnesium, when it burned to magnesium oxide, which is an exceedingly bulky powder, would fill the lamp house completely with its white dust. Brother Gregory, you've got something on us, and we'll all dope it out after a while. You certainly started something interesting, and, I believe, something profitable. Regarding 'New Stunt,' April 13th issue, I take issue with you, Brother Richardson. The keystone effect must be entirely destroyed and the corners made perfectly square if the aperture plate is perfectly parallel with the curtain, and that is what I understand the operator was trying to do. If the aperture plate is moved out from the top it would tend to bring it parallel with the curtain, and make the rays of light of equal length, on exactly the same principle that a swing back is used on a camera in photographing tall buildings without distortion. On a steep pitch, of course, this might be impossible, but with a fixed curtain, the curtain would be tilted back, say one foot. This would shorten the long ray one foot and lengthen the short ray one foot, a gain in equalization of two feet. How does that idea strike you? Some time ago someone wrote about carbons on the screen. I have seen this occur once, but it was with the stereo lens. This, at first, seems impossible, but I can vouch for it. It came from the back condenser which projected some rays through the air hole in the top of the mount. On the machine the rays were cut off by the head of the machine, but when the lamphouse was thrown over on the stereo, the rays were thrown through the port hole and showed the carbons flaming about two feet above the picture. I have had the same thing happen to myself, only the carbons were shown on the wall of the operating room, and I could always tell how they were burning. It is also apt to happen with reflectors which throw a reflection of the carbons on the wall. If they are set low the rays are apt to go through the port. I want to know if anybody ever got a perfect light on alternating current. I never did, and never saw one. I can get an exceedingly good light, with the very, very faintest trace of blue in the center. You would not notice it unless you went looking for it, but it is there all the same. Does everyone have this experience? Now, I've taken up a lot of your time, and won't write any more this time, but I have some decided opinions on some of your pet theories, Brother Richardson, such as running at variable speeds, explosions of films (I can imagine your looks at that), unions, and some other, and I disagree with you in many of them. So if you live through this, I'll write you again on these subjects."

You fellows are going too deeply into chemistry for the editor, so I guess I will have to let you fight that matter out among yourselves. In another part of the department this week, however, it will be noted that an opinion has been asked from one of the World's experts in carbons. But, regardless of opinions, chemical arguments, or arguments as to chemical effect rather, I saw what I saw in Baltimore, and am a great believer of things that are demonstrated to me. I would very much like to know the whys and wherefores myself, but Brother Gregory's stunt worked. That I'll swear to. As to the keystone effect being eliminated by the raising of one end or side of the aperture, you seem to forget that you are dealing with two separate and distinct propositions. The first one, and the one our friend was dealing with, has to do with the focusing of the light rays. The other has to do with the spread of the light rays, which would be the same, regardless of how the aperture might be set. The light rays spread a certain given distance for each foot of travel, after leaving the projection lens, and the altering of the set of the aperture plate would not alter that distance in the least; therefore, my brother, you are in error. As to the carbon showing: I myself have seen the same effect you describe, but I did not understand this to be what the friend was trying to describe; from what he said I supposed the carbon points appeared in the picture. If the image was above the picture then you are correct. Yes, I have often seen a perfectly clear field with alternating current; though it is, of course, much more difficult to obtain the same with A. C. than with D. C. I assure you I am not at all displeased to have correspondents announce their disagreements with my ideas. It is through disagreements and arguments that we learn. You should be careful, however, when you toss your hat in the argumentative ring that it is an old one—one that a few dents will not materially injure.

ALL IS WELL.—Galveston, Texas, writes: "I wish to thank you for having located my trouble for me. You remember that I said my pictures were dark. You are right. We did not get over 35 amperes at the arc. When we enlarged our place, we had new wiring put in, and the machine leads were in conduit, so I could not see what size they were except those that came out to the rheostat were No. 8. I have changed these wires to No. 4. Also the leads from rheostat to lamp were too small and I have changed them to No. 4. I have 110 volts at the rheostat, and 51 at the arc, and we now have the best picture in town."

We are glad to know that your difficulty has been located, and remedied. It is often a very difficult proposition to locate trouble and it surprises even ourselves sometimes that we can hit a nail as squarely on the head as we do in a great many instances.

PAPER WANTED.—Hamilton, Ohio, writes: "To settle a dispute, kindly send me the Moving Picture World, showing me the proper and improper way to set carbons for A. C. and D. C."

If you will give me the date on which this was published, if it was published at all in the department, and remit 10 cents in stamps, we will be glad to accommodate you. As it is, it would probably require a dollar's worth of time to look back through possibly 100 numbers of the department and locate what you want. In fact, I have no recollection of having published the desired data in the department, though probably it has been done. However, why don't you invest $1.50 in a hand-book, in which all such matters are not only described in detail, but are also illustrated?

POWERS SIX TROUBLE.—Texas (name of town suppressed by request), writes: "Recently our Powers Six developed a grind which I located in the 'toggle joint idler gear.' Having noted your answer to Syracuse, N. Y., on page 47, April 6th issue, I proceed to tighten up the connecting link until it was firm in the slot, but would allow the framing carriage to move easily. The grind was not very bad before I did this, except when the carriage was in one position. After tightening the connecting link, however, the grind was very bad indeed. I then took the connecting link and the small casting that holds it in the slot off the machine, and discovered that the small casting which holds these two pieces was loose on the main frame, being held by only one bolt at the bottom. It could be moved for quite a distance from side to side. This is the only trouble we have had with the machine which was installed by us some months ago. Was not this casting supposed to be firmly fastened to the main frame casting? I cannot locate its number in the January 6th issue."

Yes, most emphatically this casting should be held rigidly to the frame. It is not shown for the simple reason that it is supposed to be permanently attached to the frame, and in effect a part thereof. It is held to the frame by two pins and two screws, and this is the first time, so far as I know, that one of them has come loose.

LIGHT TROUBLE.—Somerset, Pa., writes: "I have been having trouble with my light, which is not steady. Am using an economizer on 110 volt, 133 cycle current; use 30 amperes. Alternating current gets my goat. Have been working with it only about four months. Use Bio carbons, ⅝ cored. When I set them, the light will burn about ten minutes perfectly, and then the trouble begins. Have tried different ways of setting the carbons, but without improvement. I think the difficulty lies in the economizer. Have a rheostat, but when I connect that up it gets red hot. I never had any trouble during six years of work with D. C., but A. C.—well, that is something else again."

It is rather difficult, in this case, to determine what is wrong. You say that after setting your carbons, they burn perfectly for about ten minutes, and then as I understand you, the light dies out. That would indicate to me a very large possibility of bad contact somewhere, probably in the carbon jaws. Clean them out thoroughly with a file; also note carefully whether your lamp leads, or the wires leading to the operating room get warm after a few moments of use. If so, that would probably account for the trouble. Examine all your connections from the main-house switchboard to the lamp, being sure they are clean and tight. Notice also if the trouble is due to wrong set of carbons and change in position of crater due thereto, or to the lower carbon tip burning up in front of the crater. I would suggest that you expend $1.50 for a hand-book. I think you will find it will be as good an investment as you ever made. The various carbon sets, and their effect, are therein both described and illustrated.

OPERATING ROOM.—California (name of town suppressed by request), writes: "I wish to call your attention to a case of condenser breakage which I had recently, and the remedy I accidentally discovered for it. Noticing the two screws which hold the metal supports of the outer condenser shell, which is fastened to the lamp-house, being badly burned, on the inside of the lamp-house, I decided I wanted new screws in their places. Upon removing the upper screws holding the dowser support, I noticed that the support sprung away from the lamp-house about ¾ of an inch, going to show that there was something wrong. Leaving the screws out, I replaced the condenser mount, and it worked back and forth quite freely, where before I had a hard time to get mount to fit where it belonged. Taking out the mount again, and replacing one of the screws, I fitted the mount again, and it worked as hard as it did before. The only explanation of the cause of the trouble that I saw was the warping of the lamp-house from the heat of the arc, thus forcing the condenser shell out of its true circle into a sort of an oval shape. I have fitted a piece of iron in between the support and the lamp house, and put in longer screws. Since then I have had no trouble with condensers breaking, although I have tried several out just from curiosity. Both the top and back of the lamp-house are always open, allowing the circulation of plenty of air. Now, while this may have been the answer to my trouble, it doesn't necessarily follow that it will prove equally efficient in all cases of condenser breakage. I merely call the attention of the readers of the Projection Department to the case, leaving the subject open for discussion. The lamp-house is a Powers No. 5 model. I have been fighting for a year for a new operating room and have finally secured a few concessions. The room (?) at present is in the form of a half circle, the back wall being 11 feet across, and the width at the widest part 5 feet. The landlord has agreed to build the room out square and add three feet in the front. When the work is completed the room will be 8 x 11 x 8, which will be a great improvement. The theater is possessed of two machines and a standard spot-light. There is at present only room enough for one machine in the operating room, the spot-light being placed outside. Under the new condition of things, I can place both of the machines and the spot-light inside, and still have more room to work in than I have now. The new room will be covered on the inside with one-inch lumber, that in turn being covered with ¼-inch asbestos, and the whole overlaid with heavy sheet metal, having double-locked joints. Spring shutters with master cord will cover all apertures. Will you tell me your ideas of the best motor drive? If I remember correctly, I sent you some time ago a sketch of my motor drive as it is at present. I wish to improve on it if possible, and any suggestions you can give will be warmly appreciated.

Also any suggestions as to improvements in the operating room itself will be thankfully received. I am not one of the know-it-all kind, and I fully realize that I am not too old to learn."

As regards the condenser matter, probably the same difficulty might be present in some instances where that kind of a condenser mount is still in use. As to the motor drive, you have not said what kind of a machine you are running, therefore about all I could say is, do not belt to the flywheel. If it is a Powers Six, or the Motiograph, both these machines have a special motor drive attachment, as also has the Simplex. The Standard and the Edison, I think have no special motor drive attachment. As to the operating room, the main thing is thoroughly fireproof walls, absolutely automatic wall shutters, which will close the openings instantly a fire starts, and ample vent flue through to the roof, or the open air. The shutter should be brought down immediately over, and within one foot of the aperture. This first might seem a difficult thing to do, but it is easily accomplished by means of a proper iron bracket suspended from the ceiling immediately over each machine. I would suggest that with an iron floor you should by all means have an insulating mat of rubber, cork, or linoleum in front of each machine. I like to hear a man admit he does not know it all. The one who realizes that fact is in a position to learn something, whereas the "know-it-all" fellow will never learn much of anything.

POOR CONTACT IN PRINTING.—Albany, Oregon, writes: "We enjoy the Projection Department immensely, and I am now going to ask why so many manufacturers turn out such a large number of films, badly out of focus, due to poor contact in printing. Can it be laid to carelessness in the printing room? Lately it has been especially noticed in the Lubin and Selig films."

If the fault of which you complain is due to bad contact in printing, then I should say it would certainly be chargeable to carelessness in the printing room. It could not very well be anything else, I think. And the matter is respectfully referred to both Lubin and Selig for attention. It must not be supposed that we mention the name of certain manufacturers in connection with complaints in order to "knock that manufacturer." The work of Selig and Lubin is in many respects magnificent, though they, like all other fallible mortals, develop faults sometimes, and also get decidedly careless, or rather their employees do, and when this occurs it is, in fact, a matter of kindness to have attention directed pointedly to the fault, and have it remedied. But there is nothing which will so quickly secure the remedying of a fault as publicly calling attention to it. A fault, however, is never mentioned the first time it is reported. Take the case at present before us: At least fifty letters have been received by the editor of this department, calling attention to the fault in question, and where there is so much smoke we are safe in assuming there is also considerable fire.

GOOD ORGANIZATION.—Secretary of the Boston Operators' Union writes: "Organized only two years ago, Boston Moving Picture Operators' has grown so rapidly that the Local has been compelled to move from its old room at No. 724 Washington Street to larger and better equipped headquarters, at No. 113A Elliot Street. The Local now has a large rest and recreation room for the use of its members. There is also an examining room equipped with three moving picture machines, with two committee rooms attached. The large room will be used for meeting purposes on the first and third Wednesday evenings of each month. It also will be utilized by the business representative in receiving applications from managers in need of operators, and for transacting other business of the Local. The telephone number is 3731—J Oxford."

I am more than pleased to know of the prosperity of the Boston organization. It speaks well indeed for the business ability of the men who have guided its affairs to date. Let us trust that two years hence will see an advancement equal to that made during the past two years. I would respectfully suggest that the examining room be also occasionally used for meetings tending to instruct the members of the Local by practical demonstration, lectures on projection, etc. I hope in the not distant future, maybe some time this summer, to be able to visit Local Union No. 182, though I cannot yet positively promise myself that pleasure.

LONG RUNS.— Sioux City, Iowa, writes: "This is my first time in the department, but after reading page 234, April the 20th issue, where somebody from this town says when he first came here no one was taking the World, the spirit moves me to put up a 'holler.' Just because one newsstand did not carry it, does not prove that none of the others had it. I have bought the World from Sioux City's newsstands as far back as four years ago, and have been on your books as a subscriber for about two years. This may seem a trivial thing to kick about, but I'm blamed if I want the boys to think that Sioux City operators are 'dead ones.' And now another matter: I'll bet a dollar to a new penny that Indiana (page 233) cannot run a tinted Selig film over an Edison machine more than a dozen times, without a break. When people claim long runs, why don't they give the number of hours per day? As you well know, there is some difference between 2 to 5 P. M., 7 to 11 P. M., six days a week, and 10 A. M. to 11 P. M., seven days a week. Next time you hear of an operating room fire, find out what make of picture it is. Nine times out of ten it will be a———. Watch it. What is the answer? Poor patches and rotten cement."

Plainly, Sioux City has an idea that the operator who does not read the Moving Picture World is a "dead one." Of course, we would not have the heart to disagree with him, and we are glad to know that Sioux City's operators have been keeping up with the procession. As for your bet of a dollar to a penny, I would like to take you up on that, unless you mean that it cannot be done by reason of poor patches made by the manufacturer. In that event, however, your reference to the Edison machine is hardly fair, since it would occur the same with any other make of machine. There is no reason why a Selig, or any other film, would not go through an Edison machine just as often as it would go through any other make, provided that the Edison was in proper adjustment. As to the length of run, your position is well taken. Naturally the machine which is in operation eleven hours a day, would have twice the liability for trouble than one only used four and one-half hours a day would have. Right here, let me say a further word as regards these long runs without stop: I hold that it is entirely possible to run for an almost unlimited time without a stop, though, of course, there must be a certain percentage of luck mixed up in this, since there may be an accident which no human foresight could avoid. In order to accomplish these long runs, however, one must keep the machine in perfect adjustment, examining same carefully at least once each day, and renew sprockets and other parts as soon as they begin to show any considerable wear; must keep the wires, electrical connections and appliances in perfect condition; must not overspeed the machine, and must in addition to these things, carefully examine every foot of film after it is received from the exchange, and put it in good condition, cementing all loose patches, notching broken sprocket holes, and cutting out poor patches. Now all this is not ordinarily practical in an eleven-hours-a-day house, particularly where the film service is changed daily. The machine, electrical appliances, and connections can and should be kept in perfect condition, no matter how many hours a day they are used, but to carefully examine and repair from three to four, or five reels of film every day is quite another proposition. It is a task that would not be practical in eleven-hour houses, and must not be expected of an operator in any house, except that he be paid extra for that service. I am interested in what you say about fires, though I hardly think you can be correct in this matter, still if the manufacturer in question is making very poor patches, then his attention should be called pointedly to the matter, and I am sending your letter to the head of that concern, asking him to investigate as to the cement, etc.

BOOKS WANTED.—New Bedford, Mass., writes, ordering a hand-book and asking for catalog, or list and prices of all motion picture books at our command, also of an electrical dictionary, and books on electrical calculations.

Outside of the hand-book, which New Bedford ordered, we know of no book on motion pictures which would be of any considerable value to the operator. True there have been hand-books put out, but none which we can recommend as of having much value. The American School of Correspendence, Chicago, puts out two large volumes which are sold at $10. These books would be a nice addition to the library of any operator, but we do not feel justified in recommending them at that price. They contain a very considerable percentage of matter which would be of little or no practical value to the operator in his work, though some of it is quite interesting nevertheless. If the size of these books were reduced, and the price was cut down to say, $5, for the two volumes. We then could conscientiously recommend them to the operator as being a nice addition to his library, and worth the money. As to an electrical dictionary, and books on electrical calculations, if you will state more explicitly what kind of calculations you mean, I will be glad to look the matter up, and send you the name of a suitable book. I have found the book "Modern Eletrical Construction," published by Frederick J. Drake & Co., Chicago, Ill., to be excellent in many ways. The price of this book is $1.50, and we consider it worth the money.

AN ERROR.—Mr. Wm. Brown, Perth Amboy, N. J., writes: "Note in recent issue your comment on the longest throw. Your information in regard to the Million Dollar Pier, Atlantic City, being burned down, is not correct. The recent fire was on Young's old pier, from one-half to three-fourths of a mile distant from the Million Dollar Pier. You can, therefore, continue to make plans for a visit to the City by the Sea, and we will be glad to have you call on us at the same time. We have a mirror screen 16 feet 8 inches, and a throw of 140 feet. We seat 1,050."

I am glad to know that I was in error concerning the fire. If possible I shall certainly visit Atlantic City during the coming summer, and if time permits will also avail myself of your very kind invitation.

QUESTIONS.—Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "On page 31, of the hand-book, you say, 'If the rheostat coils are not all in, and it shows red, cut them in and add another rheostat in multiple.' (1) Suppose that was on 220 volts, what would be the result? (2) Don't rheostats in multiple give you twice the voltage? (3) Does it increase the amperage also? (4) Does an adjustable rheostat comply with New York laws? (5) Is there any way that a film could catch fire in a machine besides stopping it in the front of the light with the automatic shutter up? (6. What size fuses for coop and what size fuses for main, for D. C. and A. C.? (7) Can you use cartridge fuses on the main?"

(1) The quotation from the hand-book means that if the coils of the rheostat were not all in and showed red you should cut in the rest of the coils, which would have the effect of reducing the amperage, and then, in order to balance this decrease and bring your current up to what it was, add another rheostat in multiple. The result would be the same whether it was 110, or 220. (2) They do not. (3) It does, as is plainly shown by the illustrations on page 39 of the hand-book, but in the illustration of the water pipe, pipe 1 should have been very much larger than pipe 2, in order to properly show the idea. Two 110 volt, 25 amperage rheostats, working in multiple of 110, would give approximately 50 amperes. (4) I am not sure, but I think an adjustable rheostat is allowed in New York City now, provided it does not exceed 45 amperes capacity and has been approved by the officials. At least I know that one of the city departments is using an adjustable rheostat in moving picture work. (5) Yes, it is possible for the film to break between the upper and intermittent sprockets, and the loop to bulge out over the upper fire guard into the light. That is only possible with some machines, however. (6) I don't know anything about "coops." If you mean chicken coops, I should say a couple of feathers would be the proper fuse. If you mean operating room, it would depend on the number of amperes you would use at the arc. If by "main" you mean the main house fuses, carrying everything, then they would have to be large enough to carry the projection arc, or arcs, and all the incandescent lighting also. Fuses are the same for A. C. or D. C. (7) Yes.

A PUZZLE.—Stromsburg, Neb., contributes the following: "Something happened during our show last night that has certainly 'got my goat.' When we were about half through with the last reel for the night, the front lenses flew out of the lens tube. The threaded part of the lens tube is rather deep and we have put a brass collar in the tube so we don't have to screw the ring so much in order to set the lenses down tight in the tube. The lenses were put into the tube, the brass collar (not threaded) was next, and the threaded ring was then put in and screwed down just tight enough to make the lenses fit snug. The lenses, the plain brass collar, and the threaded ring, all flew out of the tube, and were thrown in every direction by the outside revolving shutter. Not a thing was broken. We gathered up the different pieces and put them in the tube again, and everything seemed to be O. K. We have just examined the lenses, and the threads on the tube and on the ring are in perfect condition. How did that ring get out of that tube and not injure the threads? And, you understand, the whole works came out of the tube at the same time, and shot out like they had been fired from a gun. We wondered if any of the boys had ever been up against that kind of a stunt, and what the reason for it may be."

Thumbs up, Stromsburg! My goat is in the ring along with yours. I can only pass this along to our readers as an example of queer happenings for which there is no apparent explanation.

AN INVITATION.—Mr. Edw. T. McDermott, president of Boston Operators' Union, No. 182, writes: "The Local has just moved into new quarters at 113A Elliot Street, where we have secured the entire third and fourth floors. We have furnished the quarters ourselves and they are nice and cozy. We would be pleased to have you pay us a visit and get acquainted with the boys, and trust that we may have the pleasure of entertaining you soon."

Before your letter came I had received data from which an article concerning the Local had been prepared. I therein expressed my desire to visit the Boston Local. I appreciate your very kind invitation and shall endeavor to avail myself of it some time next summer.

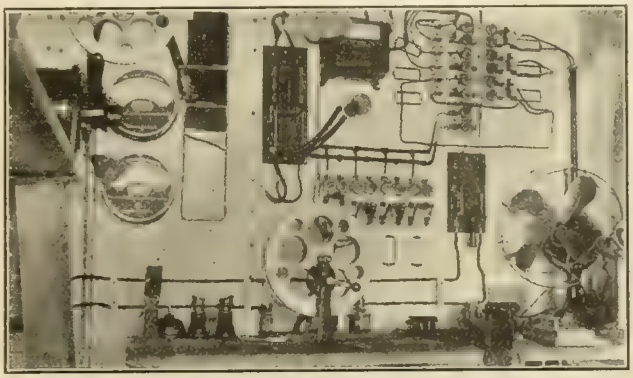
OPERATORS HOLD FIRST MEETING.—Waterbury, Conn., writes: "Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Auxiliary No. 1, held their first meeting Sunday, April 14th, in the I. A. T. S. E. rooms, and elected the following officers for the year: Samuel Witkoski, president; Frank Healy, vice-president; Ralph Stanco, financial secretary and treasurer, and Harry Streeter, recording secretary. The charter members are: Ralph Stanco, Frank Healy, Harry Streeter, J. B. Scozzaface, Robert Griffith, William Lamon, Frederick Lavine, Samuel Rosen, Nicholes Maleth, Samuel Witkoski, and Charles Pesino."

Success to the new organization. In the words of the immortal Rip, "May you live long and prosper."

POOR MATERIAL.—From Fort Worth, Texas, comes a strenuous kick regarding the material used in the idler brackets of a certain make of machine. Says it resembles pewter. Says that the manufacturer who puts out such material is dishonest. In fact, the letter is a red hot one. The writer, however, is in error. The material of which he complains is known as "die casting," and the trouble does not lie with the manufacturer, but with the exhibitor himself, who wants a cheap machine and yet wants a machine perfect in its operation. The manufacturer in question has added improvement after improvement to his machine without raising the price, and it is indeed wonderful that he can put out such a mechanism at such a price. Gray iron or brass would be very much better than the "die casting," but on the other hand, idler brackets made of gray iron would cost a great deal more money, and it would be impossible to use gray iron for all these machine parts without materially raising the price on the machine, or else taking off some of the improvements which you now enjoy the use of. As a matter of fact, and as I have several times said, the price of machines is entirely too low. A projection machine should list at not less than $300, or $350. It must be remembered that the manufacturer doesn't receive the list price—not by any manner of means. It must be freely admitted that those "die casting" parts are weak. I have personal knowledge, however, of the fact that the manufacturer in question has never hesitated to replace, without cost, any of these parts which break. I think Fort Worth wrote without adequate knowledge of the situation. I hope to see the time very soon when the price of projection machines will be raised, and raised to a point where the improvements can all be retained, and the machines also be made of the very best material obtainable.

SECTION OF SHEOL RESERVED.—Calexico, Cal., writes: "Enclosed find views of my operating room.

"The first view shows the front wall of the room and the switchboard. The second picture shows the machine and stand, the latter being of my own design. The feed wires are No. 4 to compensarc and No. 6 flexible cable from there to the lamp. Stand is about 5½ feet high, and the shelf, on which stands the rewinder, and fan is about 2½ feet from the floor.



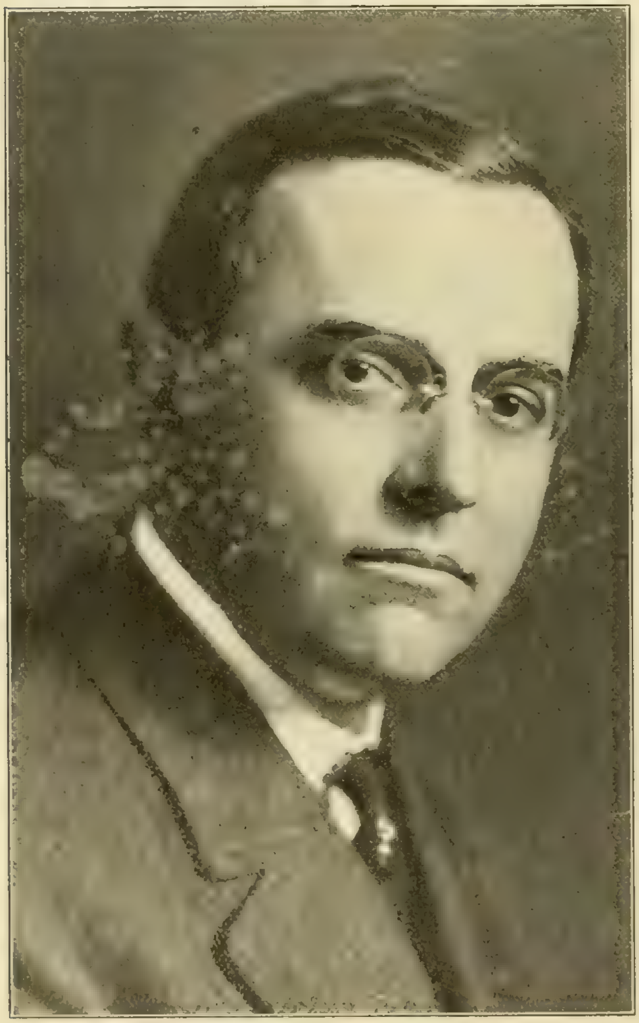
As to your criticism of my shutter, page 46, April the 6th, I refer you to Mr. Orr, manager of this theater. At a crank speed of 40 feet per minute, there is no flicker, except on very light pictures. At 60 feet (normal speed), no flicker is visible, even on the clear field. As to the guard on idler rollers to prevent film jumping, certainly you did not mean that the idlers would become worn flat, since according to the best of my belief idler rollers should be set twice the thickness of a film away from the sprocket, hence there can be no friction on rollers sufficientn to wear same. However, the guard is not intended to hold the film on the sprocket, but to prevent jumping when all other means fail. Film in good condition run on a properly adjusted and properly handled machine will not jump. Some day when I get real good and sore, I am going to sit down and put on paper exactly what I think of most of the Western and battle pictures put out by two of our leading manufacturers. There should be a little section of Hades set apart for such producers, and there they should be compelled to view such impossible, improbable, and utterly unrealistic rot for all eternity. A battle scene with a score of men to represent an army. A stampede of cattle openly driven by men in plain view of the camera. Stockades built of light poles set several inhces apart as a shelter from hostile bullets, etc. It seems to me that a few less releases a week, and the extra expense put into turning out productions with some degree, at least, of realism would improve the Western pictures immeasureably. I will stop here as I have no words with which to do proper justice to the subject."

I am thoroughly in accord with what you say concerning some of the Western pictures; particularly those put out by one of our leading producers. I have sat in a seat and viewed Western scenes (I lived in the wild, woolly place for many years myself), when my hand simply itched to throw a brick to the screen. I heartily agree with the suggestion you make concerning a small section of one part of the hereafter, to be set aside for the special benefit of the producers of such idiotic stunts. I also thoroughly agree with you that fewer releases, and better quality would be a decided improvement; but that would mean also less immediate returns to the producer, and the possession of sufficient foresight to understand that the increase in number of productions at the expense of quality is simply cutting off pieces of the hide of the goose that lays the golden egg.

The exhibitor himself went batty once on the subject of quantity. Some exhibitors wanted a daily change of as much as six reels, and the result was an enormous injury done to the business as a whole. The exhibitor has been to some extent pried away from this insane idea of quantity, and made to understand that quality is of paramount importance. No sooner however had we made progress along this line than the producer himself went crazy on the subject of quantity, and until he recovers and comes to an understanding of the fact that quality instead of quantity is the matter of supreme importance, the business will suffer permanently. I take the position that one reel of good, realistic, well staged, perfectly photographed, well acted film, is worth half a dozen of the kind you speak of, and will in the end bring in more money to the producer and to the exhibitor than will the half dozen punk productions. But in order to realize financially on that kind of a proposition, however, one has got to be able to look into the next year and the other years to come. As regards the shutter, I can only say that the thing looks impossible. However, I shall have one of them made, and have the matter tested out thoroughly and completely, and if I find you are right, I will cheerfully apologize. As to the idlers; what you say about their wear is to a considerable extent correct, provided they be always kept set right; that is to say, twice the thickness of a film away from the sprocket. Very likely, my dear sir, you keep your idler set that way, but how many operators do? In commenting on your remarks, I am not dealing with you alone, but with something like 20,000 other readers, probably at least half of whom are operators. If the idlers be held stationary, and be set just a little bit closer than twice the thickness of a film, you will find that a flat spot will be worn in pretty short time. As to the operating room—I've talked so much about other matters that I haven't space left for comment on it. Cut out that flywheel drive, though; it's bad!

MORE SELIG ANIMAL PICTURES.

"Down in Africa" is the title of a new animal picture soon to be released by the Selig Company, whose reputation for animal pictures has not been equalled in any land. Baby Lillian, the famous child actress, will play an important part in this production and the leading role will be played by Betty Harte. There are some thrilling situations in this picture.



MR. WILBERT MELVILLE.

Wilbert Melville is the director of the Lubin traveling stock company now located in Arizona. This company has sent back some very novel photoplays, one especially—a Mexican story which includes a real bullfight, made at Juarez. Mr. Melville's program is romantic and melodramatic and the atmosphere of the Southwest has appealed to his taste. He is equipped with a big outfit of paraphernalia and about 30 people. Mr. Melville's company will probably remain in Arizona and New Mexico until after Spring and some unique pictures may be expected.

MAX LINDER RETURNS.

The American admirers of Max Linder will be glad to know that the handsome countenance of the most famous comedian will again appear upon the screen. Max Linder, known all over the world for his comedy, recently underwent a very serious operation; for many weeks his life was despaired of and great anxiety was felt by all those who knew him personally, but he has fortunately recovered and will again appear in pictures.

Max Linder, the Motion Picture King, as he has been styled by his many admirers, whose delight he has been for these many years, can boast of a glorious past, for although still young, being in fact but 26, he has made for himself an enviable reputation both as an artist and an author. Having carried off the first prize for comedy at the Conservatory of Bordeaux, Max made his début at "L'Ambigu" in 1912 and was afterwards engaged by the "Varieties," where he introduced among other plays "Miquette et Sa Mère et le Roi." In 1905 he became connected with Pathe Freres and has been playing for that house ever since. Recognizing his talent, this firm has made a contract with him to appear with them exclusively.

Max Linder is pre-eminently a motion picture actor. He can interpret any class of scenario, from a touching drama of love and war to a farce of side-splitting situations. He is also a trained athlete and never fails to score where ability in this line is required for the success of the picture.

Pathe Freres does more than boast of having great artists—they have them—as the numberless films they have made in which these artists appear proves.

Max appears exclusively in C. G. P. C. films and we have received word from Paris that a fine lot of "Max" comedies will appear shortly. The first new film in which Max is to appear is "Max Is Convalescent," released May 14th.

THE L. J. CHAMBERLAIN CIRCUIT.

Manager Chamberlain has added to his circuit the Victoria Theater at Sunbury, Pa. It is one of the finest and most up-to-date houses in the state. It is on East Market Street, in the central part of the town. The building has an imposing front. Its entrance is a large arch, ornate in detail, finished in old ivory and gold. Above the entrance are a number of handsome and well-appointed offices. The entrance floor is mosaic, with the name "Victoria" on it. In the center stands a circular ticket booth of elaborate design. Plate glass mirrors and innumerable electric lights add to the beauty of the entrance. The interior is beautifully decorated. The seats are on a slope, giving an unobstructed view of the screen from all parts of the house. The house seats one thousand people. Indirect lighting is in use. There is also a direct lighting system to be used for vaudeville shows. At present the program consists of pictures, but the house has a stage 35 feet wide, 28 feet deep and 25 feet high, and the best of acts can be used, should the management ever see fit to do so. Above the lobby is a balcony and, in the center, the operating booth. Two Powers No. 6 machines are used. The theater is fireproof. This is the third house Manager Chamberlain has opened, the others being at Shamokin and Mt. Carmel, respectively. The screen is a "Radio" made by W. E. L. Reeger, of the Shamokin Theater—the Theatorium. All of Mr. Chamberlain's houses use this screen, and it is fine. W. H. Lyons is the resident manager and Geo. Page, the operator. Business has been to capacity since the house opened. Since this house was finished Mr. Chamberlain has improved his house at Shamokin. It has been enlarged and redecorated and now seats 450. The indirect lighting system is in use here. In fact, this system is used in all of Mr. Chamberlain's houses. Miss Mae Mantell is the singer and she makes a hit with her songs, for she has a fine soprano voice and knows how to use it. An orchestra of four pieces under the direction of W. C. Beane is used and with Miss Mantell goes over the circuit at least once a week.

ANOTHER GOTHAM THEATER JOINS PICTURE RANKS.

Another New York playhouse joined the ranks of moving picture theaters, when the Lyceum Theater, Forty-fifth Street, opened with the pictures of the Paul Rainey African Expedition. The attraction immediately jumped into popular favor and will continue indefinitely, where at first it was intended merely to remain for a week. The Paul Rainey pictures are being sold on a state rights plan and the exhibition at the Lyceum Theater will enable out-of-town exhibitors to drop in and see them at a regular time each day.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S CONSCIENCE" (Reliance).

A murder trial always has a gripping interest. Even the cold type account in the newspapers has its power to hold one more or less spellbound. The same is true of any well rendered motion picture of a large court-room scene. The big scene in "The District Attorney's Conscience" is a great city criminal court room, during the dramatic hour when a prisoner fights with the state for his life.

While such a trial itself is of extreme interest, in this picture there is a double interest in the fact that the district attorney is harassed by conflicting emotions of love and duty. It is his duty, as district attorney, to send the prisoner to the electric chair, while his sweetheart is entirely in sympathy with the prisoner and pleads with her fiance not to send the man to his doom. The young woman's sympathy, of course, is misguided; but as the case is one of purely circumstantial evidence, no one can say positively whether the young woman is right or wrong in her sentiments.

Scene from "The District Attorney's Conscience" (Reliance).

Upon this case depends the young man's success or failure as a district attorney for it is his first appearance as the public prosecutor. With his election to office came also the announcement of his engagement to the girl. But she was not to be his bride until he had made a name for himself. Thus, in his very first case, it will be seen that her mistaken sentiments were a hindrance to him. Nevertheless, the young man won the case by dint of hard work and the murderer was sent to the electric chair.

Meanwhile, the district attorney's fiancée had adopted the young son of the murderer. After the news of the electrocution had come, the district attorney, influenced by his sweetheart's intuitions, became conscience-stricken. She had almost convinced him that he had made a great mistake and sent an innocent man to his death. In desperation the district attorney went to the lawyer who had defended the condemned man and admitted to him that he thought he had made a fearful mistake. However, the executed man had made a confession before his death, which had been suppressed by his lawyer, so as not to add to the fame of the district attorney. This confession was produced by the lawyer and the district attorney went home with a satisfied mind.

Mr. Henry Walthal makes a very professional looking district attorney, and the opposite role of the district attorney's sweetheart is played by a new actress in the Reliance roster, Miss Edith Lyle. Little Edna Foster, well-known in pictures as little "Billie," has a good boy part as the son of the convicted murderer.

This picture can be used as an ordinary feature and can be featured strong if there happens to be a big murder trial on locally at the time. For such a purpose it is well to bear the picture in mind. It is good because it does not descend to any mawkish sentimentality in favor of the prisoner before there are any real facts of his guilt or innocence. The scenario was written by Mr. Terwilliger and the production was made by Mr. James Kirkwood.

"THE SPIDER'S WEB" (Vitagraph).

Most crooks defeat their own ends by over-reaching, and usually come to grief while enjoying themselves in a state of false security. "The Spider's Web" tells a story of the machinations of a coterie of get-rich-quick gentlemen. The mining stock game has superseded the old-time gold brick dodge, although the great majority do not seem to know it. Men who are considered fairly wise financiers fall for the new form of gold brick scheme, while they would laugh at anyone who had been swindled in the old days.

Scene from "The Spider's Web" (Vitagraph).

The story tells about a financier who is taken in by some gentlemanly crooks. They got him to invest his money in their mining swindle, but like most swindlers they come to grief by the false security of one of their number. With his ill-gotten proceeds he took much pleasure in making the acquaintance of young women and casting them aside when he tired of them. This he did once too often, for one of his cast-off loves, in her search for justice from him, came across some very strong evidence against him, and was thereby the means of breaking up the combination.

"MYTH OF JAMASHA PASS" AN ODD SUBJECT.

"The Myth of Jamasha Pass," to be released by the American Film Mfg. Co., on Thursday, May 9, is an extremely odd subject, allegorical in character and teaching a moral lesson which might be summarized "Beware the Siren's Lure." Nowhere has finer photography been seen or better pantomime, and the thousand feet are profusely colored.

The picture illustrates a number of lessons and each auditor finds in it a subtle meaning which applies to him alone. A girl in tattered garments beckoning two young prospectors to come to her on the mountain top when they know that acquiescence means destruction, is an ancient legend still to be heard in the lower Sierras.

"Rice and Old Shoes" (Lubin) is a well-told story with a strong moral lesson and no doubt in hundreds of cases may prove of anti-divorce value. There are many instances like this where a mistaken or misguided husband or wife may be brought to a right knowledge of themselves by timely reflection.

THE EVERLASTING JUDY
NESTOR CO.

Scenes from "The Everlasting Judy" (Nestor).

"THE EVERLASTING JUDY" (Nestor).

In "The Everlasting Judy," the Nestor Company has produced a comedy that cannot help but be a laugh provoker. It is full of humorous situations that will develop uncontrollable roars of laughter as the story is unfolded. The photography is excellent and Jack Conway as "Jed" and Eugenia Forde as "Judy," the two main characters in this play, do justice to all the opportunities given them to display their ability. "Jed" is really more to be pitied than laughed at, for "Judy" is certainly a tyrant, and when the poor fellow attempts to drown his sorrows in whiskey one can hardly blame him. However, his desire to get up enough courage to brave his wife causes him to imbibe too freely in the nerve-giving fluid and, seeing an empty freight car, he crawls in it and is in a second wrapped in the arms of Morpheus, dreaming dreams of when he shall be lord and master of his home—and "Judy."

But, while he is so happily dreaming, the train is speeding away to the far West, and the next time we see "Jed" is some days later, in a little Western town, happy, though hungry. At last he is free! But, realizing that the inner man must be satisfied and observing the friendly eye of the occupant of a rig nearby, he inquires of the kindly looking individual if he knows of anyone who needs a man, and is told to jump in the rig, the owner of the rig being the foreman of a ranch nearby and, as he tells "Jed," there is always room for one more.

"Jed" marches into dinner with the boys, with joy in his heart, but the smile dies on his lips as he observes the familiar face of—"Judy," who, despairing of "Jed's" return, has accepted a position as cook in this ranch. The recognition is mutual and "Jed," without waiting to say "Goodbye," makes one dash for the door. After an exciting chase, the boys overtake him and he is brought back to his loved (?) one.

The next day, we see "Jed" and "Judy" making their way to the railroad station, despair written on "Jed's" face. He resolves to make one last dash for liberty, and, just as the train is getting up speed, "Jed" drops off and the boys help him on a horse, for "Jed" is not going to take any more chances. And the last we see of "Jed" he is going at top speed in the opposite direction to the train, with the parting words of the boys "Keep right on a-ridin'" ringing in his ears. This rip-roaring Western comedy will be released on Wednesday, May 1st.

"THE ANGEL OF THE TRAIL" (Belmar).

In "The Angel of the Trail," which will be released May 1st, by the Henry Belmar Motion Picture Manufacturing Co., Mr. Belmar, whose past productions, notably among them "Tracy the Bandit" and "A Ride for Life" are well known to the patrons of the picture playhouse, has produced a real feature photoplay that will place his concern among the foremost of popular film play-making companies.

This latest of the Belmar outputs is, in truth, a massive production, brim-full of thrilling and remarkable situations, but throughout which there is an undercurrent of sympathy that cries out to the most callous hearted of photoplay goers. The piece is more than worthy of the enormous expense and concentration of energy entailed in its making.

The scenes of this giant production, which number 140, in three reels, is laid chiefly in quaint old Paso del Norte, Mexico; and the wonderful picturesque Yosemite Valley.

The "Angel of the Trail" is a beautiful young girl, whose brave deeds are legion in the Yosemite, where she lives with her foster father, a wealthy and distinguished Don, who, unknown to her, is the leader of a band of dread Mexican guerillas, and who kidnapped her when very little in revenge for the unrequited love of her mother.

Perdita, "The Angel," heroically leaps to the bridal reins of the stage coach "leaders," when they are on the very edge of a precipice, toward which they have been stampeded by the outlaws who have attacked the passengers. She averts a catastrophe, but unable to save herself she rolls headlong down the mountain side, and, although painfully injured, sends a timely message for help to the nearby U. S. Cavalry, by her faithful St. Bernard dog. A detachment of cavalry, after a thrilling battle, put to rout the bandits.

Valores, their unconquered chief, rather than be taken alive, blows up his castle-like residence, in which he has taken refuge, with dynamite; and thus dies with nought in his heart but scorn for his enemies. Perdita is restored to her loving father.

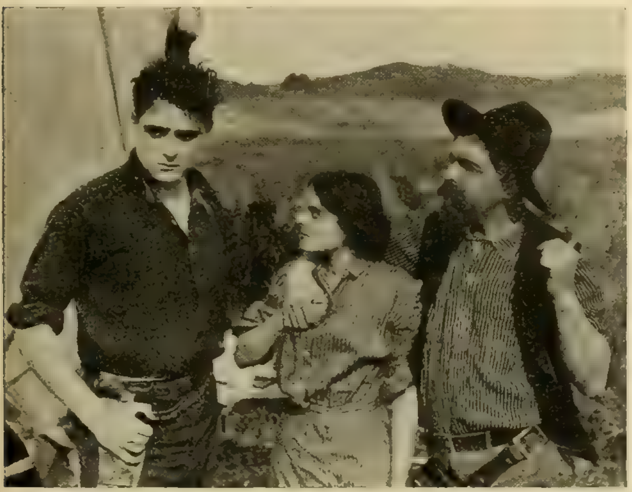
The play, while thrilling to a degree, is admirably handled by a company of notable picture actors; it is thoroughly realistic and does not wander beyond the confines of flagrant impossibility.

The charcoal industry in Cuba is Pathe's latest industrial release. From the gathering of the wood, through the process of burning to the shipping, the interesting and useful industry is shown in a complete manner.

"THE END OF THE FEUD" (American).

Among this week's Independent releases will be found a capital Western drama from the American studios entitled "The End of the Feud." The story begins with the starting of a feud between old man Jackson and his neighbor, George Perriwell, in Kentucky. The conflict was handed down to a grandson, Bruce Jackson, who was sworn at the deathbed of his father to avenge the family name. After his father died Bruce went West, but met with bad luck and was found near to death on the desert by a pioneer and his daughter, who were traveling in a prairie schooner. Nursed back to life by the daughter, Bruce fell in love with her and secured the father's consent to marriage.

Scene from "The End of the Feud" (American).



Scene from "The End, of the Feud" (American).

One day when Bruce was passing the wagon he discovered the name of Perriwell painted on the wagon box and found that it was the name of the man with whom his family were at war. Calling Perriwell to a distant grove of trees, Bruce told who he was and the two men proceeded to shoot each other up, but Bruce's revolver missed fire and the girl managed to prevent her father from shooting Bruce, after which there was a reconciliation and the families, between whom there had been deadly enmity, were united.

NEW FEATURE FOR F. & E. FILM CO.

The F. & E. Film Company has purchased rights on "The Land of Darkness" for the states of Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois and Kentucky. The bookings in Illinois and Wisconsin will be handled through the F. & E. Film Co., 721 Caswell Bldg., Milwaukee; for Michigan, through the F. & E. Film Co., 305 Equity Bldg., Detroit; and for Ohio, through the F. & E. Film Co., 104 Prospect St., Cleveland.

"HONOR AND THE SWORD" (Lubin).

A duel with foils by experts in the art of fencing is something of a novelty in pictures. Such a contest is a feature in a forthcoming Lubin subject entitled "Honor and the Sword." The story is that of a young man who marries an actress and is disowned by his wealthy father. He goes to work for a firm of jewelers and has the misfortune to lose a valuable package of gems, stolen from him in revenge by the French fencing master of the company to which the young man's wife was formerly attached. The young man is given five hours to return the package or suffer arrest.

While the young man is seeking a way out of his trouble, the fencing master goes to his home and tells his wife of the trick he has played upon her husband, proposing to restore the gems and save the husband's honor if she will run away with him. The wife has been conducting a school for fencing to help out with the household expenses, so she proposes to the fencing master that they fight a duel to decide the question. A lively bout follows in which the fencing master is disarmed and driven from the house.

It happened that the boy's father heard of his son's trouble and came with offers of assistance in time to become a silent witness of the duel between the actress-wife and the fencing master. Filled with admiration for the girl's courage, he decided to forgive his son, whereupon the family was reunited.

Scene from "Honor and the Sword" (Lubin).

Miss Ormi Hawley, who took the part of the actress, is an expert fencer. Her opponent is Clarence Elmer, an actor possessed of almost equal skill with the foils. The bout lasted for several minutes and is decidedly interesting.

THAT $40,000 WORTH.

Oh, see the pretty models! And the $40,000 worth of Worth, Paquin, Louise and Redfern creations they wear—all the tailored morning costumes, afternoon wraps that have been picked by society for wear this spring and summer. All 'o this is in a film, "The Saleslady," released Tuesday, May 7th, by Thanhouser and considered by many the most ambitious "fashion-film" ever attempted. There's a crackerjack plot, too, in which a young man is advanced from shipping clerk in a department store to floorwalker through the efforts of his sweetheart, "The Saleslady." Then he attempts to discard her and again through her efforts finds himself back in the shipping room.

"JESS" IS NEXT.

The next Thanhouser two-reeler is "Jess." New Rochelle has made a fine spectacular film of this story, says Bert Adler, who supplies this "info":

"The release date is May 28th—a Tuesday.

"The author is the author of 'She,' last year's Thanhouser masterpiece—H. Rider Haggard.

"As 'She' abounded in mystery so does 'Jess' abound in sensation.

"A single effect, the burning of Silas Croft's home, is alone a triumph in spectacular production—alone worth going a long distance to see.

"The special paper and booklets that have become associated with all Thanhouser feature efforts, of course go out with this. The maker's name, the story title (thousands know it), and the author's name, is a combination that must get the money for the advertising exhibitor."

"THE STAFF OF AGE" (Imp).

The staff of age in this short Imp drama, which forms part of the Imp Saturday split of May 11th, is a small boy, admirably played by Joe Moore, the youthful and versatile member of the Imp Films Company's acting forces. The boy in the film story shows many excellent traits of character for one reared amidst his disagreeable surroundings. He is frugal, obedient and kindly at heart. His old grandfather is a crippled peddler and earns a precarious livelihood on the streets by selling laces, and other small truck to the passersby. Unfortunately the old man had omitted to secure a license and when challenged by the police he could not produce one. So he was taken to the court where he was in danger of being fined. Here the boy ("the staff of age") came to the rescue with his proffered pence, but the kindly magistrate refused to take this money and the old grandfather was dismissed.

The film shows in narrative, rather than dramatic form, a series of scenes of life of the poor as it is lived in indigent quarters of most great cities and gives opportunity for two clever pieces of character acting, that of the aged cripple being quite ably played by Mr. Ober, whilst in the part of his grandson, Joe Moore shows wonderful shades of ability.

Joe Moore is being trained in the best training school for moving picture actors in the United States and should, as time progresses, go from success to success.

"ON THE SHORE" (Imp).

There is a sharp dramatic turn in the story "On the Shore" which will unquestionably make the film an attractive one to moving picture audiences. An old fisherman is about to be dispossessed from his home "on the shore," by the powers that be of a dock company which requires the land upon which the fisherman's cottage stands for the purpose of making an extention.

But the fisherman is a very stubborn man, prone to insist upon his rights, prescriptive or otherwise. So he quarrels with the manager of the company, wounds him, is arrested, jailed and stands in some danger of being punished for his offence.

But the fisherman's saving possession is a pretty daughter who assists him by mending his nets and keeping house for the old fellow, and she undertakes to intercede with the wounded manager in behalf of her father. The manager is very human and very humane. Not cherishing resentment, he forgives the fisherman and so arranges matters that the Dock Company will put its extension on a piece of land removed from the fisherman's cottage.

The dramatic turn of the story consists in the eloquent pleading of the fisherman's daughter for her father's freedom. She not only succeeds in this, her immediate object, but achieves one that she probably did not contemplate when she started off to interview the handsome, wounded manager. She made him fall in love with her. And so, in forgiving the father, he at the same sime won a pretty young wife.

This story is worked out on the Californian coast and contains some pleasing scenes on fishing life. Mr. E. J. Le Saint has a role that admirably suits him in the character of the good-hearted manager of the Dock Company. The parts of the fisherman and his daughter are played by Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer.

"LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET" (Imp).

On May 16th the Imp Films Company will present a two-reel subject entitled, "Lady Audley's Secret." The production of this is in the hands of Mr. Otis Turner and he may be relied upon to make as great a success of this picture as he did of "Shamus O'Brien." It will make a world-wide appeal in virtue of the fact that the novel was the greatest piece of fiction produced by that well-known author, Miss M. E. Braddon, a very prolific novelist, who is still living in dignified retirement in Richmond, Surrey, England. Miss Braddon scored as great a success with "Lady Audley's Secret" as Mrs. Henry Wood did with "East Lynne." In fact "Lady Audley's Secret" is an universal best seller all over the world. It deals with English society life in a very dramatic form and is full of boldly drawn characters, striking incidents and has a magnificent story. The settings also are characteristically English. The selection of "Lady Audley's Secret" as an Imp two reel subject is a very astute one. Everybody has read the novel and everybody will want to see the film.

SAMUEL STERN'S ANNIVERSARY.

On Sunday afternoon, April 24th, Mr. Samuel Stern, of Philadelphia, a well-known manufacturer and jobber of moving picture machine parts and supplies, and Mrs. Stern, celebrated their crystal wedding. Besides Mr. Stern, his wife, Bertha, and their two sons, and a host of relatives, covers were laid for some two hundred guests, including many notable persons of that city.

Mr. Stern's efforts to provide entertainment for the party were a grand success. The guests were treated to vocal and instrumental entertainment which lasted for more than an hour, after which, they entered the dining hall to partake of the supper, which was the real feature of the day. Mr. and Mrs. Stern took their seats at the head of the family table, and opened the first bottle of wine, after which the party proceeded to eat, drink and be merry. Of the three, it would be difficult to say just which one was indulged in most, as there was an abundance to eat, and plenty to drink, and there postively was every reason in the world for all to make merry. Indeed, amid such surroundings it was impossible to help being merry. The tables were prettily decorated with flowers and favors.

The orchestra played quite some before the chairs were pushed back, for the diners to listen to the congratulatory remarks addressed to Mr. Stern and his wife, by their many friends who responded to the toastmaster's request for "a few words." The Rev. Dr. Nathan was heard from first, followed by Mr. S. Lubin, of the Lubin Film Manufacturing Co. Then Mr. R. Rosen, father of the toastmaster, and so on, until about a dozen were heard from.

Handsome cut glass candlestick holders were presented to all the guests as souvenirs of the occasion. That over, the orchestra was again heard from, and to the strain of a nice dreamy waltz, Mr. Stern gave the first dance of the evening, with his sister, Miss Ella Goldstein, to the Moving Picture World representative. Everybody present had a royal time, and we offer our congratulations, and sincerely hope that Mr. and Mrs. Stern may live to enjoy and celebrate their next fifteen years of wedded life.

"THE TITANIC."

A picture that demonstrates the wonderful value of the cinematograph as a matter of record as well as a means of bringing the dead back to life is the half-reel subject entitled "The Titanic." This picture is an absolutely genuine and authentic animated photograph of Captain Smith on board of his vessel before it sailed.

The picture was made some months ago, when the wreck of such a mammoth vessel was considered an impossibility. There are scenes showing many parts of the vessel and the various activities, such as taking on cargo, deck scenes, etc. The item of particular interest is in the living portrait of Captain Smith. He appears well in the foreground and remains there long enough for everyone to have a good look at him.

Though only a half reel, it is a feature of the strongest kind. The film is being sold by the Warner Feature Co. at 145 W. 45th St., New York. A copy of the picture has been sent to England as a present to the widow of Captain Smith. There has been a tremendous demand for this picture; over a hundred and fifty prints were sold before our time of going to press.

NEW HOUSE AT LEXINGTON, KY.

The Orpheum Theater, Lexington, Ky., which cost about $17,500, was opened Saturday, April 20, at 10 o'clock. Mr. J. H. Stamper, Jr., is the owner of the new theater and is being congratulated upon his taste in the construction and equipment of the neat little photoplay house. All day long people flocked to the new theater and it was estimated that about 3,000 people passed in during the day.

The theater is one of the finest photoplay houses in the South and is better equipped than many theaters in much larger cities. It has a seating capacity of 300, and one of the largest screens in the state. The house is well ventilated and equipped with modern conveniences.

"AN ITALIAN ROMANCE" (Champion).

A recent reorganization of the Champion forces is beginning to show results. Notably among these is the picture entitled, "An Italian Romance" about to be released. The story is that of an Italian girl who has come over to this country, leaving her lover behind in Sunny Italy. The girl is employed in a sweatshop, the foreman of which falls in love with her. When he proposes, the girl is obliged to tell him that she has a lover at home, whom she expects to marry. About this time the lover writes to the girl to send him money, so that he may join her. This she does, borrowing the amount necessary from an old Italian cobbler, with whose family she lives. In due time Antonio arrives; but he proves to be a worthless sort of fellow, spending his time in low dives and consorting with other women. The girl discovers his infidelity and casts him off, transferring her affections to the foreman of the sweatshop, who has not given up winning her and later marries her. A quarrel ensues between the two men and results in a duel. But the girl interposes in behalf of her husband, drugging his wine, disguising herself and fighting the duel with the discarded lover, whom she bests in the encounter just as her husband arrives on the scene.

Scene from "An Italian Romance" (Champion).

Scene from "An Italian Romance" (Champion).

A pecularity of this picture is the splendid work of the players. The part of the young Italian girl is excellently portrayed. There is a lot of animation in her work, especially in the scene where she denounces her faithless lover. Here the wild frenzy of a jealous woman is fairly thrilling. The old Italian cobbler is a fine but of characterization, such as is seldom seen in pictures. Altogether the subject is a great credit to the Champion Company.

"IN QUARANTINE" (Essanay).

"In Quarantine" is one of the biggest laughing hits for May. Its plot is unique and bristles with situations humorous in the extreme. Doctor Ann Quill, a lady physician, has a large practice that demands her constant attention. Also, Ann has a sister, Bernice, who is a pretty and charming young lady, but not a graduate of medicine.

One bright morning Ann is returning from the hospital and meets Bernice at a corner drugstore. Wishing to call on a friend and patient, and not needing her medicine-case, Ann gives it to Bernice and tells her to take it to the office.

Bernice is returning to the office with the medicine-case when she is seen by three young fellows, Jack, Dave and Harry. They are instantly smitten with her charms and follow her to her home. Waiting until she has entered, they gather before the house and see the sign, "Dr. Ann Quill." Instantly they think Bernice the doctor, and Jack hits upon a great scheme to become acquainted. He tells the boys he will return to his apartment, pretend to be sick, and for them to summon Dr. Quill.

Now, the three conspirators do not suspect that Bernice, suspicious of their following her, has sneaked out the back way and is listening to their scheme from a hiding place behind the porch. Determined to assume Ann's title for a while and get even with the boys, Bernice now slips back into the house. Jack and Dave now hide at the side of the porch and Harry rings the bell. Bernice comes to the door, listens to his tale of woe and says she will go with him to Jack's apartment. Returning to the office Bernice tells her scheme to her sister's two men attendants who have charge of the chemical laboratory and asks them to go with her for protection.

A moment later Harry is somewhat astonished when Bernice comes out with the two attendants, who have her medicine case. However, he proudly takes her by the arm and leads her off triumphantly, while Dave and Jack look after them with wry faces. Jack now starts around the block to get into his room and pretend illness before Bernice arrives, while Dave trails after the others.

Bernice now is enabled to get sweet revenge on Jack for the trick he is playing. While Dave and Harry look on dumbfounded, she diagnoses Jack's pseudo-illness as a very dangerous fever and orders him into quarantine. The two attendants now take all his good whiskies, cigars and everything else from the room. Bernice chases Dave and Harry home to disinfect their clothes, then leaves poor Jack locked up and miserable. Realizing it is now no joke, Jack gets his pals on the phone while they are spraying themselves with all kinds of disinfectants, explains his plight, and they finally agree to come over with more whiskey, cigars and cards.

Gaining entrance through Jack's window with a ladder, the boys greet their quarantined pal and a poker game is soon in progress. Meanwhile, Bernice and the attendants return to the office and are having a good laugh over Jack's predicament when Ann enters. Bernice explains matters to her and tells of leaving Jack some powders for his "fever." Ann takes one look in the medicine-case, then throws the office into a panic by saying the powders left are rank poison!

A mad race to Jack's room now ensues, and the boys are suddenly startled to hear the door creaking under the combined weight of Bernice, Ann and the two attendants. Hastily Jack's face is powdered and he falls on the couch while the boys hustle the poker things from sight and admit the frightened sisters. Ann and Bernice, at sight of Jack's white face, almost swoon from fright and believe the poison has killed him, but suddenly are amazed to see him spring up and put an end to their fears by explaining his joke and wiping the powder off. Bernice now has to explain she is not the doctor, introduces Ann to the boys, and the quarantine is raised with the hearty consent of all.

John Steppling is funnier than ever as Jack. Mildred Weston plays Bernice charmingly, and Lily Branscombe portrays Ann with great vigor. Dwight Mead and Bryant Washburn are well cast as Harry and Dave. The film is booked for release May 9th.

DAVID MILES LEAVES MAJESTIC.

David Miles, who has directed the production of Majestic pictures since the formation of that company, has resigned. His last production will soon be released under the title "Dogs." Mr. Miles has other plans, but is not ready to make them public at this writing. In the meantime he will give some attention to his farm, but promises to be back in the picture business before long.

"SOULS IN THE SHADOW" (Solax).

CAST:

A misguided soul	Blanche Cornwall
A shadow	Darwin Karr
Her lover	Herbert Barrington
Her sister	Fannie Simpson

Tense, gripping and emotional are the dramatic events which lead up to the killing of a reptile in the guise of a human being. Blanche Cornwall and Fannie Simpson reach wonderful heights of dramatic tension.. In shadowy darkness, souls struggle for conscious freedom and unhampered expression, while the atmosphere is surcharged with tragic and unruffled "quiet."

In society one occasionally comes across a girl who is self-willed and curious. She is adventuresome and takes the kind of chances that some people would consider indiscreet. Such a girl is this pretty creature, whom, in this photoplay, we call "A Misguided Soul." This soul, unthinkingly, commits a big social wrong and later she commits murder in an attempt to extricate herself from an untenable position and the further persecutions of a man who shadows her with his presence. A big ethical question is involved. The problem here is not decided, for nature, a stronger force than anything else on earth, intervenes and metes out a just punishment.

BONDS FOR STATE RIGHT BUYERS.

The feature film business has assumed such proportions that the question of absolute protection of territory has become of vital importance with purchasers of state rights.

It will be recalled that, two years ago, the Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company sold exclusive rights for a film which reproduced the Buffalo Bill Wild West and Pawnee Bill Far East show. These pictures proved great money-makers, not only in all parts of America but in almost every civilized country of the world. A notable feature of the marketing of this film was the fact that a surety bond for one thousand dollars was required from each and every purchaser of territory for this film. In that way, protection for the purchasers was assured.

The Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company now announce a three-reel feature film, depicting important incidents in the thrilling career of Col. W. F. Cody, known the world over as Buffalo Bill. By special contract between the Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland that company will undertake to furnish a bond for one thousand dollars to every purchaser of territorial rights for the new Buffalo Bill feature. The purchaser in turn will be required to furnish a surety bond for one thousand dollars to the Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company to guarantee their contract for the territory purchased.

Thus the Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill Film Company are still in the lead in the exploitation of feature subjects, and no doubt with the great popularity of Col. Wm. F. Cody, who is retiring to private life after having toured the world thirty years as America's representative frontiersman and Wild West hero, these pictures, depicting actual happenings in the life of the Last of the Great Scouts, should prove to be one of the most successful features yet offered to the showmen of America.

AMONG THE BRAVEST.

When the ill-fated Titanic sank, carrying its host of passengers to a watery grave, numbered among the bravest was Daniel W. Marvin, son of Mr. H. N. Marvin, of the Motion Picture Patents Company, who was returning from his honeymoon. It is said of the young man that he fought his way through the crowd on the neck of the ship with his wife and placed her in one of the lifeboats and then stepped back to take his chances with the stricken ship. His wife was saved.

It is also reported that Noel Malachard, a cameraman in the employ of Pathe Freres, is among the lost.

"CAMILLE."

Two reels of gorgeous sumptuousness in costume and scenic display. Every actor taking part was selected for his special fitness alone. The great emotional climax of the story in a wonderful setting is a triumph of the painter's art and the actors' genius. Duse, Bernhardt and all the great actresses of the world have essayed the role of Camille; and thereby has resulted the indelible stamp on the pages of their record of immortal fame. With this presentation, the name of Gertrude Shipman is blended and the stamp of her genius on the film shall add to America's lustre a glory that will not be dimmed or effaced by time.

STERN POSTER CO.

Push and energy are the life of every business, and this is particularly true of every branch of the moving picture business from the taking of pictures to the running of theaters, but nowhere is the same tact, patience and ability required as catering to the exhibitors with posters and supplies.

Among the more recent firms in this field of endeavor are the Stern Brothers, under the firm name of the Stern's Poster & Supply Co. These enterprising young men opened their place of business at 43 E. 21st St. but a few months ago, and from the first the result of success was assured.

The growth of their business was so rapid that more and more help was required until to-day they have one of the best equipped poster and supply establishments in the city.

Mr. Charley Stern, who has for so many years been with the Peerless Exchange, has left that firm and taken active charge of the Poster & Supply Co. management.

Aside from the best mounted posters, which by the way is a new ruling of the A.B.C. people, they carry a full line of supplies and at prices that cannot be duplicated elsewhere. They are the pioneer builders of asbestos booths and have installed more than one hundred throughout Greater New York, and never in any case have they failed to pass inspection by every department of the city. They have done all the booth work for such firms as Marcus Lowe, P. G. Williams and the Automatic Vaudeville Co.; this in itself should be a guarantee of their sound construction.

NEW HOUSE FOR NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.

Papier Brothers & Bishop, of Trenton, N. J., have leased a prominent location on George Street, New Brunswick, N. J., for a picture theater. Plans for the new house are now being prepared for a building to cover a lot 41 feet wide by 156 feet deep. The seating capacity will be 900. An elaborate ventilating system will be installed, the seats being wide and comfortable. The interior decorations are to be lavish and artistic. Papier Brothers own the Star and Majestic Theaters of Trenton. Professor Bishop is proprietor of the Arcade Dancing Academy, and will have a dance hall in the new theater building.

ONLY ONE "KID CANFIELD."

The only and original "Kid Canfield" wishes the Moving Picture World to say that some one other than himself is posing as "Kid Canfield" throughout eastern Canada in connection with the Champion picture entitled "Kid Canfield." He announces that a reward will be paid for the address of theatres known to have shown the picture, and theater managers are warned that the law will be invoked against any house showing the picture with a "faker" presenting "Kid Canfield's" act.

AMERICAN PLANS TWO-REEL SUBJECTS.

The American Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, is planning a number of elaborate two-reel subjects for production in the new Chicago studio now rapidly nearing completion. Some especially good scenarios are under advisement and it is freely predicted that the American has some surprises in store for Independent exhibitors. The American will soon be in position to produce subjects of every possible kind and is throwing open its doors for the consideration of every variety of good ideas.

WILL HANDLE ATTEL-KILBANE FIGHT PICTURES.

Louis M. Berg and Henry Jordon have secured the state rights of the Attel-Kilbane fight pictures for New Jersey and a large part of the New England States, and are now prepared to negotiate with exhibitors for time. This subject is said to be excellent from all points of view. It contains no knockout and is a good lively exhibition from start to finish. From all reports the "fight" pictures are enjoying great popularity these days.

STELZER BROTHERS MOVE.

The Stelzer Brothers, dealers in moving picture machines and supplies, formerly located in McCook, Neb., have moved to Lincoln, Ill. This firm carries a complete line of machines and supplies, and have a first-class machine shop in connection for repair work. Strict attention is given to this department and nothing but genuine factory parts are used. Machine works and display room located in Dehner Block, Office 800 Kankakee Street.

LITTLE BOY BLUE (May 6).—The Star baseball team, composed of small boys, is having a practice game in a vacant lot, when Harold bats the ball through the window of a small, shabby house. Going into the house to apologize for the damage .Harold finds an aged couple—Mr. and Mrs. Stone, who speaks kindly to him. As they talk the landlord enters, telling them that they must get out the first of the month. Harold goes back to the boys and tells of the old couple. They decide to go to Harold's elder sister, Elizabeth, for advice. They find her entertaining the Girls' Friendly Society of the Grace Church, and it is decided that the girls' society and the boys' basebell team will give a Mother Goose Bazaar in the chmurch vestry, the proceeds to go to the old couple. The bazaar is a great success.

All the participants are in Mother Goose costume, Harold being dressed as Little Boy Blue. He has a miniature haystack and sells popcorn. In the course of the evening two Italian organ grinders come into the bazaar and blay, while all the children dance around them. After the organ grinders leave, Harold begins to nod sleepily and finally crawls under his haystack, pulling the hay around him, and goes to sleep. The hour grows late, the customers all leave, the girls and boys count up their money, then prepare to go home. Elizabeth cannot find Harold and finally becomes much alarmed. Her sweetheart, Paul, suggests that the organ grinders stole him and they go out on the street and tell their troubles to a policeman. The organ grinders are soon found, playing on a street corner and the policeman is convinced they know nothing about Harold. They go to the home of the old couple and Mrs. Stone who has brought up many children, feels sure that Harold is somewhere in the church. So they all go back to satisfy the old lady, and there, "under the haystack, fast asleep," Mrs. Stone discovers Little Boy Blue.

THE SALTED MINE (May 8).—Neil Brown, employed by a large Eastern syndicate, is sent West to examine and perhaps purchase a silver mine owned by Fred Harvey. Harvey is advised of the Easterner's coming and determines to "salt" the mine to insure the sale. In due course, Brown arrives and is welcomed by Harvey, who introduces him to his daughter, Mary. It proves a case of love at first sight between the young man and the ranch owner's daughter. Brown is taken out by Harvey to see the mine and so wonderfully well has it been salted by Harvey's henchmen, that he concludes to buy it on sight. They depart into the city to make out the necessary papers. In the meantime, Mary overhears her father's mine boss boasting to some of the other men of the clever way in which the mine has been salted. She determines to go after her father and his intended victim and warn the latter. Her purpose revealed to the boss, however, he refuses to permit her to leave the camp, and locks her in one of the outhouses, so that she cannot get away. An open window in the house in which they lock Mary, however, solves the problem for her. She escapes, gets her horse and by means of a neck-breaking ride, gets to the city in time to save her father's honor and her lover's employer's money.

THE VIOLIN'S MESSAGE (May 9).—Blossom Vane and her ten-year-old brother, who is a violin music composer, are in extremes, the struggle of life is so severe that the girl cannot pay her rent, and is in fear of eviction. The landlord, Cyril Johnson, has recently lost his wife and is in consequence an unhappy grouch. He tells his collector to use extreme measures, get the rent or evict. The collector gives one more day of grace, which is the best he can do. The boy pawns all the music which he has composed but it only amounts to a trifle.

The night before the expected eviction the boy has a dream which inspires a theme. He gets out of bed and works it out on the violin. A policeman and the early morning milkman pause to hear the pathetic strains. They go their way, each whistling the refrain. The milkman in his rounds delivers at Johnson's mansion. He is so happy that he buys a flower and gives it to the housemaid. She in turn gives it to the butler to place on the master's breakfast plate. Johnson is about to brush the flower aside, when the butler explains. The rich promoter thinks better of it and takes the flower to his office, there he tells the collector to hold off for a few days until he can visit the girl. He then sends flowers and food to the house and finally makes a call to see for himself. Johnson takes Blossom and Bennie for a ride in his auto and as he pulls up at the mansion, shows Blossom the picture of the wife who passed away and asks her to take her place.

BRAVE, BRAVER AND BRAVEST (May 11).—Gladys Kingston, while spending a few weeks on her uncle's ranch in Southern Texas, is present one day when some boys are riding broncoes. Her true nature aserts itself when one of the riders masters his horse, and running up to him, she pins a flower on his shirt as a token of her regard, and declares that she could only love a hero. Tom, Dick and Harry, three boys of the Big Horn outfit, who have been badly smitten with Gladys's charms, upon hearing this declaration, sneak away, each one trying to think up some scheme whereby he can prove himself a hero. Tom hits upon an idea whereby, with the assistance of two of the stable boys, to play Indians, scare the girl and he, Tom, will rescue her. Dick hits upon an idea, and, with the assistance of some cowboys, who cover their faces, to act as outlaws, he plans that they hold the girl up, and Dick will rescue her and be her hero. Harry, while wandering around trying to get an idea, overhears Tom planning the Indian scheme with the stable boys Then he wanders in the background and accidentally sees Dick and his crowd fixing up as outlaws. Harry has an idea now to beat them both.

The Indians succeed in scaring the girl, when Tom appears and rescues her. She declares him a real hero. Proudly Tom walks with the girl down the trail and falls right into the trap Dick has laid with the boys as outlaws. Tom does not know them as they have their faces covered with kerchiefs. Tom beats it when Dick fires five shots and drives the outlaws away. Gladys now declares Dick her hero. While Dick is all swelled up with the girl in his arms, a masked road agent comes tearing up the trail yelling and shooting as he sits astride his horse. Dick, scared to death, tears away from the girl's arms and beats it. The road agent sweeps down upon his galloping horse, grabs Gladys by the waist, lifts her upon his horse and gallops away. The road agent turns out to be none other than Harry. They return to the ranch house. Everything is explained and they enjoy a good laugh.

WANTED, A BABY (May 11).—Jerry Singleton finds single life a blessing, but not profitable, as his mother has left a will providing that he is to be married and must have a family by April 10th, 1912, before he could receive the balance of her fortune. Jerry, who is living comfortably on what he has previously received, forgot about the condition of the will, until he receives a letter from his uncle, calling his attention to the fact, and further saying that he will call on him, to give him the balance of the fortune, and that he is also anxious to see the wife and family. Jerry being a bachelor, finds it necessary to have a wife and baby quick. He appeals to the butler to get him a wife and baby, but the butler refuses. As a last resort, he appeals to Nellie, the slavey, who at first refuses, then for a liberal bribe consents. Jerry takes her to the attic where his mother's clothes are stored and fits her up with suitable garments. Barry, the butler, also decides to help his master. He goes to the attic and dresses up as a woman. The uncle arrives. Jerry pretends to be glad to see him, but will not allow him to remove his hat or coat, insisting that he be shown around the grounds. Finally uncle insists upon seeing the wife and family. Jerry says he will call them. When Barry, the butler, enters dressed as a woman, the uncle mistakes him for Jerry's wife and insists upon embracing him (or her). Jerry enters and finds Barry (the butler), fondly caressing the uncle, telling him that she is not his wife, but that she is. Nell enters, declaring herself as Jerry's wife, and that Barry is her mother and Jerry's mother-in-law. The uncle insists upon seeing the baby. Jerry sends Nell out to get a baby. Barry, thinking he will help the master, also starts out in search of a baby. Jerry, fearing that they might fail him, starts out in search of one. Nell meets a nurse girl and takes the baby. Barry meets a colored nurse with a baby and takes that. Jerry seeing some small boys playing marbles, bribes one to go with him. Then comes an exciting chase by respective parties. They bring in the babies and place them on uncle's lap. When he sees one is a colored baby, he is quite furious at first at the trick played on him by his nephew, but he is a good sport, gives the fortune to Jerry, who scatters money to the crowd that followed and everybody is happy.

KALEM.

THE OUTLAW (May 6).—After many months of prospecting, Jim finally locates a deposit of gold and stakes out his claim. He makes the acquaintance of Mary, a charming girl who lives nearby, and they become sweethearts.

One day a stranger appears and asks for work. Jim welcomes him to his humble home and a compact is entered into, whereby the newcomer is to work on the claim in payment for his board. The stranger loses no time in shaving off his beard, which, however, does not arouse Jim's suspicion until the sheriff appears one day with a picture of a noted outlaw who is wanted. Jim recognizes the likeness as that of his partner and throws the official off the trail.

As time progresses, Jim finds that the stranger is paying court to Mary and later it is discovered that the outlaw is systematically robbing his host of the gold dust which has been gathered. Jim, unable to control his anger, is about to kill his unscrupulous partner when an accident prevents him from the deed.

A few days later the outlaw is caught in a landslide and perishes. Jim and Mary find the body and bury it. The sheriff passes and Jim is able to assure him that the unfortunate man has passed away.

HYPNOTIC NELL (May 8).—Bashful Bill is in love with Nell and while she offers him every encouragement, he is afraid to ask the eternal question. When Nell reads the advertisement of a hypnotist, who guarantees to teach his profession in a short course by mail, she sees great opportunities. She is a faithful student and soon is able to place the cook and other unfortunates under her spell.

Nell hypnotizes her lover and finds that he experiences a decided change in his attitude, but her father appears and offers decided objections. The girl is equal to the occasion, however, and through her magic influence causes the father to extend his blessing. When they "come out of it" there is nothing for them to do but make good.

AMERICAN TOURISTS ABROAD (May 8).—At Rome the tourists visit the Vatican and find a great deal that is interesting and impressive. A panoramic view of the St. Angelo Castle and the River Tiber is presented and the Swiss Guards are seen on duty. A procession of monks pass by on their way to the Capuchin Monastery. The Brunco Market next commands the attention of the party and a visit is paid to the old Colosseum and the Roman Forum. At Pompeii the tourists visit the Street of Fortune, the Temple of Apollo, the Civic Forum, the Arch of Caligula and the home of Pompeii's wealthiest citizen, Vetti, with its beautiful courtyard, gardens and fountains. There are many other interesting sights which meet the eye, one of the most striking being the Theater of Pompeii.

SUPPRESSED EVIDENCE (May 10).—Brand, an aged bookkeeper, finds employment in the offices of Smith & Slocum. His daughter, Mary, calls for him at the close of the day's work and attracts the attention of the manager. Slocum, one of the members of the firm, becomes quite interested in the girl and always has a pleasant word when she calls. One evening when Mary visits the office, she finds her father has been called to the private room of his employers, and she is met by the manager, who annoys her with his advances. Brand appears at this moment and knocks the ruffian to the floor. Smith hurries to the scene and despite all argument of his partner, discharges the old bookkeeper.

Mary induces her father to return the next day and ask for reinstatement. Smith, who is alone, orders him from the office at the point of a revolver. The manager and Slocum are just leaving and hear the stormy language from the private office. When Brand has departed, Smith toys with the revolver and accidentally shoots himself. Just before he dies he writes a note stating that he has been killed by his own hand.

Next morning the manager and Slocum discover the body and when the former finds the note he hides it in his pocket. Brand is arrested at the manager's instigation as he was the last one to visit the deceased. The schemer then proceeds to Mary and informs her he has evidence which will clear her father if she will consent to marry him. The girl is about to sacrifice herself when an unexpected incident takes place, which exposes the manager's villainy, frees Brand and offers Slocum an opportunity to inform Mary of his love.

EDISON.

BILLIE (May 17).—Billie is the "little mother" of the family and cares for the two smaller children. Her father has fallen under the spell of drink. Billie has become hardened by her struggle against the drink demon in her father and treats him with scant consideration.

A stranger comes to town, and, having a full pocketbook and a generous heart, he is entertaining everybody at large in the saloon when Billie comes after her father. The stranger sees her walk up to the man who has been pronounced a bad and dangerous character and briefly command him to come home with her. Realizing the difficulty of the child's problem, he steps forward and offers to help her get "dad" home. Arrived at their small cottage he saves Billie from an attack by her father who has reached the 'crazed" stage of his drunkenness and they end by locking the man in his room. Then' to divert the little girl the stranger offers to take her to a motion picture theater. It is the first time she has ever been in such a place, and the pictures make a vivid impression. One of them, a wife who forgives her husband when the curse of drink has come into their lives, so impresses Billie that she decides to try forgiveness with her father. She goes to his employer and begs for his job again and in the morning when the now sober and penitent "dad" makes his appearance she gives him breakfast and tells him the good news of her change of heart due to the motion picture. Her tenderness makes a revolution in the father's heart and the picture ends leaving us with the conviction that things will be different for Billie in the future.

AUNT MIRANDA'S CAT (May 8).—A pretty white cat is the joy and pride of an old maid known as Aunt Miranda. Every afternoon she sits at the window with a novel and her cat, and incidentally flirts with Jonathan Biggs, a bachelor who occupies a room directly opposite hers, in the house next door. One afternoon Miranda's cat, in company with another feline, gives a high pitched concert on the back fence and rudely disturbs old Biggs' peaceful slumber. He quickly demonstrates his antipathy for cats by shying the heaviest missile he can lay hands on and with good effect, for Miranda's cat falls to the ground with a thud, apparently dead. Not wishing to incur Miranda's enmity, he hastily descends to the yard, places the limp body of the cat in a bag and buries it under a tree a short distance up the road. Two tramps hiding behind the tree silently observe this proceeding and when Biggs leaves, they feverishly dig up the bag thinking it contains a treasure—only to find a dead cat.

Meanwhile Miranda has missed her cat and is frantically searching high and low for it. To make matters worse, she catches her niece in the act of eloping with Dick Perkins, whom she berates and drives from the premises. To escape Miranda's wrath, Dick doesn't let the grass grow under his feet. Up the road he passes Biggs, who is returning from the cat burial, and a little farther on Dick comes upon the two tramps and discovers Aunt Miranda's cat, not dead, but alive, having been stunned. With due haste Dick returns the cat to Miranda's house Suffice it to say she is overjoyed to recover her darling cat; while, on the other hand, Biggs is so startled at the cat's return that he nearly faints. Dick threatens to tell all he knows. Biggs quickly sees the point and induces Miranda to give her consent and blessing to the young couple after which old Biggs pops the question, Miranda accepts him and all ends well.

TREASURE ISLAND (May 10).—The story is almost too well known to need repetition; how old Captain Billy Bones, with his scars and his oaths had secured within his old sea chest the map and chart of Treasure Island and knew just where the treasure lay; and how his fellow associates endeavored to obtain them. But Billy Bones died before their scheme was realized and thus the valuable map fell into the hands of Jimmie Hawkins and led up to the search for the treasure. They sailed away for the unknown land with a crew of nineteen. Mutiny breaks out and that famous character, one-legged John Silver, plans and schemes and fights and kills to get possession of the treasure and one by one the band of nineteen dwindles down to six and our hearts are glad when we realize after so many thrilling adventures that the vessel is homeward bound laden with all the treasure that Jimmie Hawkins, the doctor and the squire set out to gain.

EVERY ROSE HAS ITS STEM (May 11).—There is a little maid in a florist shop and a likable youth in the real estate office next door. A little love story has begun between them and he takes her home at night after work hours are over.

Suddenly into the real estate office one day comes a gorgeous "Queen of the Typewriters," Gwendolyn by name, whose somewhat spectacular charm completely eclipses the little maiden of the flower shop and the youth develops a violent infatuation at once. Soon he takes Gwendolyn home at night and as Gwendolyn passes the flower shop and expresses admiration for some roses in the window, he goes back to buy them for her.

The long stemmed ones are twenty dollars a dozen and there are others at eight and at three, but having once seen the long ones and knowing that those are what Gwendolyn had admired, he hies himself forth and pawns his watch to buy the ones at twenty dollars a dozen. Now Gwendolyn is a most unemotional young lady and when the roses are received, she turns them over to her mother to be put in a vase, while she continues reading her magazine. The old mother finds no tall vase, and ignorant of the value of the long stems, clips them off once and finally a second time, until short-stemmed roses, such as could be bought for three dollars a dozen, stand in the low vase upon the center table.

When the young man calls and realizes what has happened to his expensive roses, his case of infatuation receives a sudden check and he returns to his rational self once more. He beats a hasty retreat, but at the door he meets a janitor with an ash can, upon the top of which repose seventeen dollars' worth of rose stems. He goes back to the little maid of the flower shop and asks her forgiveness and all ends happily.

CINES.

A CONTEST AND NO PRIZE (May 7).—Nellie has two ardent suitors, Arthur and Jules. The fair damsel pretends not to be able to choose between them, and delights in putting the rivals to all sorts of tests, to prove their sincerity. They make her innumerable presents, and, her birthday approaching, she promises to accept flowers from the one she sees first the next morning. Each determines to be ahead of the other, and arrives during the night, only to finally fall asleep upon the front doorstep, where they are discovered the next morning.

Nellie persists in amusing herself at their expense, allowing each to think he is the favored one. Finally, they decide to settle the matter with a duel, but in the midst of the fierce encounter, Nellie comes up and proudly begs them to stop fighting long enough to meet her soldier friend, John, to whom she is engaged to be married.

FIUME, AUSTRIA (May 7).—Showing beautiful views of the town, the theater, St. John's Cathedral and many quaint buildings and romantic waterways.

ECLIPSE.

THE SQUIRE'S FATE (May 8).—Tucker, the miller, knowing the bad reputation of Squire Hornsby, refuses to allow his pretty daughter, Marian, to go into service at the castle, and laughs at all the terrible threats. Infuriated, the squire orders his men to cast into the river a load of corn belonging to the miller, and when that worthy protests, to arrest him.

The squire then informs Marian that if she refuses to meet him at the mill the same evening, her father will be hanged. Marian meets the squire at the appointed hour, and, cordially inviting her visitor into the mill, manages to make him a prisoner in one of the rooms. Then, hastily climbing to the corn-loft, she empties sack after sack down into the room, and finally smothers the wicked squire under the corn.

TROPICAL CREATURES (May 8).—An exceedingly interesting subject, showing several species of curious stick-like creatures, which inhabit the trees in the tropical regions.

ESSANAY.

ALKALI IKE'S BRIDE (May 7).—Alkali is considered the ranch seamstress by the boys on Hard-Up, and consequently has to sew buttons on coats and do other sewing stunts that finally wear on his nerves and decide him on the matrimony thing. One day Alkali gets the town paper and sees a "Husband Wanted" ad. A widow with a small boy and loads of money, wants to hitch up with some nice Western gentleman. This is pie for Alkali. He instantly dispatches a letter to the widow to come to Snakeville, get off at his ranch and not to "fergit her dust." Now the boys have a suspicion Alkali is up to something, discover the letter in the mail-box, open it and read. Naturally, they hate to see Alkali about to become a married martyr, and a scheme is cooked up to cure him. Big Pete is disguised as the widow, Sagebrush Simpkins as the "little boy." The boys put them on the stage and, when it arrives at the ranch Alkali is horrified at a sight of the "widow's" face. He tries to escape, but Pete finally captures him and the scheme is exploded when Alkali quits the ranch in a huff, but meets a charming damsel on the train and, in a record wooing, wins her for his wife. They board the next train and the boys are terribly stung when Alkali introduces Mrs. Alkali and leads her proudly into the ranch house.

IN QUARANTINE (May 9).—Ann Quill, a lady doctor, meets her pretty sister, Bernice, on the street one day, gives her the medicine case and asks her to take it home. Three practical jokers see Bernice and, struck with her smart appearance, decide to make her acquaintance. In front of Bernice's home, Jack plots with Dave and Harry to play sick and for them to bring the lady doctor to his apartment at once. Now Bernice overhears their little scheme, decides to carry the deception through and, when Dave and Harry call and tell her of Jack's illness, she boldly takes her sister's medicine case and goes to Jack's apartment, diagnoses his "illness" as a very dangerous fever and orders him into quarantine! Jack is dumbfounded, but decides to see the thing through. Bernice now orders Dave and Harry home to disinfect their clothing. Jack manages to give them the distress signal as they exit and, after spilling the disinfectant over themselves, secure a long ladder and go back to rescue Jack. Meanwhile, Bernice doses Jack with some powders she finds in the case and returns to her sister's office. Dave and Harry gain entrance through Jack's window and a poker game is in progress when a terrible racket is heard outside. It is Ann, who, upon hearing of how Bernice gave Jack some powders, thinks they are deadly poison and has rushed to the rescue. The boys quickly get the poker things out of sight, Jack whitens his face with powder, and stretches out on the couch just as Ann and Bernice burst in. After some royal good fun, matters are explained and the boys swear off on lady doctors and disinfectants.

OUT OF THE NIGHT (May 10).—Howard Moore, a millionaire clubman, returns home one evening to learn that his entire fortune has been swept away in the crash of the Eagle National Bank. The news almost drives him insane, but the fact that his fiancee has read of his misfortune and returns his engagement ring heartlessly is the thing that causes him to seek solace in the whiskey decanter, then determines to end it all. The revolver is raised to his temple, when a tapping is heard outside the large French window, and Moore is astonished to see a ragged derelict beckoning for admission and protection from the biting air. Moore admits the poor unfortunate, who has seen Moore raise the gun and questions him. The clubman shows him the newspaper and letter bitterly, and then is amazed when the fellow begins to relate a story almost identical with his own. While the two men remain seated at the table, the story is revealed in a beautiful vision how the young man was on the road to wealth in the stock market, engaged to a beautiful girl, then of his fortune being swept away in a panic, his engagement broken by the heartless vampire, who scorns him, his seeking consolation in drink, his course on the downward road until he has become what he is—a helpless, ragged derelict. The story finished, the outcast begs Moore to give up whiskey and make a man of himself. Moore promises, allows the whiskey to run out over the floor, tears the girl's face from the frame on the table, grips the derelict's hand, rewards him with a bill, then watches him vanish into the night from whence he came.

THE DEAD MAN'S CLAIM (May 11).—An aged miner finds a rich gold claim, stakes it out, fills a sack with samples of the gold ore and starts back across the desert to file his claim. His water gives out, and, after days of torture, he at last falls in a clump of sagebrush. In a nearby cabin Jim Durkin and Black, his partner, are about to sit down to supper when faint cries are heard. Durkin hurries out, finds the stricken miner, summons Black and they carry the old man in and lay him on the bunk. Black is a heartless, brutal fellow, and the old man refuses to talk to Durkin until Black goes out into the adjoining room. Realizing death is upon him the old prospector now tells Durkin of the rich claim, shows him the ore samples, then gives him a paper on which is drawn the location of the mine. A few moments later he is dead. Durkin and Black now swear partnership in the lost mine, bury their old benefactor, then start out to locate the great wealth. That night, Black deserts Durkin on the desert, taking the pack train and all the water. Next morning Durkin realizes his position, and starts out blindly across the burning wastes. Meanwhile Black has been robbed of his water supply by a rascally Indian. Durkin comes upon the Indian, in turn robs him of the water canteen and staggers on. The Indian tries to follow, burning with revenge, but is overcome with thirst and the intense heat, and dies miserably groveling for water. Black, after staggering on for a whole day finds no water and perishes from thirst. Durkin lasts until the following day, when his water supply gives out. Realizing his desperate position, and knowing he is lost, he kills himself with the remaining shot in his revolver.

EXPOSED BY THE DICTOGRAPH (April 29).—Senator Mason receives a letter from James Banna, a lobbyist, in which Banna states that he will call on him the next evening, after the embassy ball, and arrange with him for the purchase of Mason's vote. Mason, on leaving the house, accidentally drops the letter. Jimmie, a newsboy, finds the letter and puts it into his pocket. He delivers papers at detective headquarters, and in making change for one of the officers he lays the letter and his handkerchief on the chief's desk. The chief asks Jimmie where he got the letter and Jimmie tells him how he found it. Jimmie is dismissed by the chief after being cautioned about talking of the letter.

Russell, a young inspector, is called in on the case. The chief suggests his getting the necessary evidence by the use of the dictograph. Ryan, a plain clothes man, is also detailed on the case.

Russell secures a position as chauffeur at Mason's in order to secure the evidence.

On the night of the embassy ball, Russell is seen driving the Senator to the ball. He is told to return in three hours.

He drives back to the garage, goes to the house and proceeds to place the dictograph. He strings the wire from the Senator's library, along the halls to his own room. He then returns to the ball and brings the Senator and Alice home, after which he meets his stenographer, and they sneak back into Russell's room via the back door. The Senator receives Banna in his library. They get down to business at once. Alice in going along the hall to her room discovers the dictograph wires. She traces the wires to Russell's room. She knocks and is admitted. She asks the meaning of the wires, and when Russell shows his star she is dumbfounded. She attempts to leave the room, but Russell restrains her. Then she screams, and her father and Banna rush to the room. The Senator demands an explanation and Alice shows him the dictograph. The Senator realizes he has been tricked and attempts to seize the stenographer's notes. Russell, however, stops him and he and the stenographer walk out of the room. The Senator realizing that the game is up, sinks into a chair. Banna again offers him the check. Senator takes it and tears it up.

THE PRICE HE PAID (April 30).—Bounding Deer, the only and favored child of Wandering Wolf, chief of a tribe of desert Indians, is thrown from her horse, and injured. Wandering Wolf sends two of his braves to the nearest settlement for medical aid. The only doctor there is William Black, a capable practitioner, but one whose weakness for drink has brought him down to the lowest depths. He is glad to take the case, and treats the injured girl successfully. In gratitude for her recovery, her father pays the doctor from a treasure store of very valuable gold nuggets. The sight of so much gold is too much for the avaricious soul of the doctor, and he demands more. The chief thinks he has had sufficient for his services and refuses. The doctor then asks the source of such wealth. It is a tribal secret, however, and the chief refuses to divulge it. The doctor goes away completely eaten up with the lust for gold.

Some time later smallpox breaks out in the camp and the doctor is again sent for. He refuses to come unless the chief informs him of the source of the tribe's wealth. The chief refuses, and sadly returns to camp. His beloved daughter is stricken with the pestilence, and in desperation, fighting between love for his child and hatred for the mercenary spirit of the doctor, he agrees to give the man the information he demands as his pay, telling him that if he will only save his daughter and his people he may take away from their treasure mine all the gold he can carry. The doctor is in no hurry, however, and indulges in a debauch. When he arrives at the camp, he realizes he is too late, but does not tell the chief so. When asked to do what he can to alleviate the suffering of his people, he first demands that the chief keep his part of the compact. He is taken blindfolded to the mine, and greedily loads himself down with more gold than he can carry. As they emerge from the canyon, a courier from the camp announces that Bounding Deer is dead. The Indians would wreak vengeance upon the doctor but are stopped by the chief, who prefers a different kind of punishment. He is turned adrift with his gold and without water on the desert where certain and lingering death awaits him.

JACK AND JINGLES (May 2).—Jack Logan, a newsboy, is manfully attempting to aid his silver-haired grandmother in a fight to keep the wolf from the door by selling newspapers. Jack finds a little dog whose foot has been injured and brings him home. With a little kind treatment the dog soon recovers from his injury, and Jack and he soon become inseparable companions. The dog is almost human and knows many unique tricks. We see him in the act of selling papers for his master, bringing him his clothes, shoes and even awakening him in the morning by dragging the alarm clock up to Jack's ear.

Jack's aged grandmother has been attempting to add a little to their meagre income by taking in plain sewing, and she is therefore very much distressed when an agent comes and takes away the sewing machine on which she has been unable to pay the required installments. Her despair is doubly intensified when the hard-hearted landlord gives her a five days' notice to vacate the premises.

James Munson, a banker, in alighting from his auto that day, drops unnoticed a valuable package of securities, and they are swept away among the refuse of the streets. The next day, Jingles the dog, in attempting to drag a bone from a pile of street sweepings, attracts his master's attention to an envelope bearing the firm name of Munson & Munson. He takes it to Munson's office, where it turns out to be the lost package. Munson is so elated at the return of his securities that he rewards Jack liberally. The dark clouds roll away, and Jack, Jingles and the Grandmother settle down to enjoy their future—a happy family.

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS (May 3).—The characters in this comedy introduce themselves in the home of "Ma" Katzenjammer. She is expecting company for the week end and is making preparations accordingly. She starts her baking and has a goodly supply of dough on hand when she is called to the front part of the house. Uncle Heinie, in his favorite chair by the kitchen stove, tires of the dullness attendant upon the occasion and falls asleep. The kids meantime have been wandering around in search of amusement and not finding any they repair to the kitchen to see what "Ma" is baking. They find the bread dough and start right in to stimulate some excitement. Poor Heinie is made the target for a veritable shower of bread dough. Consternation follows and the kids make a successful getaway, taking refuge in the captain's room. They find a pair of scissors and proceed to cut up everything in sight. The kids are caught and kicked out. They buy all the toy balloons in town and send them in a box to the captain. When he opens the box he is dumbfounded by the action of the contents. The captain decides upon a course of physical culture and goes to the gymnasium to dress for the ordeal. The kids beat him to it, however, and his stay at the gymnasium results in physical torture, instead of physical culture.

UNCLE SAM'S TRIBUTE TO THE HEROES OF THE MAINE (May 3).—Another great topical subject showing in intimate, close up views the ceremonies at Washington, D. C., for the Maine dead. Photographsd under the official and exclusive auspices of the U. S. Navy Department.

ACCORDING TO LAW (May 6).—Tony is an Italian immigrant, in America. His first two days in New York are filled with humorous experiences due to his ignorance of our laws and customs. His sky of dark clouds is suddenly cleared by Cupid, who gets him married to the fair Rosie without knowing it. The story pictures how Tony has been directed to Rosie's papa by a friend in sunny Italy. Her papa gives Tony a job, but fires him the same day. Then Tony peddles bananas and takes up his stand in the front of the fruit store of Rosie's papa. He has Tony arrested for not having a license, and Tony is fined, his fruit confiscated, and he wanders down the street with his empty pushcart to where he "carries the banner," or sleeps out doors, on a dump that night. In the morning he finds a gold piece. Overjoyed, he goes to buy a license and meets Rosie, who accompanies him. At the City Hall they ask for a license and are directed to the Marriage License Clerk. The Clerk sends them with the license to a Magistrate and they are married without knowing it. Rosie returns home and Tony tacks the license on his pushcart. Securing a fresh stock, he again takes his stand in front of the fruit store. Then there is a time. Rosie's papa, furious, calls an officer. This time Tony is defiant and points indignantly to his license, which the officer reads between laughs. He informs Rosie's papa what has happened, and the rage of the much surprised fruit dealer ends with his blessing on the overjoyed Tony and Rosie.

A HUMBLE HERO (May 7).—In A Humble Hero is told a simple but vivid and forceful story of canine intelligence that will hold the attention of all lovers of the motion picture drama. Its scenes are laid in the West amid desert and plain, mountains and dim trails, amid the wilds of unexplored country. Sutton, an engineer, fired by the tales told by a chance prospector, obtains leave of absence to prospect in a new region. Accompanied by Jocko, the humble hero of the story, he sets off waving a farewell to his wife and daughter. Out of food, he stumbles in his weakness and discovers an outcropping lode rich with gold. His find is jumped by two others who have trailed him, and one starts to record the claim while the other watches Sutton. How the faithful dog carried his master's discovery ahead and foiled the plot of the claim jumpers is told without a common view being made to tell the story. The race made by the canine hero is especially attractive and the end is a fitting climax to a well told romance of the West.

THE STRONGER MIND (May 9).—This new story of the famous hypnotic detective, Prof. Locksley, fully sustains the reputation he acquired in his former appearance. The story is one of a dishonest butler who incidentally learns he can hypnotize under favorable conditions. Covetous of the jewels he has seen locked in the family safe, he hypnotizes his eccentric master, influences him to open the safe, and steals and secretes them with a friend. The detective while visiting his fiancee learns of the loss and immediately sets to work to solve the mystery with the happiest results.

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS—No. 2—THEY GO TOBOGGANING (May 10).—The arrival of Uncle Heinie with Hans and Fritz throws the Katzenjammer home into a whirl of excitement. The kids greet their father with well-aimed throws of the pies baked for the occasion, and they are rewarded with the usual spanking. A desire for revenge leads them to the family roof, where with a hose they proceed to wet down the immediate surroundings below. The Captain asserts the deluge is caused by the snow melting on the roof and proposes to climb up and clear it off. Climbing a ladder he takes a tumble and a general smash-up follows. To repair matters the wallpaper must be renewed and, as the paper hangers are on a strike, the Captain starts to do the work himself. He finishes by falling into a bucket of paste.

Being the tobogganing season the happy family go for a ride on the slide, but Hans and Fritz, as usual, prepare for further fun by tampering with the sled. The ride starts with the whole party aboard and winds up in a riot of fun caused by the wrecking planned by the famous twins.

SEEING NEW ORLEANS (May 10).—Another exceedingly interesting subject in Selig's famous series of sightseeing trips to the principal cities of the world.

BIOGRAPH.

THE OLD ACTOR (May 6).—He gets a part in the new play that is to be produced, and goes to the theater for his first rehearsal in high hopes, only to be thrown into the depths of despair by being told that he is "too old." A younger actor is engaged to take his place. Downcast, he leaves the theater, for the maintenance of his little home depends upon his getting work. He has not the courage to tell them of his failure, and deceives them into believing he has succeeded. On the way home he meets a beggar who is suddenly stricken down, and upon investigation by those in authority, a large amount of money is found on him. This impresses the old man, and, unable to secure employment, the idea strikes him to play the new role of a beggar. This he does, using his talent at make-up to effect a disguise, which would not have been penetrated had not his daughter's sweetheart thrown a gold piece into his hat in mistake for a nickel, which led to his discovery. Good fortune, however, shines upon him later, as he is given back his part in the play.

A LODGING FOR THE NIGHT (May 9).—Dick Logan, a young writer in search of local color, stops at a little border town in the Southwest and engages lodging at the Mexican Inn. Two tramps see the amount of money he has and plan to secure it. In the town he befriends a Mexican girl by stopping her uncle from beating her for having broken a water jar. That night, to while the time, he plays faro and breaks the bank, which greatly augments his already large amount of money. Retiring to his room, he is awakened by the efforts of the two tramps to get into the room. He steals out and asks for lodging for the night at a nearby house, which happens to be the home of the Mexican girl and her uncle. Here he gets real "local color," as the tramps have followed him and they enter the room through the window, while the Mexican, who also covets his money, enters through the door. The girl, however, saves him from harm, and it looks as if Dick had found a real heroine for a real romance.

AUTOMATIC MOVING COMPANY (May 7).—A film of more than unusual interest. Those who are familiar with the length of time it takes to make a picture wherein all the furniture in the house moves out automatically, will appreciate the great labor of making this film.

PALACE AND FOUNTAINS OF VERSAILLES (May 7).—An exceedingly good view of the marvelous gardens and fountains around the palace of the Louis's of France. This picture clearly shows the magnificence and beauty of the French Court as it was in the days when the King was considered the first gentleman of Europe.

HENRY IV AND THE WOODCHOPPER (May 10).—This is a story of La Fontaine's, of a king who, becoming lost in the woods, accepts the hospitality of the woodchopper, who in return asks to be shown the king at the coming country fair, not knowing that his guest is Henry IV himself. To tell the balance of the story would be to spoil the effect of the film ;let it suffice that the whole is exceedingly interesting and the ending a surprise.

COD FISHING OFF ICELAND (May 10).—An interesting industrial film surpassing anything of its kind done heretofore.

PATHE.

THE EMPTY GRAVE (May 8).—A man who discovers that his wife is flirting with another man, drives her from the house with her fascinator. Both the latter are said to have been killed in a railroad acident in the newspaper reports. The wife, however, is not killed, but taken to a hospital. When she gets well she lives alone in a little attic room. Her husband supposing himself a widower, and his child motherless, has a tombstone erected in the cemetery to which he takes his little girl periodically to place flowers on the empty grave. Here one day the mother finds her little daughter by accident and a reconciliation follows.

THE UNEXPECTED RECEPTION (May 9).—Two old maids are invited to dine at a friend's house on the birthday of one of them. While they are at their hostess' house the son of the family is sent to the old maids' residence with gifts as a surprise to them when they return. When he arrives at his destination he climbs in the window and is given a welcome reception by two large bulldogs with screamingly funny results.

THE PARACHUTE MAKER (May 11).—A man in a balloon factory has a sick child. When the works close down indefinitely he is in very dire straits; finally he steals a loaf of bread for his starving family, is arrested and sent to jail. In the jail he receives a note from his wife saying that the little girl is dying. In a desperate effort to escape, the prisoner makes a parachute out of cloth stolen from the prison tailoring shop and leaps from the roof and is carried into a field nearby and from there reaches home in time to see his daughter before she dies.

PATHE'S WEEKLY—NO. 18—1912 (April 29).—New York, N. Y.—The body of General Phil Kearny is exhumed after reposing fifty years in Trinity Churchyard, and with a military escort is taken to Washington, D. C., for reinterment.

Washington, D. C.—The body of General Kearny, upon its arrival from New York, is buried in Arlington National Cemetery after President Taft pronounces an eulogy on the "Fighting General."

Vincennes, France—During the Spring Review at the Maneuver Camp, General Roques commands the aerial fleet of the French Army.

Hartford, Conn.—A large section of East Hartford is wiped out of existence by fire, which destroys 22 buildings and rendered hundreds of families homeless.

Bornim (near Berlin), Germany—The Crown Prince and Crown Princess attend the races of the Horse Show Society of German officers.

Columbuia, S. C.—The men of this State unveil a monument erected to the memory of the South Carolina Women of the Confederacy.

New York, N. Y.—Park Commissioner Stover opens the fortieth playground in New York at East 101st Street.

Special for the Ladies. Paris, France—Spring Fashions.

N. B.—This program subject to change without notice should any events of greater importance than the above occur after going to press.

MELIES.

THE SWASTIKA (May 16).—Young Elk, an educated Indian, is secretly in love with Sallie, daughter of a prosperous ranchman. But his case is hopeless because Sallie's affections are already bestowed on Tom, one of the cowboys. Tom, in turn is loved by Wana, daughter of an Indian Chief, and when he makes it plain to her that he is going to marry Sallie, the Indian girl plots revenge on Sallie.

The Indians demand whiskey and tobacco from Sallie's father, and when he refuses, they declare war on the white men. Elk, fearing for the safety of one he loves, plans to protect Sallie without betraying his tribe. He overpowers her in the woods and with a knife imprints a mysterious sign on her forehead—the Swastika—meaning in Indian language, "Under protection of the Great Spirit." The cowboys arrest Elk for the seeming outrage and cast him in prison.

Later the Indians, led by Wana, take Sallie captive and threaten her life unless whiskey is furnished, when suddenly the Swastika sign is discovered on her forehead. Instantly she is released and given many presents.

She meets the posse out in search of her, and explains the meaning of the sign upon her forehead. They ride at once to the prison and free Elk.

VITAGRAPH.

DR. LAFLUER'S THEORY (May 6).—A doctor, whose theory is that crime is a disease, and should be treated as such, sees a young girl in the disguise of a Salvation Army lass, very sucessfully steal a watch, and decides to keep an eye on her. He follows her to a cheap restaurant, where he tells her that he saw her steal the watch. She gives it up to him and he returns it to the owner. She tells her uncle, with whom she lives, and who forces her to steal, that she is going to stop being a thief. He only laughs at her.

The uncle finds an advertisement in the paper for a young housemaid, and tells the girl she must take the job, and that he and the young chap, whom the uncle has in his power, will come at night and ransack the house. The girl, after persuasion, does as she is bid and secures the position. This happens to be the house owned by the doctor. At midnight the girl comes to the drawing-room through which she is to admit her accomplice. The doctor comes in unexpectedly and has a good talk with the girl. When the two men enter, the doctor compels the uncle to make a confession and then lets him go. He tells the girl and the young man if they will swear to begin life anew in a distant country, he will give them money to redeem their past. He sees them start on their way.

THOU SHALT NOT COVET (May 7).—Mr. Moore is fond of his wife, but very close in money matters. She has a passion for jewelry. Her husband gives her a certain amount of money for her Xmas shopping. She is shown by one of her friends a beautiful bracelet. She is envious and when she sees a similar one in Sharpe's, the jeweler's, she sets to work to think how she can get it. The price of it is $250.

She hits on a bright idea. She writes Sharpe, telling him she is going to have her husband call to look at the bracelet and to let him beat him down to $150, and she will pay the other $100. Then she gathers together some of her old jewelry to pawn it to raise the other $100. Sharpe, knowing how close Moore is, agrees to the scheme. Moore goes in to look at the bracelet and is so tickled in what he considers his cleverness in beating Sharpe down, he buys it for $150.

Unfortunately, on his way home, he drops into the club. A friend offers to buy the bracelet from him for $200. His love for money proves too strong and he sells it, making, as he thinks, $50 profit. When he reaches home, he tells his wife of his shrewdness and laughs at his smartness. She is seized with a violent fit of hysterics and disappointment. She is left with "no jewels, no bracelet, and no money"—nothing but her pawn tickets to remind her of her wonderful scheme and its failure.

THE SERPENTS (May 8).—Wending their way and locating in a land far from the contentions through which they passed a few weeks before, Eric and Chloe are located in a garden spot of primeval beauty, surrounded by all the imposing grandeur of nature. Chloe is pursued by the covetous desire of Haakon, a false friend, who strives by subtle charms to lure her from Eric, who in turn is tempted by Linda, her cunning and beauty, to desert Chloe and live with her. Both Chloe and Eric are unaware of the baseness of Linda and Haakon. Their minds are pure and they do not divine their designs.

In order to accomplish their purpose, Linda and Haakon consult Greeg, a wicked priest, and secure from him a poisonous powder, by which Linda hopes to remove Chloe and Haakon to put Eric out of his way. The priest has set his heart upon possessing Linda, and Fangen, his servant, a despicable creature, has the same intention, and so the plot becomes more complicated. Eric and Chloe, innocent and unsuspecting, invite Haakon and Linda to dine with them. While they are dining, they place the poison in their hosts' cups. Fangen, who destroys Greeg and follows the two evildoers, comes to the cave. He calls Haakon and Linda outside, saying his master wishes to talk with them. They step outside. Unknown to Eric and Chloe, Fangen changes their cups for those of their guests. When Haakon and Linda return, they drink the poison. Haakon falls dead, but before Linda can take sufficient of her potion, Fangen dashes the cup from her hand, seizes her in his arms and makes off with her.

WHEN DADDY WAS WISE (May 10).—Young Bert Sebastian falls in love with his father's stenographer. Bert has been to the theater with her and forgetting to return her gloves, his father sees one of them protruding from his pocket. His father says he considers it an impropriety; besides, he objects to his son marrying a working girl. He discharges the stenographer. In the evening, Bert is about to call on his sweetheart. By mistake, he puts on his father's coat. He discovers in the pocket a photograph of a woman. Bert gets an idea. He writes a letter to his father, as coming from the woman, making an appointment.

Bert hires a complete outfit of female attire, and makes himself up, with the assistance of his intended, as a very attractive young lady. His father writes to the address of Bert's sweetheart, which his son has given. The old gentleman comes with his limousine and takes his son to dinner. That same night he learns that his wife is going to the country the next day.

His wife starts for the country and he again takes his charmer to dinner. His wife misses the train and as she has dismissed the servants,

THE SENSATION OF THE FILM WORLD

A marvelous, hitherto undreamed-of achievement, which defies description and baffles imitation. Selig's "Coming of Columbus" stands paramount, supreme, unapproachable, among motion picture productions. A masterpiece of masterpieces.

The one story in history that is known to everyone is that of Columbus and his discovery of America

The Money Maker of a Lifetime—Book This At Once

decides to go to the same restaurant where her husband and his fair partner are. Her husband sees her coming. His son makes himself known. He tells his father if he will consent to his marriage, he will say nothing. Removing his wig, and taking off his dress, which they toss underneath a lounge, everything appears perfectly regular when they meet Mrs. Sebastian.

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD (May 11).—A miserly old cobbler values money as his best friend and the greatest thing in the world. It is not altogether, perhaps, his own fault, for he seems to be shunned by everybody as being distrustful of others as they are of him. The one responsive note of his peculiar disposition seems to be touched when one day he meets upon the street a little girl crying. He takes her to his scantily furnished home and endeavors to make her happy by giving her every attention. He has a happy faculty of telling stories, which he recites to entertain the little girl. When she is taken sick a day or two later, notwithstanding he has never known the necessity of spending money on others, he goes for a doctor and brings him to his home to administer to his little companion.

When the doctor arrives and sees the child, he recognizes her as the daughter of one of his patients. The old cobbler realizes he has a love for children which he never knew before. The doctor tells the child's parents where the little one is and they come and take her home, leaving the old shoemaker grieved and in tears. He misses that happiness which has been awakened in his heart, and going out upon the street, all the children, who have previously avoided him, notice a change in his manner. By his kindly words he gathers them around him, buys them cookies and candies. He takes them to his shop, gives them a party and a feast, and entertains them with the story of the land of "Ever-so-far-away!"

CINES.

JOSEPHINE (May 11).—The Empress Josephine will always stand out as one of the most pitiable victims of ambition the world has ever known. That Napoleon really loved her is well understood, but he had no choice; he had to pay the price of his success.

The opening scenes show Josephine in her native home in Martinique, with all its romantic surroundings. She, imbued with the superstitions of the peasantry, visits an old soothsayer, who foretells a brilliant destiny, prophesying that she will become a queen.

The Viscount Beauharnais sees Josephine, falls in love with her, and ultimately marries her; the result of the happy union being two children. Troublesome times fall upon France, and Beauharnais, his wife and children, are cast into prison by the revolutionists. They are condemned to death, and the death penalty is carried out in the case of Beauharnais, but Josephine and her children are liberated. While in prison, Josephine has a vivid dream of her husband's death by the guillotine; a dream that proves true in every particular.

Josephine and Bonaparte first meet at the house of Barras, a man of prominence at that time, and it is a case of mutual love at first sight. After a short while their nuptials are celebrated, the magnificent religious marriage rites being performed wth great pomp and ceremony. Napoleon and Josephine live happily together until Metternich, the Austrian minister, proposes that Napoleon, in order to strengthen his position with Austria, divorce Josephine, the Empress, who had borne him no heir, and marry Princess Marie Louise. The idea is entertained by the Emperor, and after a striking scene, Josephine, although heartbroken, consents. Events then move rapidly, the divorce takes place, and Napoleon marries the Austrian Princess.

We last see the Emperor and Empress presenting the newborn heir to the rejoicing people, and the contrasting grief of unhappy Josephine when she hears the tidings.

AMERICAN.

THE END OF THE FEUD (May 2).—Old man Jackson was born in Kentucky. So was his father and his only son, Bruce. Hence it was not surprising that Bruce's grandfather began a feud with George Perriwell, which his son had sworn to carry forward. But Perriwell moved to a remote part of Kentucky and Jackson was never able to execute his promise.

When Jackson lay on his death-bed the memory of his promise to his father recurred to him. He called Bruce, told him of the feud, gave him the family enemy's name and swore his son to avenge the parental honor. This Bruce promised to do.

When Jackson had been buried, Bruce packed his belongings and started westward. Carefully he treasured the badly scrawled name, "George Perriwell" in his pocket. In the desert Bruce's horse died. The lad staggered bravely forward until, water gone and with dry parched throat, his exhausted frame gave way. Two hours later a prairie schooner appeared. Its proprietor found him near death and, with the aid of his daughter, Margaret, nursed him back to life. In the days that followed the pair grew to love each other deeply, and one day asked the father's consent. The emigrant slapped Bruce heartily on the back and bade him welcome to the family.

Then came a day, when, the caravan stopping for lunch, Bruce was left alone about the wagon. The wind blew a flap of the canvas cover, exposing a name. Suddenly it occurred to him that he had never heard his benefactor's last name. In Western fashion, it had been "George" and "Bruce" with them. He had called her "Margaret" because her father did. The truth flashed over him dashing his new found happiness to death, for there on the inside canvas cover was the name "George Perriwell."

Perriwell appeared. He beckoned him to a distant grove of trees, told his name, and, with tears running down his cheeks, fired straight at Perriwell. The gun missed fire. Perriwell, meantime, took careful aim at his antagonist. Then, suddenly Margaret hurled herself into her father's arms. Perriwell hesitated and, seeing the outstretched hand of Bruce, clasped it with his own, thus ending a feud that threatened to wreck three lives.

HER WEDDING DRESS (May 6).—The crowd swarmed out of the little Baptist church. Miss Betty Bartlett, just turned thirty-eight, hesitated, glanced timidly around among her friends and seeing the slightly stooped form of Bob Plummer joining the throng at the foot of the step, swung hastily in the opposite direction. Arrived at her cottage, Betty stopped. She looked longingly down the shaded avenue, glanced with a sigh at the finger that had borne an engagement ring for ten long years. A vision came—a vision of herself and Bob Plummer ten years ago when he had placed that ring with a kiss on the third finger of the left hand, promising that when he had saved enough he would claim her. But, while the memory lingered in Bob's heart, the long expected ship never arrived.

There were wild scenes at the post-office the following day. Old Zeb Winters eyed with much curiosity the long, white envelope that bore the name of a prominent legal firm in the far East. He had it—"Miss Betty's an heiress!" The news spread Little Miss Williams, waving the envelope above her head proclaimed the fact broadcast. Bob Plummer listened with wonder.

Miss Williams told the glad news She was followed shortly by Zeb Winters who soon found an opportunity to declare his matrimonial aspirations. The first visitors in ten years pleased and delighted Miss Betty, but it was not until Bob Plummer, hanging in the outskirts of the little cottage arrived that she was really happy. And Bob finally proposed

Two weeks of domestic bliss followed Then a second envelope arrived from the legal firm. They opened it together. It read: "Thanks for your prompt reply." No mention of a heritage! Bob was dumfounded and Betty much surprised at his strange actions. When Bob inquired about the inheritance, Betty was even more surprised. She knew nothing of a legacy. Then it suddenly dawned upon her why Bob had married her and why all these recent visitors.

Bob left the house and walked into the garden. When he returned the battle was over. He found a note of farewell from Betty and hurried into the garden, where all accounts were squared.

CHAMPION.

REALIZATION OF A CHILD'S DREAM (May 6).—Horace Winton, his wife, and their only child, Eva, composed a very happy group one fine morning. Just as Mr. Winton is about to start for his office, little Eva comes to him with tears in her eyes. She has broken a favorite toy. The proud father consoles her with a promise of a new one on his return that evening. Unable to secure a duplicate, Mr. Winton, knowing Eva's love for animals, buys her a toy dog, of which she soon becomes very fond.

One night she takes the toy to bed with her and in her childish dreams the toy comes to life. Her dreamland adventures take her and her dog to the pantry, where she feeds the dog on milk and cakes; thence to the street, where a candy store is visited, and in the meantime meeting many of her playmates. In the possession of her beautiful doggie she is both proud and happy. But, alas! dreams must end. The next morning she awakens to find not the frisky, playful dog of her dreams, but merely the wooden fur-covered toy.

Her childish disappointment is so great that she cries out in agony, and in her frantic scramble to tell her woes to her mother she falls from her bed, striking her head on the upturned leg of her toy, thus rendering her unconscious. The parents come in and anxiously behold the situation. The doctor is immediately called for and he dresses the wound, giving them assurance that it is nothing serious and that she will soon be well again.

Two weeks pass by and little Eva is restored to health, but her mind is a blank. The shock, together with her vivid dream, has unbalanced her mind. The doctor puzzles over the strange case and decides to experiment upon a remedy. In her delirium little Eva imagines her toy is alive, so they secure a living dog and replace the toy. Eva will not accept it, however, for it is a white dog, while her toy is black. Not until they have secured an exact duplicate of the black toy dog are they able to make the exchange. And then Eva's joy on beholding her dreams come true, restores her shattered mind.

LUCKY JIM (May 8).—In the first place Jim Baldwin has earned the sobriquet of Lucky Jim. Jim is a fine fellow, yet the sort that doesn't find favor with the boys. The ranchman's daughter, Bess, comes to the ranch and all the boys are introduced to her, except Jim. Later on the ranchman takes Bess out, accompanied by all the boys, except Jim. The boys laugh at him as they go out and he is left alone: but presently the girl returns for some reason or other, and in getting off her horse, hurts a foot or seems to. Jim picks her up in his arms and carries her off—Lucky Jim.

Later on the girl's father is bitten by a snake. The boys run for a doctor, but Jim remains and draws out the venom with his lips. "Thus he saves the ranchman's life and wins his favor and a wife." Soon again, an old Indian is rescued from the clutches of a disreputable character by Bess. The gratitude is shown when he gives her gold and also the right to a claim But Jim is also a sharer on this deal, accompanying Bess to the old Indian "dug-out." The latter gives him an equal interest with Bess, rightly judging that one day she'll be his squaw. "Thus, again, we see Lucky Jim, and how all things come to him."

At the grave of the old Indian "In silent prayer kneel Jim and Bess, and comes old Bear Grease them to bless."

NESTOR.

THE IMPOSTOR (April 29).—John Sanborn, a fine young fellow, is on his way to visit the family and take charge of the estate of his best friend, Ned Miller, who has recently died. Mrs. Miller and daughter are looking forward to the visit of Sanborn, whom they have never seen. Sanborn stops in a park for a moment's rest. From a wallet he extracts the cordial letter he had received from Ned's mother and re-reads it with great satisfaction. Arising from the bench, he suddenly faints and tumbles down in a heap. Henry Vincent, a poor, struggling, young author, goes to the fallen man's assistance. After Sanborn is taken away in an ambulance, Vincent finds the wallet and attempts to return it, but without success.

The next day, reading that there is no hope of Sanborn recovering his mind and probably his life, and being in desperate circumstances, Vincent yields to temptation, and with the money and the letter, he goes to the home of Mrs. Miller, where he impersonates Sanborn. Being brilliant and attractive, he finds no difficulty in making Mrs. Miller and her daughter believe that the best friend of Ned has come to protect them.

He suffers much, as he falls in love with Rita Miller and, being a decent fellow, he finds it hard to carry on his deception, and asks Rita to marry him. The denouement comes when Sanborn, having recovered his memory, appears among them and unmasks the impostor.

In the meantime, Vincent has written a great book. He leaves the Miller home under the scorn of the girl and her mother. He finds no happiness and Rita's deep love for him causes her to go into decline until her life is despaired of. John Sanborn takes it upon himself to go and bring the now famous author back to her, and all ends well.

THE EVERLASTING JUDY (May 1).—Poor, henpecked Jed is left to sweep the floor and wash the dishes while his wife, Judy, goes to the village to shop. No sooner is she gone, however, than Jed seats himself to have a good smoke, a forbidden pleasure in the house. Judy, returning unexpectedly, surprises her frightened husband and taking him by the ear, marches him into the kitchen to wash the dishes, while she sits calmly in the sitting-room to wait until he has finished. As he is carrying the dish-pan to the sink it falls, breaking his wife's best china. With one glance toward the sitting-room door, Jed dives through the window, and when Judy gets to the kitchen, Jed is already half way down the street.

Arriving at the village, two of his friends take him to the nearest bar to give him a little "courage," but, after spending an hour with them, Jed decides it would be best to take a quiet little nap before approaching his loving wife, and accordingly, climbs into an empty box-car, which is soon bearing the sleeping Jed to the glorious West.

Some time elapses. Judy, not having heard from her husband, has accepted an offer from a Western mining camp to act as cook, and is accordingly met with due deference by the foreman. His gallantry and that of the boys is entirely lost on Judy, and she at once starts in to rule the camp with an iron rod. It is at this point that Jed, who is in the vicinity looking for work, meets the foreman and is offered a job. He meets his wife face to face when he enters for dinner, and, terror-stricken, he makes a dash for the door, overturning tables and chairs as he goes. The boys, however, soon overtake him and listen in sympathy to his explanation. Taking their lariats, they rig them up as though to hang Jed, believing it will excite the compassion of Judy, but, instead, she snatches up a whip and proceeds to wield it with all her strength until the boys succeed in roping her and getting her to the house.

The next day Judy sets out, bag and baggage, with her husband in tow, bent upon returning to their little town. At the railroad station, Jed dutifully helps his wife upon the train, but just as it starts to gather speed, Jed swings off, to the glee of the waiting boys and the utter consternation of Judy. Then, lest she should return, the boys hurry him upon a horse with the advice "to keep right on a-ridin'."

HER CORNER ON HEARTS (May 4).—Alice is Jack's girl. Calling at her home to take her to a party ,he makes her promise not to flirt with the boys, for Jack is a jealous kid. At the party Alice forgets the promise and flirts freely. The lovers quarrel; Alice finally throws Jack's bouquet at his feet and walks away to join pleasanter company. She now flirts more outrageously than ever and three young men separately promise to take her home. They soon realize that Alice is using them as catspaws and conclude to teach her a lesson by letting her go home unescorted. Even Jack deserts her.

Alice refuses to let the butler accompany her home and starts on her way alone. She is accosted by a young dude, but the timely appearance of a working man returning from his night shift saves her from further annoyance. The working man, going in the same direction as Alice, accompanies her to her corner.

Jack, meantime, has taken another girl home. Feeling that he has wronged Alice, he hurries to overtake her. Near her home, the lovers meet; he pleads and she is unforgiving. The honest working man is busy lighting his pipe; glancing back, he sees, as he supposes, another dude annoying the young lady. Swiftly he comes upon them ,and with one blow, fells Jack to the ground. Alice screams, then hastens to explain matters. Jack gives his assailant a cigar and the man with the mighty fist departs in peace.

At the gate, the estranged twain linger after the most approved fashion of lovers, kiss and make up.

ISLETA, N. M. INDIAN CITY (May 4).—A complete panoramic view of Isleta, the Indian City, built about A. D. 1500, transports the onlooker to a forgotten age, for the picture fails to show anything approaching modern times. The only structure linking the past to the present is the church of San Felipe, which is more than four hundred years old, and is the house of worship for the entire population of this strange and quaint town numbering some ten hundred or more Pueblo Indians. A saintly French priest ministers to the spiritual wants o fthese interesting people ,who are very devout Catholics. Twenty percent of the population speaks English and the remainder Spanish.

THANHOUSER.

THE SALESLADY (May 7).—They said in the big department store that "nothing could phase Nora Grady." She was a saleslady, hard working, but with plenty of heart, and, her enemies whispered, a bit of a temper. She didn't love her daily grind, but the father and mother and the little sister needed the money, so she kept at it.

Love had never entered her life, she was too busy, but they say that pity is akin to love, and that was how her funny little romance started. A gawky country boy applied for work, and he was so helpless that Nora felt sorry for him, guided him to the proper department and aided materially in landing heim in the wrapping room.

The ruralite was very grateful. He thanked Nora and she invited him to dinner. She advised him how he could make his work count, and he followed her suggestions as best he could, but he never was nor would he ever be the "capable hand" that the girl was.

The owner of the store was a man who believed in developing talent. He offered a cash reward and promotion for the employee who suggested the best way to display the spring fashions ,and many men and women entered as competitors. When the ideas were examined there was one that stood out, head and shoulders over the rest, and the superintendent candidly expressed surprise that "the country yawp in the wrapping room had real ideas." For the man that Nora helped was the prize winner.

The firm didn't break faith with him. He was taken out of the lowly position, given a frock coat at cost, and told that from then on he was a floor walker. He was a happy little floor walker too, for the job suited him, but the superintendent would occasionally look at him in a worried manner, and remark, "He seems all right, but who would ever imagine he could think?"

The floor walker grew more haughty as the days passed. He ignored the girl who had first brought him into the store, and for once Nora had nothing to say. In this case, little sister, also employed in the store, did the talking for the family.

She went to the superintendent, and told him that the prize winning idea was Nora's, but that she felt sorry for the meek little man from the country, and wanted to boost him along. And the superintendent swore bitterly and sent for the floor walker to come on the run.

The messenger found the floor walker, who was in the seventh heaven of delight. He had just escorted the boss's daughter about the store and to her auto, and dreamed of the day when she would be his bride. Then he tripped into the office and met his Waterloo.

Tearfully he confessed. Savagely the superintendent rebuked him. Happily Little Sister laughed. Then sentence was pronounced.

He wasn't fired. That was because Nora interceded for him, •bue he ceased to be a floor walker and was restored to the wrapping room. It is said that they offered to put his frock coat back in stock, but he held to it as the only remaining sign of his once grandeur. Nora was promoted, but "the Ingrate" stuck to his cord and twine to the end of the chapter, and probably never realized what a weak man he really was.

LOVE'S MIRACLE (May 10).—Wealth does not always bring happiness. The girl was young, rich, but an invalid, and the noted physicians who cared for her shook their heads wisely, and gravely propnounced her case as one of general ill health, a gradual wasting away.

Her one trouble, although the physicians did not suspect it, was that the girl did not really care whether she lived or died. Life was tiresome: she had no one to care for, nothing to be interested in, and whether the end came sooner or later did not seem to her to be a matter of much concern. Then there came a startling change. The girl, in her invalid's chair, was seated on the beach one pleasant morning, when a convict, hunted by dogs and men ,swam ashore at her feet. He first threatened her, then begged her protection. The girl listened with interest. She realized that here was a fellow invalid, for while her ailment was physical, his was nmoral, and it struck her that while no one apparently could cure her, she could and would cure him.

So she provided a hiding place for him, supplied him with food, clothing and money, and aided him to elude his pursuers. All she asked of him was that he lead a new life, and this he solemnly promised he would do.

Time passed on, and much to her surprise, she heard from her "Patient." He was not as bad as she thought: in fact, he had been sent to jail for another's crime and was able later to establish his innocence. Other letters told of his making a new place in the world and steadily forging ahead, and each breathed a message that he owed everything he had or expected to have to her.

Not many months after the hunted and disheartened convict had stolen from her presence, the girl met him again. But this time, he came to her a free man, his head erect, and the joy of living in her eyes. He told her he had come to pay his debt of gratitude for the new life she had placed within his hands, by showing her that the future held nothing but happiness for them both. He asked her to become his wife, but the girl, feeling she was a confirmed invalid, refused him, although he had grown to be her whole life.

Tehn the miracle transpired. With her hands clasped in his, and his eyes looking into hers, he told her she was no longer ill, that she was to grow well and strong for his sake. Standing a few paces away he held out his arms to her, breathing the one word "Come." Scarcely realizing what she was doing, the girl struggled, trembling to her feet, and stood alone, as she had not done for years. Then smiling and confident of her power to conquer death, she walked into the arms of love.

BISON.

THE POST TELEGRAPHER (May 1).—Replete with sensationalism, showing upon scene of battle and heroic deeds, carrying a beautiful story of a girl's love for a soldier, and remarkable for its extraordinary dramatic rendition, "The Post Telegrapher," the Bison two-reel headliner, which is ready for shipment May 1, is without question one of the best productions of this world-famous series—as good as "The Deserter," and considered by many as superior to that production.

Interesting scenes are shown of the parade grounds and of Bob Evans, one of the post telegraphers, at work. The following message comes over the wire:

"Sioux Indians holding war dance. Fear outbreak. Protect wagon trains and settlements. White, Indiana commissioner."

A scouting party is immediately sent out, Evans being detailed therewith. The Indians, however, have already started on a mission of death and destruction. Settlers are wiped out and their cabins burned. They meet a Tartar in old man Hart, who barricades the doors and sells the lives of himself and his family at great cost to the redskins.

The approach of the soldiers is reported by means of smoke signals by Indians hidden on hilltops, and the savages lay a clever ambush into which the soldiers fall.

At the first volley Evans is tumbled from his saddle. The soldiers wheel round and dash back, but they are surrounded by "the circle of death," which narrows down like the coil of a python, until the few survivors, making the last desperate stand, are despatched.

Meantime, Evans has regained consciousness. He makes for the telegraph line, and stumbling and falling, reaches his goal. Racked with pain, and weak from loss of blood, he manages to reach the to pof the pole, and taps the wire, connecting his pocket instrument. His sweetheart, Eva Reynolds, the daughter of an officer, is talking to the fort operator when this message clicks in:

"Ambushed in Rocky Gulch. Many killed. Cannot hold out longer. Rush help.

"EVANS."

Sharply the Colonel gives his commands. The bugler calls "Boots and Saddles," and in a few moments the troopers are rushing at break-neck speed to the aid of their comrades.

Anguished for the safety of her lover, Eva cannot bear the suspense, and, donning a soldier's uniform she mounts a horse and follows the troop. When they reach the battle ground they find the ground strewn with dead horses and men, mut evidence of the terrific struggle which too kplace. Without stopping to bury the dead the soldiers follow the trail of the Indians, bent on vengeance.

Eva dismounts and looks for Bob. Not finding him, she remounts and circles around. Lying senseless at the telegraph post she discovers Bob, and reviving him, she lifts him to her horse's back, and, mounting behind him, gallops back to the fort.

The Indians have reached their camp, and the sentinels report the coming of the troops. A council of war is held, and a bold strategic plan decided upon. Head-dresses and blankets are mounted on sticks, which are thrust into the ground about the tpees. Making a detour, the Indians gallop madly toward the stockade, where the emigrants and settlers have taken refuge, under the protection of the small garrison left there.

The soldiers fall into the trap. With a telescope, the Colonel sees the dummies and, believing them to be Indians holding a council, advances upon the camp. The chagrin of the soldiers increases their anger, as they realize they have been tricked, after making a fruitless charge into the deserted camp, and, suspecting the plan of the Indians they start back on the long ride to the fort.

Knowing that the time to accomplish their purpose is limited, the Indians hurl themselves at the stockade with indescribable fury. Inside, every hand that can hold a gun is sending leaden messengers of death into the Indian ranks. Getting up from the hospital cot, Bob joins the defenders, and, forgetful of his painful wounds, plunges into the fray. Soon the Indians begin jumping over the top of the stockade, and terrific hand to hand combats take place. Bob grapples with a huge buck, but in ihis weakened state is overpowered, and as the Indian ,throttling him with his left hand, raises his right with a deadly tomahawk in it, Eva leaps upon him and plunges a knife into his heart.

As the tired horses thunde ralong, the troopers hear the shots and savage yells, and, conjecturing what is occurring at the stockade their mounts are not spared, but plunging the spurs into their flanks the soldiers swoop down on the Indians. With rage and resentment in their hearts they fight like demons, and the flashing sabres soon mark the end of the contest.

The end of the film shows a sunset scene, with the lowering of the flag, with Bob and Eva thanking Providence for their deliverance.

ON THE SHORE (May 6).—Old Tom Morgan had occupied his little shack on the shore it seems from time immorial. He was happy there; he had made his living out of the sea, which was visible from his door, and the last of his thoughts was he was likely to be evicted while life remained to him. His pretty daughter, Bess, who was his helper, mended his nets, etc., was in the same way of thinking as regarded the tenure of possession of the shack.

But the march of improvement could not be withstood, so it fell that one day, a new dock was projected and Morgan was given notice of ejection. He, refusing to go, means were taken to force him out. There was a quarrel and the manager of the steamship company was wounded. Of course, Tom Moore was arrested. Bess intervened in behalf of her father and made such a pretty and convincing speech to the manager, that the latter, wounded though he was, readily forgave Tom, fell in love with the daughter, and left the old man in the undisturbed possession of his home. The dock company decided to lengthen an existing dock instead of building a new one.

THE LAND OF PROMISE (May 9).—Jose' and his wife, having found condition poor in their own country, Mexico, emigrate to Southern California. They enter the land of promise full of hope and joyful anticipation, even though they are almost at the end of their resources. They are seen by some of the native sons taking possession of an old abode shack without the formality of asking permission. The men thereupon advise the owner of the shack of the trespass of the unwelcome and despised Mexicans. The owner goes to see them and demands rent; Jose' gives him all he has, which is short of the sum demanded. Jose' is downhearted and discouraged when he finds himself without money, food or work.

His wife, however, cheers him with words of encouragement and Jose' leaves in search of work. He applies at a ranch, but fails to obtain employment. Wandering disconsolate about he comes upon the foreman of a road grading gang, who has just set a mine for a blast. He applies to him but is again disappointed. The foreman has just lighted his fuse, and they run for cover. Just then Jose' sees the ranch-owner riding by the set mine. He shouts, but the ranch-owner does not hear. Jose' then darts forward, grabs the horse by the bridle, turns him and runs him out of danger. The foreman calls to Jose' to save himself, but he is too late. The blast explodes and fragments strike Jose'. He insists upon going home without assistance. His wife meets him at the door, leads him in, bandages the wound, then sooths him to sleep. Finding nothing nourishing in the house for Jose' in his weakened condition and no money to purchase food, she becomes desperate and determines to secure one or the other. In the meantime, reward notices have been posted in an effort to affect the capture of Cattle Rustlers, who have been operating in the vicinity.

The wife starts out and, seeing a calf tied in a corral and nobody in sight, she decides to take it. One of the boys sees her, and notifying the others, they follow her. She deserts the calf in the road and, half dead with fright, hurries home. The ranch-owner and the boys reach the house and are about to treat her roughly, when the former recognizes in Jose' the man who saved his life. Explanations are forthcoming, and when the ranch-owner learns that hunger prompted the deed, he starts a subscription and turns the amount over to Jose'; then offers him work on the ranch. They then depart, leaving husband and wife to rejoice over the turn of the tide of their fortunes.

THE STAFF OF AGE (May 11).—Picturesque old Lawrence Shea was quite a figure in his district. He was crippled as well as venerable, and he peddled shoe laces and other trifles for a living. His only possession of any consequence in this world was a small but precocious grandson, who tended the old man as best he could, and was himself tended in return.

The little boy was thrifty, frugal and persevering, and so it fell that when one day old Lawrence was arrested for peddling without a license, the boy was able to come to the assistance of his grandfather by going to court and proffering payment of the fine, which the kindly judge refused to accept, and released the poor, old man.

So the aged derelict and the small boy, so full of promise, returned home to work out their respective destinies in accordance with probabilities.

LET WILLIE DO IT (May 11).—Willie promises to give up smoking, and other evil habits in order to win the affections of his sweetheart, but unfortunately does not keep his promise, and falls into disrepute.

The cook, being reprimanded by her mistress, leaves and matters in the house are all awry when in the emergency Willie is appealed to in his office to come and straighten out matters. He encounters more than he bargained for, being set to do cooking, dishwashing, and cleaning work, from which he would escape, were it not that company was expected.

He, however, stuck to his job, and, in the end, placates his fiancee and her mother by his willingness to atone for his smoking habit by his domestic inclinations.

RELIANCE.

THE RETURN OF JOHN GRAY (May 1).—John Gray is happily married and is idolized by his wife and little girl. His so-called friends get him interested in stock gambling, and it is not long before he is on the verge of bankruptcy. In order to save himself he steals the funds of the firm, and, losing that as well, shows his weak streak by decamping. He leaves his coat and hat on the river bank and, when the defalcation is discovered, the coat is also found. The obvious conclusion of the police is that he has left town, although his wife, wrapped up in her love and respect for him, refuses to believe that he has either stolen or ran away. Later she comes in for a large inheritance and continues the search for her husband, but to no avail. Fifteen years later she is welcoming her daughter's fiance and bids them good-bye, as they leave the house for an auto ride. A tramp bumps into them and the daughter draws back from him in disgust. Recognizing her mother as his wife, Gray, now a drunken bum, steals away into the shadows. Later he enters the house, and is found stealing the silverware in the dining room. In the moment of recognition the woman's log-cherished ideals are shattered. Just then they hear the daughter and her fiance returning. Realizing that his daughter is going to marry a wealthy man, Gray sees a chance of blackmail, but his wife is ahead of him and prevents his going into the parlor where they are. Instead she holds him to listen to her daughter showing her fiance a portrait of Gray, telling him what a good man he was. Gray breaks down and leaves, determining to make a man of himself, and one day return to claim his own.

HIS LOVE OF CHILDREN (May 4).—John Hedden is a middle aged man who is passionately fond of children. He spends a great deal of time at the home of a widow friend, who is happily blessed with three beautiful children. He meets there Helen Knox, who is acting as governess to the three children. Realizing that she could create the happy home life that he so craves he asks her to marry him. She willingly consents, but after the marriage greatly disappoints him by turning from the beautiful home he has made for her to the allurements of society. In order to off set his loneliness he steals away, while his wife goes out to society affairs, to the companionship of the widow's children.

Finally, one Sunday morning, again compelled to eat a lonely breakfast, he decides to take the children up to the zoo without his wife's knowledge. He leaves her a letter, saying that he was called away on an important engagement, and goes to the widow's house, where he prevails upon her to accompany him and the children. While at the Zoo he is seen by a gossipy friend of his wife's. She goes at once to the wife and tells her of what she has seen. The wife, already mystified by her husband's letter, is quite ready to believe the friend's gossip. She goes at once to the widow's home and there finds that her husband has already returned with the children. She accuses the widow of trying to steal her husband, and the widow, in turn, tells her how she has disappointed her husband in his ideal of home life. In order to prove her assertion, she leads the wife to the nursery door, and there shows her the children with her husband. He is having the time of his life telling them stories. The wife realizes what a failure she has made of her married life. She begs her friend's pardon and steals quietly away to her own home. Later her husband finds her there in tears, which leads to a complete understanding and reconciliation.

REPUBLIC.

THE BABY'S SHOES (May 7).—Frank Fenton and wife are mourning the death of their first born. It preys so on the mind of the young father that he drinks to drown his sorrow, neglecting wife and home until she can endure it no longer and seeks relief in the divorce courts. A few years later she becomes the wife of William Borwn.

In the meantime, Frank Fenton goes from bad to worse and becomes a burglar. One night he enters Brown's house. In a little cabinet box he finds a tiny pair of baby's shoes with a card attached, and in his own handwriting, the name of his own infant, date of birth, and death.

Braving all dangers of being arrested he writes to the lady of the house which he had robbed, stating that if not molested he will return certain articles he had stolen from the house. In due time comes a reply stating that the lady of the house will be pleased to receive him. In the meantime, she has sent to headquarters for a detective. The thief is ushered in. He recognizes the woman, but she does not recognize her former husband. He takes from under his coat the small cabinet and hands it to her. She opens it and takes out the tiny baby's shoes. Frank wipes his eyes with his coat sleeves, and turns as if to go. She talks to him, and asks him why he took these above all things. He replies, "only to bring back the saddest memory of my miserable life." She then recognizes her former husband.

Frank looks at her, "Am I now free to go?" She nods yes. He holds out his hand and says, "Won't you take it for old-time's sake." She slowly looks up and extends her hand. He takes it and kisses it, holds it for moment, shows deep emotion, and lets it drop, and slowly starts for the door. She looks up, calls sofetly to him; he turns and she takes the pair of shoes, breaks the ribbon that holds them together, and extends one of the shoes to him.

FROM THE PATH DIRECT (May 11).—Rufus and John Meredith, two brothers, are in love with Mary Warren. Rufus proposes and is rejected. John, being the favored one, later marries Mary. Rufus takes the wrong path, while John becomes a prosperous man. Rufus is continually borrowing money from his brother, which he squanders. His brother becomes aware of Rufus' dissipated habits and upbraids him. Rufus resents his brother's interference, then John declares he need expect no more money from him.

Rufus is theatened with imprisonment for a debt, and, realizing that he can ask his brother's assistance he goes to his brother's home and asks for a loan, not telling him the trouble he is in. John refuses him help and a quarrel ensues in which Rufus is ordered from the house. Rufus, thinking that his brother's wife can help him, writes her a note asking her to meet him. She does so, and when she learns of Rufus' request she expresses her regret that she cannot help him. While they are talking, John sees his wife and brother together, and when his wife returns to the house he questions her about being with Rufus. She resents his attitude toward her and refuses explanation.

John leaves on a business trip and Rufus, becoming desperate, decides to obtain money from his brother's strong box. He enters the house and, being surprised by John's wife, he holds her up with a revolver, shielding his face with a cloak. John, while on the way, discovers the absence of some valuable papers, which he recalls having left on the table during his quarrel with his wife. He starts back toward the house. John's sudden arrival prevents Rufus from leaving the house and he conceals himself in a clock, and John, entering, is told by his wife of the intruder. John is aware of no one passing him in the hall, but is attracted by the clock being stopped. He infers that there is some one in the clock. He orders the persons to come out, and, not being obeyed, he fires through the door of the clock. John then opens the door and his brother Rufus falls on the floor wounded.

John, believing that the reason his brother is in the house is because he is his wife's lover, refuses to listen to his wife's explanation. Later, when Rufus regains consciousness, he explains everything to John's satisfaction, showing the letter which prompted him to enter the house in order to rob his brother. Rufus is forgiven and John pays the debt.

ARABELLA'S DROLL WOOING (May 3).—Longwind, the poet, falls in love with charming Arabella, and commences to serenade her. His serenade ends disastrously, and an effective and rapid clre for his somewhat noisy declarations is speedily administered by the neighbors.

BILL AS A BRIGAND (May 3).—The morning was passing fair, and Bill enjoyed his ramble in the mountains. Suddenly, from behind a rock, sprang a bold, bad brigand ,who demanded Bill's valuables. Having robbed our blithesome hero of two brass buttons, an Ingersole watch, two pawn tickets and a marble, he departed singing a song of the bandit's life. Bill made a careful study of this unwelcome visitor's methods, and finally resolved to set up in the remunerative profession for himself. Having secured bandit toggery and made himself look horribly blood-thirsty, Bill started off on an expedition. A capture soon came his way, and he proceeded with promptness and despatch to rob his victim. By dint of enormous effort, Bill kept up his character throughout the exploit and bade the captive depart. No sooner had the captive turned the corner than the bold bad bandit number one, who has watched the scene from behind a neighboring rock, sprang out upon poor Bill, and relieved him of his booty. Honesty after all is the best policy, said poor Billy, as he sat down and wept.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE MUSICIAN'S LOVE (May 4).—Irma, the village belle, is loved by Errol, a young musician, and she returns his love although forbidden by her mother, for Errol is poor and the mother has higher aspirations for the girl, convinced that her beauty should bring her riches. Andrew, the son of a wealthy merchant, loves the girl, but is in every way unworthy, being a boor and a bully. There is a gay dance on the village green and Errol is engaged to play. Irma wishes to mingle with the merry makers, but is forbidden by her mother, as a plnishment for meeting Errol against her wishes. Irma wanders down by a pretty brook and Andrew, missing her from the gay party, sets out in quest of the girl. He finds her in her sorrow and forces his attentions upon her. Se repulses him and, in his rage, he throws her to the ground, where she is found by a hunter and taken to his cabin, the hunter chastising the ruffian. Andrew is taken into the presence of his father by the hunter and the matter explained. The father is grieved at the action of the son. Andrew visits the dance and attacks Errol, and in the struggle the precious violin is broken and Errol is disconsolate. Irma tries to cheer him, but to no avail. He will never be happy again. The father of Andrew purchases a violin, a sweet-toned Cremona, and presents it to Errol, apologizing for the actions of the son. Errol attunes the instrument and plays with his mother and Irma as listeners. The effect is marvelous and the young musician is happy in the love of the girl and the possession of the priceless violin.

NORWEGIAN MOUNTAIN CLEFTS (May 4).—This subject gives about 350 feet of marvelously beautiful scenery photographed in the mountains of Norway, which cannot fail to interest. The pictures are clear and sharp, and the splendor of the towering mountains, with the winding roads and beautiful waterfalls, is a panorama of picturesque and gorgeous scenes which will enrapture anddelight.

MAJESTIC.

HIS WEDDING DAY (May 5).—This comedy is based on the troubles which beset a man who has indulged too freely at a bachelor supper, and, rising late, on his marriage day, finds that he has forgotten the wedding ring. He rushes to a jeweler's, but has left his purse at home, and the jeweler is not of the credit giving kind. He tries to borrow from friends, but they only laugh at him. He visits a pawnbroker, but his watch and jewelry have also been forgotten.

The bridal party has assembled. The groom is rushing frantically home. He has spent his money, the night before, but goes to the pawnshop with the watch, then to the jeweler's, and gets the ring. He takes an automobile, which breaks down. He engages an ash cart, which takes him to his bride's house, but gets into a fight with the driver, whom he cannot pay. The bride's father comes to his rescue, and the delayed wedding proceeds happily.

REDEEMED (May 7).—Jeanne is the young wife of a French fisherman. He goes to sea with his comrades, leaving her watching from the shore, her baby in her arms. The sea claims the husband, illness and death take the baby, and Jeanne is heartsick and hopeless. Attracted by her beauty a visiting artist has asked her to pose for him, and, thinking to escape her memories, Jeanne goes to his studio, in Paris. She finds herself overwhelmed with attention, and soon falls into the easy-going, lax life of the Latin quarter. Her bitter memories are gone, replaced by a reckless coldness and cynicism that see nothing of beauty or idealism in the life about her. She becomes hardened, and indifferent to the gentler emotions.

Raoul, a poor artist, is painting a picture of a mother with her child in her arms. His model becomes ill, and cannot pose longer. Raoul sees in Jeanne's beauty the ideal of the Madonna and child. He asks her to pose for him. She laughingly consents, the idea appealing to her satirical sense of humor.

But when the baby is given to her, and its arms tighten around her neck, a vision comes to her of herself, in her home by the sea, with her own child. Half hysterical she relinquishes the child, dashes out, and once more with her companions, tries to forget the vision in dissipation.

But the memory will not down. Again she seeks Raoul's studio, and poses with the baby until the picture is finished, and the softening influence grows stronger and stronger. The child's mother dies, intrusting her baby to Jeanne, and this touch of confidence, and the love for the child, complete Jeanne's redemption. Her friends go to her room, to get her to join their carousals, but she sends them away. With the baby in her arms, Jeanne has found an old and a new life.

GAUMONT.

JIMMIE, THE BOLD BUCCANEER (May 9).—Little Jimmie's parents are leaving for Morocco with an expedition party intent on surveying the proposed railway connecting Fez to Tangiers, but the little youngser is left at home. The departure of his folks for the African shore is deeply taken to heart by him, so that he does nothing but think, talk, read and study Morocco. In fact, he can't sleep on account of thinking so much of Morocco, and finally decamps one silent moonlit night in a tiny launch to cross the vast Mediterranean to the African Continent. After much water suffering, the bold juvenile buccaneer sights African soil. After landing he surveys toward the interior with his telescope and descries a dusky, dark Ethiopian camp of native Moroccans. Watching his opportunity, he holds up a young native just his size and confiscates his garments. To make his disguise still more perfect Jimmie is forced to blacken his face with a pigment he had thoughtfully brought from the European side. Of course he's bright enough to present himself as a dumb negro, and further ingratiates himself to the tribe by getting them drunk. At this point his telescope reveals a caravan in peril of a marauding attack, He leaps to the field of action with a lone cannon, turns himself artillery man and routs the enemy. Of course, the travelers thank the little hero, and, much to their mutual surprise, Jimmie recognizes his mother and father in the party he rescued. You bet they are proud of their baby boy and shower a rain of kisses on him, even though the dusky makeup dirties their own faces.

THE LOST RING (May 12).—Two young lovers are married and entertain their friends at the wedding reception, where one of the young ladies loses a ring. The young bride loses her garter just at this time and, picking it from the floor, runs out of the room to adjust it. Her husband alone sees her, and suspects that she has stolen the ring.

That night, after the guests have departed he accuses her and leaves the house in rage. Returning next morning, he finds his young wife gone to her old home, and that one of the servants has found the ring in a corner. He is overcome at realizing the cruelty of his mistake, and hunts his dainty young wife up at the home of her mother. At first she refuses to extend him forgiveness, but later gives in and brings happiness to both hearts.

SOLAX.

THE WOOING OF ALICE (May 8).—Now and then, in literature, as well as in real life, one comes across a character, who is absolutely repulsive and obnoxious, but has a certain uncanny attraction, a certain fascination, an intangible magnetism, that a weaker person will find difficult to defy. Such a character is "Bull" Hicks. He is burly and rough-necked, and is feared by his evil associates, as a leopard fears the tiger. "The Bull," as Hicks is called by his pals, has every one "bluffed." Meek and poor Alice is also under the spell of his domineering personality.

Soon, however, a new influence comes into the life of Alice. Geoffrey Hall, a young clubman, and his friends, go slumming and find themselves in a dance hall of questionable repute. A number of typical characters of the neighborhood are enjoying themselves in the place. "The Bull" and his "Gal," Alice, are also amongst the crowd. As soon as Hall sees Alice, he sees that she does not belong in such an environment. Somehow she stands out strikingly and by contrast, attracts attention.

Of course, the inevitable happens. Geoffrey becomes interested in Alice and this incurs the displeasure of "The Bull." There is a fight, after which Alice goes to the house of Hall, where she is looked after by Hall's mother. "The Bull" comes to claim Alice, and in one of the most remarkable scenes in pictures and exhibitions of acting, "The Bull" shows that at last he has lost his power. The struggle is hard. There is a battle royal of good with evil, and good finally conquers. Alice, by a supreme effort, casts off the spell in which "The Bull" has had her enveloped.

AUTO SUGGESTION (May 10).—Billy takes his friend, Tom, out for a drive in his new car. Tom gets off to make a purchase while Billy is waiting. Along comes Marian, beautifully clad; Billy wishes to himself that she would come into his car. Somehow his wish is immediately fulfilled—for Marian—thinking that he is a public chauffeur, hires him. Billy blissfully drives Marian on, and at his journey's end tells Marian that she may always have his car at cut rates, if she 'phones him at the garage.

Billy rides off in high spirits. He is rich in imagination and already sees himself embroiled in a tempestuous love affair. After a series of auto complications and fun, with mistaken identities worked out in an entirely new way, and in an atmosphere absolutely original, mirth-provoking Billy boldly captures his pretty maid and rides off—but the car breaks down, and so we see them both in the end fixing the car amidst besmudged and begreased bliss.

POWERS

A BRIDEGROOM'S TROUBLES (May 7).—Jemison is not a particularly young man, but is a very ardent lover, and when his wedding day arrives, he is the happiest man alive. Jemison starts off for the house of his intended in an automobile and his troubles begin. The machine is run by an irascible chauffeur, who disagrees with Jemison regarding the fare, and the result of the argument leaves Jemison with a badly damaged wardrobe. Jemison's efforts, in the house of his expected bride, to obtain the proper habiliments of a bridegroom, form a series of incidents and accidents that are pleasanter to witness than experience. The ceremony is finally performed, however, just in the nick of time to catch the train and Mr. and Mrs. Jemison escape from a land of troubles to a world of married bliss.

RETRIBUTION (May 11).—Horace Marsden is an ambitious young chemist who, while poor in this world's gods, is blessed by the love of lovely Ethel Martin, whom he expects to make his wife. He, alas, has a sworn friend, Edward Marshall.

Horace discovers a wonderful germ killer for the purification of water and hastens to inform Ethel, and his friend, to both of whom he gives a demonstration of his discovery. Marshall, who is a promoter, sees a great oportunity in the germ killer, and proposes celebrating his friend's success, at the same time offering to assist him in a financial way. They go to Marshall's apartment and Marshall induces Horace to drink until he becomes intoxicated. He then ships Horace aboard a tramp steamer, bound for a foreign port, first making a copy of the formula for the germ killer, which he immediately has patented. He then makes Ethel and her mother believe that Horace has eloped with another woman. Later on, aided by her mother, he persuades Ethel to marry him and they go West, where he begins the manufacture of a germ killer.

Horace works his way back on another steamer and lands in a destitute condition. Unable to find Ethel or his friend, Marshall, and having no money with which to place his discovery on the market, he gives up the struggle, and, hopeless and ambitionless, he becomes an aimless wanderer.

Six years later, Horace accidentally arrives in the town where Marshall lives, and noticing a poster advertising the germ killer, under Marshall's name, he goes to Marshall's home and demands a settlement. Here, to his astonishment, he meets Ethel and her child and learns for the first time the full extent of Marshall's treachery. Ethel is astonished at meeting Horace and naturally upbraids him for having deceived her so cruelly. Horace defends himself, explaining most fully Marshall's infamy. Ethel, shocked and disillusioned, sends for Marshall and the men have a terrible scene and only the intervention of Ethel prevents Horace from shooting his enemy. Then Ethel bids Marshall farewell forever and in spite of his pleadings for forgiveness, she takes her child and leaves him, crushed with shame and remorse. Horace, feeling that his revenge is complete, also departs, leaving his revolver on the floor. Then Marshall, picking up the weapon, sits gazing at it, realizing that he has lost all that is worth living for; the love of his wife and child and the respect of the community.

SHAMROCK.

A GYPSY'S LOVE (May 7).—Leila, a gypsy maiden, is in love with a handsome youth who came to her rescue when she was attacked by a couple of ruffians. An innocent flirtation follows and the ardent blood of the gypsy becomes inflamed. She takes the attentions of the youth seriously. He later marries a young woman of his choice and after an interval of a few years they have a beautiful child. This little one, left in charge of a careless maid, wanders away across the fields and is soon lost to view in a meadow of golden rod. The child becomes weary, seats itself in the midst of the flowers. It so transpires that the band of gypsies passes. Leila, the gypsy maiden is among them. They see the child. Thinking that they will receive a reward for finding it, they carry the little one away. The distracted parents, after a vain search, believe their darling dead, yet continue the search, heart-broken, with hope abandoned. Through a newspaper, inadvertently dropped, Leila learns the identity of the child, and in a spirit of vengenace concludes to keep it. She places the little girl in a fashionable seminary and toils for years for its maintenance and education. Eleven years later, Leila visits the child, who has now grown to girlhood, and remorseful, tells her story to one of the good sisters, who persuades her to return the litle girl to its parents. Accompanied by one of the sisters, she visits the home of her former sweetheart and makes a full and complete confession, and disappears in a maze of memories, friendless, abandoned, and alone.

ECLAIR.

THE VOICE OF THE PAST (May 5).—Grandmother, watchful of her servants, surprises her valet talking with red granddaughter Jeannette. To punish the obstinate young girl, she locks her in the garret. Jeannette inspects her prison and notices a large trunk. She opens it, and finds the wedding garments of her grandparents. A few minutes later the girls employed on the farm, rush into the garret, Jeannette and Lucien are donning their grandparents' wedding garments, and they all descend with great precaution, preceded by a violinist in imitation of a real weding procession. Grandmother, asleep near the fireplace, is dreaming of her younger days, she sees again her marriage, the procession passing in front of the church, while the wedding bells are ringing. She awakens, rubs her eyes, hears the music of the violin, which is playing in a low tone; she follows the movements of the music, with her head, all absorbed by the feling of the past. Is it really a dream? She turns to find her children kneeling at her feet! Jeannette's tricks have succeeded, and grandmother consents to a union, which is the desire of everyone present.

THE RAVEN (May 7).—The Raven Photo-poem tells the sad romance of Edgar Allan Poe, his beautiful, dying wife, and their bitter life of struggle for the recognition of genius. The poem is interpreted by the all-seeing eye of the camera and the success of the poet, in his great inspiration, is shown with beautiful scenic effects and a magnificently staged production exceeding our past successes.

The LIFE of

WE are offering to the purchaser of state rights for this set of pictures an investment that will be earning dividends for years.

Why? Because they perpetuate a great personality. A character that is indelibly identified with American History. The older they grow the more valuable they become. Some day they will be priceless.

An educational feature with all the thrill of real Western life. A truthful record of the life of the only surviving hero of the Indian Wars. Colonel Cody is the last of a vanishing type of pioneers who passed into history before the invention of Motography.

There is only one Buffalo Bill. For thirty years his name has been a drawing card all over the world. When he is gone these pictures will have to take his place. Do you need any stronger argument than that? Be wise. Buy it NOW.

A THREE REEL FEATURE

BUFFALO BILL

STATE RIGHT MEN CONSIDER THIS: We are offering a picture that will draw at sight. Beautiful Lithographs in several sizes and kinds,—now being prepared by the Courier Co. of Buffalo, New York.

REMEMBER—This is not a reproduction of Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show, nor is it a Western dramatic picture. It is an authorized and authentic story of the life of Colonel William F. Cody, from the age of 12 until the present time.

Bear in mind, we give to each purchaser of state rights a written guarantee that these pictures are genuine, and exactly as represented. We also guarantee full legal protection to any of our clients against invasion of territory.

Bid now while the bidding is good. Be in on the Gold Rush. Secure the rights for the best states. Now is the time. An even start for everybody. Don't lag behind until everything is gone.

MAKE 50c DO THE WORK OF 80c

Always buy the regular M. P. Machine size 3 in One —½ pint for 50c. You'll save 30c, for you get 8 times as much oil as if you bought the small bottles.

And remember, 3 in One never deteriorates nor turns rancid. The last drop is just as good as the first.

3 in One is so clear and pure that the finest watchmakers use it. It lubricates perfectly every working part of every moving picture machine, star wheel, flywheel, shutter gear, rewinder and everything else that requires oiling. Makes every part run smoothly and much easier.

Repair bills and bills for new parts are chiefly caused by thick, greasy oils which collect dirt, gum and clog the delicate mechanisms, thus causing them to wear. 3 in One is absolutely free from grease—never collects dirt. Instead, it cuts away all dirt and gum and saves wear, tear and expense.

3 in One cleans and polishes all wood and metal surfaces around a theater. Positively prevents rust, indoors and out.

FREE OIL FOR YOU

A postal will bring you a generous free sample. Get yours today!

10c, 25c, 50c (the economical ½ pint size) for sale everywhere.

Daylight Pictures

The "EYE COMFORT System" of Indirect Illumination makes Daylight Pictures possible for YOU. It does NOT hurt the pictures' clearness.

Think what it means to have your Theatre Indirectly lighted all the time:

No stumbling over folks in the dark.
No glaring, exposed lights.
Saves ushers' salaries.
Banishes the "roughneck" element.
Lights your theatre beautifully.

Over 1,500 Motion Picture Theatres are lighted by the EYE COMFORT System today.

Do this before it slips your mind

The Sign That is Making Good

CHANGEABLE ILLUMINATED PROGRAM SIGN

THE DELUGE
HIS TRUST
AMATEURS

"PATENTED"

Easily operated, Quickly Changed, Inexpensive

St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 12th, 1911.
Zenith Mfg. Co., Cincinnati, O.
Gentlemen:—

Your sign received and well pleased with it. Think it is the best thing in the way of a program sign I have ever seen. It is only a matter of time when all the first-class vaudeville and moving picture theatres will be using a sign of this class, as I have figured I can more than save the cost of your sign in six months. The letters show up very plain and is surprising how quick one can change the wording in the entire program. In fact the entire sign can be changed while they were taking the list of acts and pictures to the printer.

Yours truly,
(Signed) FRED. COSMAN, Mgr.,
Majestic Theatre.

SCENARIO WRITERS!

If your scenarios do not sell find out why. Perhaps your manuscript can be rewritten and made saleable, and your mistakes may be corrected in future manuscripts. The author of "Technique of the Photoplay," etc., will give your manuscript personal criticism and revision for a fee of only $2.

REVISION—Scenarios having a reasonable chance of a sale will be edited and revised and a typewritten copy supplied for one dollar per finished page. Send the manuscript and a reading fee of one dollar. If the scenario will not warrant further expense, it will be returned to you; if it does, you will be advised as to full cost. Please note that this covers no criticism.

Exhibitors!

Submit your difficulties to the author of "The Photoplay Theater," and other articles on management, for advice and suggestion, the result of twenty years' experience in amusement enterprises. Simple questions $1 each.

JIM FINDS THE MINE AND PROTECTS IT.

Finding The "Last Chance" Mine

Old Jean, the Hermit, is the curiosity of Lonely Mountain. His only friend is his Burro. Where he gets all his gold is a mystery to the villagers, so they appoint Jim, a genial cowboy, to investigate. He learns that Jean has a rich gold mine, but before he can find its location the old man dies. All the town goes a-hunting for the treasure, for "Findings is Keepings" in the West. Jim alone buries old Jean who is followed to the grave by the Burro. That sets Jim thinking. He puts on the old man's wooden leg, and sure enough, the animal is fooled, and leads him to the "Last Chance" mine.

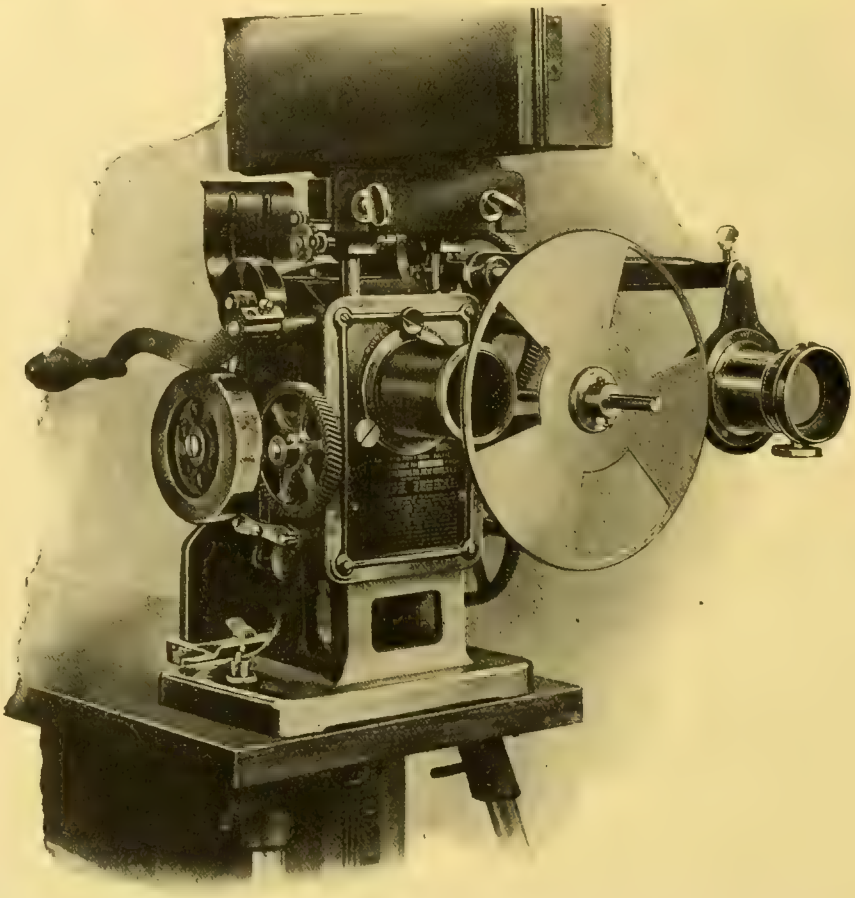
Protect Your Operator--and Machine

Are Your Repair Parts Genuine?



Your operator is the "man behind the gun," and he must have the proper equipment to work with.

The quality of repair parts is of the greatest importance to you; it may affect the very life of your machine.

You cannot afford to experiment with imitation repair parts; they cannot be as perfect in construction as the genuine because the broad experience and knowledge is not behind them. They are sold on price and not on quality.

Consider this question, Mr. Exhibitor. ISN'T THE MAN WHO MAKES YOUR MACHINE BEST QUALIFIED TO MAKE ITS REPAIR PARTS?

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH leads the world and a year's guarantee goes with each No. 6 mechanism; greatest care and skill is imparted to each part.

They are made by the highest class of skilled labor in the largest factory of its kind in the world, and all parts are stamped "N. POWER CO.," which means that our reputation and guarantee are behind them.

OUR GUARANTEE

WE guarantee the mechanism of every POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6 to be free from defects of workmanship or material and will replace free of charge within one year from date of sale every part showing a defect of any character or WHICH BECOMES WORN OUT IN SERVICE, provided such part is returned to us, charges prepaid, for inspection.

Your repair parts must be the best. Ours are always that.

Don't overlook the value of Power's Adjustable Inductor for use on alternating current in place of the rheostat. It will pay for itself within four months and lasts a lifetime.

Let us send you catalogue G with lists of parts.

Another NOVELTY Issue

"The Little Shut-In"

You never thought that feet, of all things, could be the feature of a drama, but we reverse your opinion with THIS! It's all about feet—shoes. It's a startling oddity. All a little shut-in can see of the outer world (through his cellar window) is the feet of the passersby. From this we evolve a once-in-a-year sort of story.

TROOPS OF Cavalry

HORDES OF Indians

SCORES OF Settlers and Emigrants

Taking refuge in the rude church, the settlers make a last desperate stand against the attacking Indians. Midst a hail of arrows and bullets, the parson encourages his flock to heroic deeds until the United States cavalry, in a whirlwind ride, arrives.

Disowned by his father for his waywardness, the parson's son redeems himself by breaking through the lines of the Indians and guiding the soldiers to the scene of conflict, saving the lives of the besieged settlers. The film abounds with inspiring situations.

The MAJESTIC

has become famous for its high class comedies—these comedies guarantee the exhibitor two big money making days each week. Secure them from your exchange and prove our assertion.

A FINE PICTURE

SUNDAY, MAY 12th—"TOM-BOY"—a splendid comedy. A young girl, full of pranks, whose near-sighted father objects to her lover, succeeds in getting him to marry them unknowingly. She is the sole cause of the father's objection, because of her hoydenish tricks.

TUESDAY, MAY 14th—"BUNCOED"—another comedy. A clever city girl, claiming she has lost a five-dollar bill, puts it over on five rural admirers and returns to town with twenty-five dollars, and leaves the country boys a sadder but wiser lot.

SUNDAY, MAY 19th—"DOGS"—Jones is called away from home, leaving his wife and sister alone. A tramp frightens them and they buy five dogs for protection. The tramp feeds the dogs and they become his friends and refuse to allow their owner around the house. Full of funny situations.

TUESDAY, MAY 21st—"KLEPTOMANIAC"—Ethel's father wishes her to marry Mr. Deering, a rich man, but she loves Deering's secretary. Deering is in love with Ethel's aunt. Ethel becomes a kleptomaniac to frighten the rich man away. She wins her point after a series of complications.

April 28th—"Boys"—Comedy.
April 30th—"The Silent Call"—Drama.
May 5th—"His Wedding Day"—Comedy.
May 7th—"Redeemed"—Drama.

The Myth of Jamasha Pass

Release Thursday, May 9th

"Beware the Siren's Lure!" This is the message of the Mystical Maid who inhabits the Pass of Jamasha. An odd subject, beautifully tinted, teaching a great lesson by a story, allegorical in character, and amplified by poetical sub-titles. A tale that will make you think—a story that will bring to mind the many times you have chased the rainbow hues to Disillusion.

THE OTHER WISE MAN

Release Monday, May 13th

Jim Bangs and George Wellesley were old pals and confidence men. George tired of the life and went to selling hardware. Jim Bangs tried to sell the innocent townfolks of La Mesa some fake stock. George came and secured lodging with pretty Miss Blackwell, who came near being a victim of Jim. Then there was trouble a-plenty in La Mesa. How business and love affairs were finally straightened out to your satisfaction is best illustrated by the pictures themselves. Don't forget to see 'em!

"The Salted Mine"

Neil Brown is sent by a syndicate to assay and purchase a silver mine. The owner, Fred Harvey, gets his foreman to salt the mine. The miner's daughter, Mary, discovers the crooked transaction and is determined to block the deal. The foreman fearing detection locks the girl in a cabin; she, however, escapes, saddles a horse and reaches the law office in time to save her father's honor and wins a rich husband.

Released Saturday, May 11th, 1912
Length 570 feet

Brave, Braver, Bravest

Three boys of the Big Horn ranch hearing that Gladys Kingston remarked that the man who shall win her heart must be a hero, plan adventures. Tom has her scared by a lot of imitation Indians and he rescues her. Dick has her held up by a band of outlaws and comes to her aid. Harry dresses up as a road agent, galloping after her, swings her to the saddle of his horse and carries her off. The jokes are all told and Gladys admits that there are no heroes except in story books.

Length 481 feet

"Wanted, A Baby"

Jerry Singleton by his mother's will inherits her money if he is married and has a family by April, 1912. As he is a bachelor the situation is rather awkward when his uncle comes to see that the conditions are complied with. Strategy is resorted to; the hired girl poses as the wife; the butler puts on skirts, and presents himself as mother-in-law, and babies are borrowed for the occasion. Uncle, however, discovers the trick, but finally hands over the money.

Released Thursday, May 9th, 1912

"The Violin's Message"

Blossom Vane and her little brother have a hard time to live. Cyril Johnson, the landlord, has threatened to dispossess them for non-payment of rent. One night Bennie has a dream and it suggests a theme. Hastily rising, he plays the inspiration on his violin. The plaintive air charms the policeman and in turn the milkman. It carries happiness along the line until it reaches the landlord, who dispossesses the girl to take her to his home and heart.

The Wooden Bowl

Peter and Mary Dawson, their little son and aged father are very poor. The infirm old man is frequently breaking the china bowls in which his food is served. Peter is so provoked that he makes a wooden bowl for the old man. One day the boy is discovered in the attic making two wooden bowls, which he tells his parents are for them when they get old. The rebuke has the desired effect and the old man has a china bowl in the future.

"DR. LaFLUER'S THEORY"

Monday, May 6th

Everybody has a hobby. The doctor believes that crime is a disease. He pities, rather than condemns, those afflicted. He puts it into practice by trying to cure two young people and release them from its grasp. It's a study in criminology of deep interest.

"THOU SHALT NOT COVET"

Tuesday, May 7th

You will want this. It shows in a funny way that it is wrong to covet anything belonging to our neighbors, particularly if you can't afford it. A young wife is jealous of her friend's jewel; she tries, by deception, to get one like it. She loses the trinket, her money and her peace of mind.

"THE SERPENTS"

Wednesday, May 8th

Very enticing. Just entwines itself about you and holds you in its grasp. A portrayal of the environments of the near relatives of Adam, in an Eden of nature's most beautiful and wildest furnishings.

"WHEN DADDY WAS WISE"

Friday, May 10th

"Wise up to this!" Daddy's son and heir gives him a good scare. Father gets wise. He has a narrow escape from being a regular "cut-up."

"THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD"

Saturday, May 11th

See for yourselves. If there is just one thing that makes life worth living, it is love. Some people think it is money, just like the miserly old cobbler in this story. He learned through a little child he has in himself a greater power for good and happiness—love.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

An Unsurpassed Moving Picture Machine from every point of view. “Once used, always used.”

The motion picture show is fast becoming the biggest factor in the amusement field—the biggest money-maker for the men who are playing the game with both eyes open. Go into the business now, while it's still young, but be sure to start with the right machine. A cheap machine is a bad investment and a losing proposition from the beginning.

The Edison Kinetoscope projects the clearest, steadiest pictures, is the simplest machine to operate, is absolutely safe and will outwear any other motion picture machine made. Write us today for a catalog and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

Facts and Comments

SOME little time ago a society interested in culture, literature and good fellowship, decided to present to its members as a novel and fitting entertainment the cinematographic reproduction of Homer's Odyssey. There could not be a more encouraging sign of the progress of the motion picture than the fact just recorded. It shows that the motion picture is at last coming into its own and that its true value is beginning to be appreciated by the people who had heretofore been skeptical or indifferent. The enthusiasm of the society outran their practical knowledge of the picture business and during the progress of the entertainment they found themselves, or rather the operator found himself, without that useful and necessary article known as a take-up reel. Of course there is a way of getting around that difficulty, but it takes a great lot of time and the rewinding ability of the average human hands is little to be depended on. In the resultant confusion some one suggested to send to the exhibitor, who conducted a moving picture theater a few doors away. A messenger was accordingly dispatched and presently came back with empty hands. The exhibitor looked upon this special entertainment as an unwarranted interference with his business and frankly declined to lend any assistance whatsoever. For the rest of the evening then the society had almost as many and as harrowing adventures as the wise Ulysses himself, when with Poseidon's wrath pursuing him at every step he sought to reach his native Ithaca.

What of the exhibitor who would not lend the empty reel? We have known of bitter rivals in business, men who fought each other in the press and never spoke as they passed each other but only glared like angry jaguars, freely coming to each other's help in hours of real need. Yes, we can recall many such instances, where for the lack of such a small thing as a bottle of film cement a show would have been closed or at least sadly spoiled if the competing exhibitor had not forgotten the war with his rival and sent half of his own small bottle to help the other fellow. Of course there is reason as well as sentiment in such liberal practise. This is a small world and he who asks us for a favor to-day may to-morrow be in a position to grant us a favor when we need it worse than he did. Aside from this, however, it is hard to believe that a normal human being can refuse help when help could be so easily given. The man who would send a bill to his neighbor for telling him that his house is on fire belongs to the species of which this exhibitor seems to be a well-developed type.

Who can fail to see that an entertainment of first class motion pictures given by a prominent society is bound to help the exhibitor or exhibitors in the town or city? Such an entertainment sweeps away prejudice and makes most valuable converts. If we had been that exhibitor we would have carried the reel personally to the hall and we would have insisted on becoming personally acquainted with the managers of the affair and extended to each a cordial invitation to come and see our pictures. There are men who neglect their opportunities, but this man kicked them downstairs and set his dogs on them so they would never be tempted to return. We doubt whether he will last long as an exhibitor, but he need not go out of the amusement business necessarily. He is splendidly equipped to play the leading rôle in the popular seaside comedy "A Good Cigar Every Time You Hit the Coon." A little blacking is all he needs to make a perfect success, for the calcareous accretions running from the base of his skull to where the hair is parted are hard enough to mock the impact of an iceberg.

AT a recent meeting of The Recreation Alliance in this city there arose the usual question of whether the influence of the motion picture was good for children or whether it was bad. There arose in the meeting a woman who said she was the mother of ten children. She expressed the opinion that she ought to know what was good for her numerous offspring and then declared that she thought the pictures, as they are to-day, are entirely good for children and that she let every one of her own children go to moving picture entertainments, whenever it was possible. These words from the lips of a mother sound pretty well to the friends of the motion picture after all the slander and abuse from paid hirelings of societies, soliciting contributions from the public on the theory that they are looking after the welfare of children. As long as we have the mothers with us we need care very little about the mouthings of professional reformers, claiming to be academically devoted to child welfare. The instinct of the maternal heart is worth a thousand times more than all the fine spun theories of amateur and professional agitators. When a mother of ten children so emphatically praises the motion picture, the praise is well deserved and moving picture men who have worked for the uplift of the picture may well be glad and thankful. Merit and honest endeavor will win out every blessed time.

While we are on the subject of "child welfare" it may be well to mention the singular antics of a Brooklyn branch of some "children's society," which actually took a number of children to a police court and had them observe "the workings of justice in the lower courts." Against such men and women was denounced the fearful anathema, that it would be better for them to have a stone hung around their necks and be cast into the sea. Such conduct surely is offending God's little ones. Even the yellow journal which reports this extraordinary and scandalous proceeding severely condemns it and with well deserved sarcasm asks the society to take the children to witness an execution on their next excursion.

DEATH OF THE EDITOR OF "THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD."

We much regret to announce the death of Mr. James Petrie Chalmers, the owner and editor of The Moving Picture World, which took place at Dayton, Ohio, U.S.A., where he was attending a convention of Ohio exhibitors. His death was the result of an accident. Mr. Chalmers was an untiring worker in the interests of cinematography, and his decease will be sincerely regretted by members of the industry to which he so loyally devoted himself.—London "Bioscope."

Gauging the Public Taste

By W. Stephen Bush

SUCCESS or failure in the amusement business depends, barring accidents, on an ability to gauge the taste and anticipate the demands of the public. Some men engaged in this arduous avocation are geniuses, others have great talents, while others again are just guided by close thinking and common sense. The genius sometimes fails, but when he succeeds he stirs the world and his triumph is complete; the man of talents succeeds, perhaps oftener than the genius, but the measure of his success is never as great, while the man relying on plain ordinary commercial common sense scores more often than either genius or talent, but his successes are little and always confined within narrow limits. He is a politician with his ear to the ground, but lacks the intuition of the statesman.

Under present conditions in the industry the exhibitor has but little choice in the arrangement of his program and the responsibility for success or failure falls almost entirely upon the shoulders of the producer. Does the producer to-day rise to his responsibilities? Does he grasp his opportunities? Does he understand his public? We do not presume to give any sweeping answer to such grave and difficult questions. Producers are filled with the belief that they have their fingers on the public pulse and are adepts with the stethoscope in measuring the heart beats of theater-goers. They draw their salaries and make their money largely on such theories. It is well to have them enthusiastic and self-confident. Some of them have succeeded in gauging the public taste to a nicety, all of them have made some progress within the last few years.

The object of these lines is to submit in a becomingly humble and diffident way certain facts to the kind attention of producers generally. We intend to dwell a little on some notable film successes of the recent past. It seems a good plan to learn more of the public taste by studying the things that have commanded the approval of the public in the past.

It seems then that clean and classic subjects have been uniformly successful, whenever they were handled by competent producers. The boldest and most ambitious undertakings have been the most popular and the most successful from a financial point of view. It would also seem that the time devoted to the visualization of great classic themes has been an element of the first importance. The three great features, which by common consent are considered the most notable and successful are based on two great and one minor classic of literature. "Dante's Inferno," the greatest of them all, whose tremendous value was first recognized in these columns, is based on the most profound allegorical epic of all times. It is clean and moral to the point of austerity. Nowhere is there even the faintest trace of an appeal to the morbid or sensational. Next in the order of financial success and prestige is a minor classic, Torquato Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered." The keynote of this great work is a picturesque loftiness. It appeals only to the best instincts. Its moral is faith and devotion to duty. Standing between the "Inferno" and "Jerusalem Delivered" in point of film merits alone we have the "Odyssey," the greatest pure epic of the world. The story of the "Odyssey" is sublime in its simplicity, abounds throughout in artistic power and depends greatly on the beauty of form.

There is, in view of the success of these features, simply no getting away from the fact that high art, beauty of form, magnificence of theme, epic grandeur, lofty morality and an appeal to the finest and deepest emotions have found favor with the American public, who are willing to pay increased prices for such features. Are we allowed to draw the conclusion, that the best is none too good for our American public? Curiously enough the three features named were all made abroad by Italian producers. Among other things their success here absolutely vindicates the claim of the motion picture to be recognized as an art. Art is universal and scorns the limitations of language and geography. From what we can learn these features scored a greater success here than abroad and in the very country in which they were made. Strange, very strange indeed, that producers five thousand miles away turn out features on which our people set the stamp of their immediate and emphatic approval. All this, too, happened while the American-made pictures were enjoying a great vogue in Europe and furnished the European exhibitor with the bigger and better part of his programs. Here is a phenomenon well worth pondering over.

There can be no doubt whatever that these great successes were but little understood and appreciated by the purveyors of amusements in this country. As managers and exhibitors all over the country realized the popular response to these features they were confused and bewildered. They had utterly failed to gauge the public taste. As one of them said when he saw the crowds thronging the box-office in spite of his pessimistic predictions of failure, "My judgment on these pictures was altogether wrong." When the "Inferno" was first exhibited before audiences of managers and exhibitors, the owner of a cheap vaudeville circuit severely condemned the wonderful journey of the poets across the foul waters of the Styx on the ground that it was "too long." These particular scenes had been the most difficult to render, had taken much time, extraordinary artistic skill and have since been especially appreciated and often applauded by hundreds of audiences, paying sometimes thirty nickels for a seat instead of one. We mention these instances of stupidity because they were typical of the ignorance, prejudice and lack of judgment often found in men, who, by the unthinking, have sometimes been regarded as oracles of wisdom. It seems quite reasonable and proper to offer a little advice and instruction to such "judges of the public taste." Producers surely need not be guided by these Squire Shallows of the amusement world.

With the record of classic productions thus before us we may well hope that American producers, who have more routine experience than any European rival and far better equipments, not to speak of a natural aptitude fully as great as that of any foreign maker, will more than ever before turn their attention to subjects of a classic character and not be afraid of big things. The Selig production of "The Coming of Columbus" bids fair to be a fine beginning. The field of classics is rich and we have so far scarcely scratched the surface. The history and the literature of our own country offer grand opportunities. They are waiting to be filmed in grand and befitting style by the right man.

We can learn two things from the successes of our European friends: to take plenty of time and to be thorough. Expert advice and co-operation must be sought. In the "Inferno" and "The Odyssey" there is not an inch of film but tells of expert help by sculptor, painter, scholar, historian and last, but surely not least, stage director. Columbus had no Homer to tell his story. Literature has neglected the great discoverer and no epic exploits his marvelous deeds. Now we will have an epic in motion pictures for which no poet has furnished the text. The images have sprung directly from the brains of the producers and all those who helped him. There are other events and characters in history awaiting similar cinematographic appreciation.

At no distant day we propose to take a general survey of the major and minor monuments of literature, which seem promising subjects for the competent filmer. We hope in this way to encourage the ambitious, enterprising and daring among our producers, and if but a single grain of the seed we intend to sow falls on fertile ground we will deem ourselves amply repaid for the small labor such a study will involve.

Harbeck Lost on the Titanic.

THERE were few lines of business in America that did not have some representative lost on the great boat that went down to Davy Jones' locker on the 15th of April, of this year. There were a few moving picture men among the number, the loss of whom we have noted already in these columns, but principal among the number was William H. Harbeck, a pioneer in the moving picture business, who had roamed the world with his camera, and contributed much to the enlightenment of his fellow-men by making pictures that will outlive him as valuable records. His contribution to the cause of education was of much value. He believed in the educational movement and was constantly on the lookout for subjects that were really worth while. He it was who was on the spot to record for posterity the destruction caused by the San Francisco earthquake. In the early days he toured the world, making interesting scenic records for "Hale's Tours," an idea and project that perished because it was some years ahead its time.

W. H. Harbeck in Action.

Originally Mr. Harbeck came from Toledo, Ohio, which city he always considered his home, but of recent years Seattle, Wash., had been his headquarters. In ordinary parlance he might be called a cameraman. But he was an independent cameraman. He did not work by the week for an ordinary salary. He usually was financially interested in the pictures he was taking. He was accustomed to carrying out expeditions that required much capital, and, as a rule, he was a partner in the enterprise. Financially, Mr. Harbeck was successful. He was just getting to a point where he could enjoy life and carry out large projects that suited his fancy, when he met with his untimely end. The inscrutabilities of fate are particularly emphasized in the death of Mr. Harbeck, which was contingent on a series of fatalities. The last time the writer saw Mr. Harbeck alive he was in the company of the late editor and founder of this paper, Mr. J. P. Chalmers. On that day, only ten weeks ago, those two strong and healthy men had been at the Eden Musee, looking at Mr. Harbeck's great set of Alaskan pictures. Mr. Chalmers returned to the office and wrote an appreciative article of Mr. Harbeck and his work. The article was published in our issue of February 17, page 561. Now both men are dead and the great Alaskan picture is at the bottom of the sea, negative and all. Surely a strange working of fate, the real reason of which perhaps a higher power only is aware.

Mr. Harbeck was first identified with the moving picture business in San Francisco with Miles Brothers, about fifteen years ago. Later he was connected with William N. Selig in the making of the "Hale's Tours." Of late years Mr. Harbeck had been working quietly with the Canadian Pacific Railroad, taking pictures along their right of way in the Northwest for the purpose of exploiting Canada among the people of Europe, with a view of stimulating immigration. These pictures are very well known in Europe wherever the C. P. Railway has an agent. Their exhibition has been quite limited in America. After three years with the C. P. Railroad, Mr. Harbeck engaged in a number of large undertakings on his own account. Among his products are the "Round-Up" at Pendleton, Ore.; the Winnipeg Exposition, Winnipeg, Canada, and preparatory pictures for the San Francisco Exposition. By far his greatest work, however, was his extensive views of Alaska, taken at his own expense and with his own hand. These pictures contained such a remarkable fund of information concerning Alaska that he was actually negotiating with the United States Government and also the Guggenheims for their purchase. He was with one of the Guggenheim brothers on the Titanic, which gentleman also lost his life. The great picture went to the bottom of the sea with them, and here ended a worthy work representing much hardship and expense which had been suffered in vain.

Mr. Harbeck was forty-five years of age at the time of his death. His body was recovered by the cable ship Mackay-Bennett and was claimed at Halifax by his wife, who has been residing with her people in Toledo. Besides a widow Mr. Harbeck leaves a son. H. F. H.

The Pictures Which Give Tone to an Exhibition.

WHAT character is to manhood, or temper to steel, so is tone to the picture exhibition. It can readily be proved that where there is need for censorship in either a single picture or in an exhibition, it lies chiefly in the fact that there is a lack of that moral fibre which is the tone, strength or character of the occasion. After careful examination and experience it is found that where the picture succeeds, or is worthy of praise; or where an exhibitor succeeds and his house is attractive to those whose personality gives weight and influence; it is perforce because attention has been given to that needed measure of stability which makes even the comic picture worth remembering, or the drama worthy of repetition for the portrayal of either the positive or negative side of a virtue, which is instructive in its application.

Whenever an exhibitor desires to be certain of giving such a tone to his program that there can be little doubt as to its character, he cannot do better than study the list of films classed as educational. There is a splendid array of pleasing, entertaining and instructive natural history pictures which are always well received; indeed, it might be well to say at this point that wherever there are evidences that pictures on exhibition with this tone are not desired the sooner such a place closes the better, otherwise it will soon pass under the ban of criticism and be closed by force of either public opinion or the law. Sometimes tone gives life.

The writer is constantly watching the various places that come under his notice for the purpose of gaining just such experiences as those which indite this article. Only recently he has seen a place die from lack of that life-giving value of tone or character; while in other places, where careful attention is given to the class of pictures shown and a demand made for those of some educational value, life and success always result. Industrial, topical and kindred subjects are always welcome.

With perfect candor, it must be admitted that in an ordinary "show" the least welcome of the educational series are the scenics. This is only natural, because such pictures are incomplete without the lecturer. There is need for their rapid multiplication so that in a series they may possess the value which is lacking in sections. It is pictures of the educational series, then, which give tone to an exhibition; not only impart life and character but they draw the best people, encourage the attendance of children, make censorship less necessary, and defy, yea, even destroy criticism. Without doubt, the observance of this principle will do much to lift up and amplify the value of the moving picture, no matter in what capacity its privileges are sought as an entertainer of value.

Studio Saunterings

By Louis Reeves Harrison

DURING the early struggles of the Champion Film Company, Mark M. Dintenfass was as severely filed as any producer has ever been, but he must have been made of the right sort of material—criticism only took off the rough edges and left him sound at the core. He was originally a Philadelphia exhibitor, built Fairyland on Market Street, but he was a born rebel and so venturesome that he struck out boldly in the Independent ranks, first as a renter and then as producer, inaugurating the Champion Company about two years ago. My own acquaintance with him dates from the time of his desperate struggles to keep up with the procession, but I never really knew him until recently, when I found him to be a decided and interesting character.

The weak spot of nearly all producers is at the outset a source of strength. The commercial end of the business must be looked after first, then follow a lot of difficulties to be overcome which are largely mechanical, but only a grasp of the artistic requirements of moving pictures can lead to a large and permanent reward in the end. The tremendous and almost instantaneous success of the silent drama has been both blinding and misleading to many who are to-day doing so well that they might well be excused for thinking that they have nothing more to learn, but it is becoming more and more apparent to those who closely observe the trend of events that the intricate and beautiful New Art is only in process of development.

The big play is looming up like a huge steam roller; it may scatter some of the little ones and lay others out flat, but there will be a vast amount of reorganization and change of method before it comes to its own. The present attempts are merely cautious feelers in the right direction, most of them being revitalizations of old novels and stage plays, and their greatest value lies in the fact that they are preparing and training all concerned in their production for what is inevitable. At present there are few directors who could put on a play of any magnitude or importance, and the chances are that it will only reach high success when it becomes as composite as a regular stage presentation.

It appears to me that Mr. Dintenfass has secured the services of a director who is capable of handling large productions in the person of Lawrence B. McGill. I was instantly impressed on meeting Mr. McGill at the 45th Street office of the Champion Company that he was a man of broad grasp, and this was confirmed when I saw the still pictures of his coming release "Camille." The big scenes, the ensembles, showed me clearly that he can so arrange his settings and actors within the limited scope of a studio as to create impressive pictures. I had an opportunity later on to observe him closely during an actual rehearsal at the studio, and realize now that success with big photoplays so far as he is concerned is a question of opportunity.

The big photoplay will need stage direction from men of McGill's calibre—they must be tolerant, open to suggestion, patient and fair enough to co-operate with other factors. The playwright may contribute beneficial criticism, and art director may add valuable material, and I should not be surprised if a musical director and a composer will eventually be found among those measuring up to the new ideals in production. When the hour comes, the men will not be lacking in this part of the world, and the hour will come before this year goes to join the long and silent procession.

When a commercial man of pluck and clear vision finds out his own limitations, as many a producer of moving pictures has done, and when he perceives that popularity follows close on the heels of artistic presentation, he proceeds to gather about him men and women who can respond to the public demand and becomes a live wire instead of a dead one. I can honestly say that Mark Dintenfass seems to be working on exactly the right lines, and will deserve to win out on that account. He is gathering together a company of superior quality and aiming to turn out photoplays creditable to any firm in the business.

I came upon him by mere accident while on the way to his studio at Coytesville, N. J.—this is north of Fort Lee, near which the Eclair studio is located and where that of the Solax Company is in process of construction. I was crossing the Fort Lee ferry and talking to a man in the forward part of the boat when I heard my name called. I answered the hail and found Mark Dintenfass in his auto with a lot of valuable props on the back seat. I piled in among the props and we were soon bowling along the river road in hair-raising style—Mark is some driver—flying by all other cars on the route, scooting up a stiff hill to the top of the palisades, then north through wild country of clear air to where the directors and actors of the Champion Company work.

I might as well have said "play," because of the delightful absence of formality in the place. Larry McGill was in the midst of rehearsing a scene, with pretty Mary Hall in rigorous training, and he continued with the ease of a veteran while greeting me on the side. I like his style. It is forceful without being irritating to members of the company. His insistence upon the interpretation of thought and emotion by the means of facial and gestural expression is quietly determined and none the less effective because it is kindly and humanizing. Nearly all actors are as conservative as lawyers, they are governed by tradition and precedent, allow the rules of the dead to govern the living and their portrayals tend to ultra individualism instead of being responsive to laws of action and reaction, hence we are disturbed by discordant notes of personality instead of being pleased with a delightful harmony of effect.

The appalling self-consciousness of "Stars," whether from the legit or vaud, is destructive to human interest in the screen story. While these people are traveling about the country they become affected by hand-claps of the unthinking and easily-pleased—audiences of discrimination are not given to applause—and fail to realize that the same people approve of other acts just as good or bad every night in the week, or raise a storm when the band plays Dixie. Making a noise in the auditorium becomes a matter of habit among those who would do the same for the Governor of Arkansas or the Mayor of Oshkosh on the Fourth of July. If stars do not go up in the air on this account, there is always the press agent to inflate them beyond human toleration. Really important individuals do not have to thrust their merits upon common recognition.

Thus it is that men and women who have done fairly well on the stage, where their acts are intensified by music or made popular by the sentiments they utter, often become commonplace in moving pictures and have their vanity boxes sadly jarred. It is quite natural for them to think that they are lowering themselves to appear in the moving picture plays and they become as fussy as a prima donna with a sore throat when not permitted to continue, in the picture, their preconceived ideals of stage acting. Among them are to be found very few women who could equal Miss Turner's marvelous portrayal of jealousy in the role of a discarded favorite, when she fills the scene alone for the entire thousand feet of a twenty-minute presentation or the masterly performance of Miss Lawrence in making visible the fading light of human reason in a part where mother-love completely dominated all other sentiments immediately after the death of a newly-christened child.

Group in "The Derelict" (Champion).

There is a great deal for the most accomplished actress or actor to learn from the silent picturing of emotion in photodramas. The human voice is a wondrous factor in every phase of life, especially at intense moments. I recently attended the burial of a very dear friend, and found myself only dully affected by the ceremonials, but one faint cry from a true mother's disconsolate heart sent a shock of keen sympathy thrilling through me, and I was unable to repress a smarting outburst of tears. That voice did most to remind me that suffering is not that of the dead, but of the warm and throbbing heart of life. That tiny sound was more deeply moving than the imposing spectacle.

It may be thought that I lay too much stress on the play, but it has always seemed to me that there must be a story, affecting or amusing as the case may be, to admit of artistic interpretation before the performers can show what they can do. Personality counts, there is no doubt about that, but that personality must be typical and not distracting in a play of genuine merit. It is merely a contributor to the general effect. With no vocal appeal and a painful lack of intensifying music during presentation, the play is bound to suffer unless the acting is most carefully adjusted to the sentiment and the situation. Because they can not subordinate individuality to the common good, theatrical stars are not always desirable additions to moving picture companies.

I have reason to think that Mr. McGill will be able to produce successfully, with or without stars, if he is given the right kind of plays to put on as he has a way of calling out the best there is in a performer, but he will need stronger scenic accessories. Each scene in a photoplay must be made a veritable picture, appropriate and harmonizing, but of sufficient individuality to get away from the wearisome stage effects. Outdoor scenes of beauty lend infinite charm and variety to the effect when they are well chosen, but property rooms are usually too meagre in resource for the proper arrangement of interiors.

The right kind of plays are going to be scarce for some time to come because of the meagre encouragement afforded authors to give their time and energy to this sort of work. All the resources of capitalists, directors and actors have been devoted to the art of expressing something when there was mighty little to express. A scenario without a spark of genius behind it can not be converted into something that stirs the emotions by all the artistic dressing in the world any more than a dead man can be made to act like a live one—the spirit is not there. The attitude of the average producer towards the playwright has been that of a man with a surfeit of plays on hand and an endless stream of them pouring in with promise of an unfailing source of supply.

Scene from "The Derelict" (Champion).

What is the truth?

From scenario editors, directors and producers themselves there is an average statement that nineteen out of twenty plays submitted to them are not even worth examination, to say nothing of serious consideration. The truth is, then, that not enough scenarios worth producing are received by any big house to keep it going, a large force is engaged in making adaptations, or the directors put on made-'em-on-the-spot variations of what has already been done to death, and this condition has been brought about by a treatment of authors such as would not be tolerated by men of intelligence in any other branch of business.

I believe that Mr. Dintenfass wants the best plays procurable, they constitute the essential starting point of production, but I can only advise him as I have others that the price paid is out of all proportion to the general cost of a reel and not worth a skilled author's while. Twenty-five dollars should be the minimum price paid for a scenario worth converting into a complete photoplay. If it makes a hit send another check for the same sum. This if often done by publishers to successful writers of short stories even when the first sum is five or ten times that named for the scenario. If an author's work is steadily successful, hang on to him like grim death. Playwrights who have the divine gift are almost as rare as hens' teeth.

Two good releases of the Champion Company are "An Italian Romance," already reviewed in these columns, and "Brothers," to which I intended to give particular notice. "Brothers" illustrates powerfully the varying results of environment, is effective in displaying the quality of mercy and admirable in attention to fine details. While "An Italian Romance" was in process, one of the actors—I think it was Irving Cummings—went out in his make-up and became an object of suspicion. Little Coytesville has long been the headquarters of a gang of Italians who were regarded until recently as the most dangerous counterfeiters in the United States. The gang was broken up last year, but only part of the plant discovered, hence newcomers from "Sunny It" are still under scrutiny. Two Dagos mistook Cummings for one of their countrymen and proceeded to "put him wise to the game," only discovering their error through his inability to understand a word they said. It is the nature of things for men to excel in make-up, such a large portion of the face can be covered with beard, whereas really pretty women find it difficult to improve on nature and can not be induced to do other than accentuate what charms they have, so that we can't see what we are getting.

The Champion Company's feature play, "Camille," should be a decided success—I expect to write a criticism of it at a later date—because the great drama lends itself to pictural presentation, Director McGill knows it by heart, and the title role is assumed by Miss Gertrude Shipman, who is considered to be one of our foremost leading women in stock, starring in "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree," "The Witching Hour," "Seven Days," "Camille," "La Tosca," "Magda," "Du Barry," and others, possibly two hundred stage productions. While her record on the stage is one of high merit, I will reserve opinion of her work in the pictures, but there is little doubt that her role will be exquisitely presented.

Of course the auto had to break down on the way home and in the worst possible place, but what care I? The mile walk which ensued was all too short—I was in the company of Evelyn Francis, the Champion ingenue of naturally innocent candor that so well suits the character she usually assumes, so I had a full course experience ending with the sweetest of the sweets.

THANHOUSER FILMS NIAGARA.

"Niagara the Beautiful" is the title of some new Falls studies by an artistic cameraman sent especially from New Rochelle to Niagara. He came back to the Thanhouser plant with some artistic stuff, Thanhouser plant says. And their word may be relied upon. The nature studies will be found with a comedy-drama called "Jilted" in the Thanhouser split-reel of Tuesday, May 14th.

THE RIGHT TYPE OF MOVING PICTURE MAN.

Types of very progressive exhibitors are not infrequently found in some of the smaller cities. This is especially true of the State of New Jersey. While the largest city in the State has not even one large theater conducted on progressive lines there are many smaller communities scattered throughout the State where model theaters in charge of able showmen are found. Not the least among these is Morristown. In this historic old town the biggest figure in the amusement business is Mr. J. Harold Nunn, manager of the Lyric Theater and President of the Lyric Amusement Company. Though still a very young man, Mr. Nunn knows the moving picture game from every possible angle. His place is patronized by the best people in the community, many of whom come every night and hold their special seats, just like the financial magnates have their boxes at the opera house. Mr. Nunn is a very close and tireless student of his profession, which he regards very seriously indeed. He is never entirely satisfied with the present and is always seeking new fields to conquer. Not the minutest detail in the management is neglected. He is one of those rare managers who, without notice, could fill the operator's or the pianist's or the singer's place to the perfect satisfaction of a critical audience. Projection is one of Mr. Nunn's hobbies. It is as near perfection as human eyes and hands can make it. Method and system are his watchwords and he has instilled his own progressive ideas into every employee of the Lyric. The result is that with his scant five-hundred seating capacity Mr. Nunn cannot accommodate his patrons. He is a splendid type of exhibitor, to whom the industry is under some obligation for the respect and popularity, which the motion picture enjoys in Morristown and the surrounding territory.

MR. J. HAROLD NUNN.

CLARION, IOWA, WILL GET NEW HOUSE.

W. F. Smith, proprietor of the Family Theater at Clarion, Iowa, advises the Moving Picture World that he is about to build a modern picture house in that city. The new theater will be opened by September 1, and will have a seating capacity of about 350 persons. The interior will be finished in antique oak and the house will be equipped with every modern device for the comfort of its patrons. Mr. Smith has been running a picture house in Clarion for the past three years with good success.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

A MEETING of Independent exchange owners who are not connected with the manufacture of films was held in the Fort Pitt Hotel, Pittsburgh, Sunday, April 28th, in response to a hurried call sent out a few days before. Twelve exchange men were present, representing twenty-one Independent exchanges in various parts of the country.

The object of the meeting was self-protection for exchanges which are confining their labors, at present, strictly to exchange business. The protection of these exchanges in the matter of territory was thoroughly discussed, and, as the initial step for the preservation of their interests, it was unanimously agreed that they should combine to establish a manufacturing plant for the production of films. After discussion, $100,000 was immediately subscribed for the purpose, further steps in the movement to be deferred until consultation with the Sales Company.

A committee of eight was formed for the purpose and it was decided that they should proceed to New York direct from Pittsburgh. On Monday, April 29th, the committee held a conference with several members of the Sales Company, and their proposition and plans were thoroughly discussed. It was then decided by the committee, in view of a counter proposition outlined by the members of the Sales Company present, to postpone action for one week, when another meeting will be held in New York to adjust matters.

It is hoped that the coming meeting will result in an amicable and satisfactory disposition of the points at issue. The Independent exchanges unaffiliated with the manufacture of film are at a decided disadvantage at the present time in the matter of territory and in other ways that could be enumerated, but it is not just clear how engaging in the manufacture of film would bring them the necessary relief. The only solution that promises a permanent settlement of the question, and a healthy organization is the absolute divorce of the exchange from the manufacturer; but, before that much-desired end can be hoped for, there must be a submerging of the spirit of commercialism, so rife at present. The future of the business should fill the eye more frequently and all the working factors should be held more closely in the bonds of equity, for the general good of all. The breakneck pace at which some Independent manufacturers are trying to make money would impress one that they neither see nor believe in the future of the moving picture. In their case it is the old story of the goose and the golden egg over again.

A Chat With David Horsley.

David Horsley, president, and W. G. Gilmour, comptroller of the Nestor Co., stopped over in Chicago for a few hours Sunday, April 28, on their way to Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. A. Vallet also passed through the city, en route to the Nestor studio in Hollywood, a suburb of Los Angeles. Mr. Vållet will be the camera man of one of the three Nestor companies now resident there.

Mr. Horsley informed me that his studio in Bayonne, N. J., is closed, and that all productions will be made in California for some time to come. He said that, in the future, it will be the Nestor policy to release a Western drama on Wednesdays, a Western comedy on Saturdays, and a drama of general scope on Mondays. The Monday dramas will be confined to big themes and imposing spectacles.

It is Mr. Horsley's intention to remain in California for two weeks, after which he will return in time to superintend the filming by his company of the 500-mile auto races in Indianapolis on Decoration Day. The sole rights to take moving pictures of the event are held by W. M. Swain, owner of the Calcium Light & Film Co., of Indianapolis, for whom the pictures will be made. Mr. Swain will dispose of the film on the States rights plan. Five camera men will be employed and they will be on the ground, with Mr. Horsley, three days before the races, so as to get close up pictures of every entry and of the drivers and mechanicians.

The demand for the Nestor product has shown a large increase within the last 60 days, Mr. Horsley stated. The European market is also encouraging. Mr. Horsley expects to visit London next June, and will establish London and Paris offices in time to take care of the Fall trade.

The Western companies have taken quite a number of scenic and educational films recently, Mr. Horsley informed me, and the releases made have been favorably received.

That Titanic Disaster.

By the courtesy of Manager Plough, of the Anti-Trust Film Co., I was favored with a private view of the extra special of Animated Weekly, showing "The Titanic Disaster." Mr. Plough has had a great demand for this film, the four prints purchased by him not being sufficient to cover immediate bookings.

The following telegram from George C. Martin, of the Mirror Theater, Moline, Ill., was received by Mr. Plough and serves to show how eager the people are to see pictures of the disaster: "Showed Titanic Disaster to over 3,700 people on Friday, April 26. Beat all previous records of the house."

But to return to my view of the film. Throughout the entire 900 feet of the subject, I was most anxious to find something that would bear out the advance notice referred to in my last letter, but I failed to find it. The icebergs, represented as being near the spot where the Titanic went down, had in the background, clearly revealed, a rugged promontory, and one could easily see that the bergs were in a bay near some Northern shore. There are many films from which this scene could have been taken. So with the so-called grave of the Titanic. That bit of northern sea, with the golden glint of sunset, and an iceberg in the offing, was taken many moons since, by whom I do not know. The scene showing the Carpathia approaching New York, off the coast of Rhode Island, is evidently genuine, for the Press boats went out to meet her fully that distance. The scenes in New York, showing some of the survivors among the crew and the crowds in front of the White Star offices, are the most genuinely interesting in the film.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Carl Ray, owner of five theaters in Muskegon, Mich., made a call at the World office recently, on his return from a trip to the Pacific Coast. Mr. Ray was accompanied by his wife. They visited El Paso, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, and Salt Lake during the tour. Considerable time was spent in Los Angeles, where Mr. and Mrs. Ray were royally entertained by all the picture manufacturers there, and also by exhibitors. While in Los Angeles, Mr. Ray purchased a valuable property in Hollywood, a suburb, where he intends building a home. Mr. Ray is treasurer of the Exhibitors' State League of Michigan. He expects large crowds in his home town when the convention meets July 9-10-11.

Fred J. Murphie, manager of the Sioux Falls branch of the Standard Film Exchange, has closed that office for a time and will be located in Chicago, as manager of the Federal Film Co., at 110 North La Salle Street. The exhibitors in the Sioux Falls territory will be handled from the Chicago office of the Standard.

It is said that Mort Singer, owner of a number of legitimate houses in Chicago, will open the Princess Theater shortly, with the "Odyssey."

The Wurlitzer Company has installed a large pipe organ in the Cort Theater on Dearborn, between Washington and Randolph. This organ is equivalent to a 12-piece orchestra. It is played by hand, a skillful organist being required to play it.

W. W. Watts, owner of the Vaudette Theater, at Springfield, Ill., installed a large pipe organ in his house recently. In addition he has a four-piece orchestra and a grand piano to play the accompaniment for his pictures.

* * *

The Majestic Theater in Peoria, Ill., managed by Henry Sandmeyer, Jr., and formerly a vaudeville house, was changed to a straight moving picture theater last week.

The Powers Opera House, Decatur, Ill., a legitimate house of that city, started picture programs Saturday, April 27th. Licensed service, furnished by the General Film Co.'s branch at 17 South Wabash, is used.

* * *

The Elks' Quartette of Taylorsville, Ill., has leased the Elks' Opera House of that city and run an exclusive Licensed program furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch at St. Louis.

HOUSE REMODELLED.

The Victory Theater at Lutcher, La., has been extensively remodelled and refitted. Its capacity has been largely increased and many modern improvements have been installed. Two projecting machines are now in operation.

The Moving Picture Educator

THE LATE MR. J. P. CHALMERS AND THE EDUCATIONAL PICTURE.

WHILE many of the excellent characteristics of the late esteemed editor of this paper have appeared on these pages, any summary of them would be singularly incomplete if it did not include one relative to his attitude towards the educational value of moving pictures. It was the writer's desire to allow the first expressions of sorrowful appreciation to have precedence over any more deliberate and thoughtful estimate of the actual and permanently educational value of Mr. J. P. Chalmers' work and ambitions for the highest and best results obtainable from cinematography. A man of the most cultured principles, possessed with a store of the most necessary perfect knowledge, it is not surprising that he was so determined that whatever secrets for good were hidden within the possibilities of the picture should be brought forth if aught that he could do might help. If a prophet is one who possesses knowledge of things beyond the immediate adaptability of the time, and therefore must project them into the future as an inspiration to the ambitious, the high and the noble minded, then J. P. Chalmers was a prophet. Without doubt he had a standard for the moving picture far higher than has yet been reached; yea, possibly higher than anyone yet seems to be aiming for, and, could he but have spoken one thought before his sad taking away, it would have been indicative of but one solitary regret, i. e., that he had not lived to see more of the realization of his highest ideals. In exact estimate of this characteristic, the writer quoted to Mr. Chalmers some six months or more ago the lines:

> "God is willing each day to raise man
> To the level of his highest ideals."

Mr. Chalmers immediately requested that they be placed at the head of an article; and any reader of the Moving Picture World can, by referring, find the article written at his request under the inspiration of and headed by that quotation.

Such were the ideals of this man; is it any wonder, then, that "The Moving Picture Educator" became a distinct division of his admirably conducted trade paper. It is not an unnecessary divulgence of a cabinet secret to say that when the admissibility of an educational department in a trade paper was discussed, Editor Chalmers had no hesitancy in declaring himself in its favor. Apart from his ideals, he was a lover of the educational pictures and in company with the writer visited many manufacturers with the purpose of impressing upon them the great and permanent value of the educational film. Towards all pictures Mr. Chalmers had but one standard: "elevation or elimination"; for a picture to live it must be and do good. As a source of public amusement he always wanted the pictures to be the highest and purest joy in what had become the Twentieth Century amusement of humanity, or the theater of the poor and the masses. It is neither an exaggeration or a profane use of a sacred quotation to say that a questionable, crude, or improper picture "vexed his righteous soul"; he was as jealous of the good name of the moving pictures as of his own name and character; a violation of his ideals stung him to the quick, and if ever his calm, self-controlled, well-balanced nature became aroused, and the fire of his denunciation shot forth, it was when educational principles, culture and good taste were violated. On the other, hand, it is pleasant to remember and record his warm yet tender appreciation of a good picture, as pleased as an enthusiastic boy, as satisfied as a man of judgment; every picture that passed his censorship was always safe, no matter in what department of art. It can safely be widely and profitably known that the moving picture to-day is largely what it is because of the work of J. P. Chalmers through his powerful organ, the Moving Picture World; and almost equally as large through his personal word and work in every office, studio, or factory which he visited (for his sterling personality was strong). In the future, therefore, the impress of purposes, the legacy of his precepts and examples, will assure a larger continuance of those hopes and aspirations which were his. The Moving Picture Educator was a channel through which he could convey ideals impossible in any other department, preferring a way that would reach certain standards sought, besides enhancing the value and presenting the claims of that best outlet for the highest branch of cinematography—the educational picture. While it is well known that in the wide field of educational cinematography a man so broad as J. P. Chalmers could not have any narrow lines of preference. He knew full well that the nature of a perfect demand would bring about a perfect supply. The schools and colleges would create the standard which the manufacturers would prepare themselves to reach. Nevertheless, in all rules there is the exception of necessity, and in the wide field of many subjects the guardian mind is anxious lest the weak should be overlooked or neglected. This weak spot Mr. Chalmers quickly detected and watched with anxious care. The Biblical and religious pictures deserved, demanded and must have attention.

From the religious standpoint, a pure toleration must be observed, and the highest respect paid to every denominational delicacy. Whenever these conditions were violated the pages of the Moving Picture World were clear—their attitude and demands. One occasion stands out in the writer's memory, where because of the flagrant abuse of these principles the withdrawal of the offending picture was demanded—and the demand complied with. Of the Biblical pictures Editor Chalmers saw that truth literally following the original was absolutely necessary. He frowned upon "make-ups" because this was a field of cinematographic triumph in which no trifling could be tolerated; here nothing was too good, no travel too great, no cost too high for perfect work; when it reached even approximately near the standard he rejoiced. Educational cinematography has suffered a blow through the loss of his great influence by his lamented, untimely death. If, however, the effect of his words and work prevail (as they undoubtedly will) his taking away will only enhance the value of his predicted desires. Animated therewith, those who follow in the work he was compelled to lay down will pursue to that end which he sought, which was to make the educational benefits the crowning triumph of the moving picture. W. H. J.

A VALUABLE TRIBUTE FROM A GOOD SOURCE.

At a recent meeting of the New York Recreation Alliance the question of further censorship of moving pictures was considered. A member of the society for the Prevention of Crime suggested that if the drastic censorship proposed must be consistent it ought also to apply to certain daily papers—an opinion frequently expressed on these pages. A prominent lady member thought the present condition of things very satisfactory. She said she was the mother of ten children, and, as she accompanied them to the exhibitions, she considered herself well able to judge both of the pictures and their effect upon the young—an opinion to which she was most thoroughly entitled. In further comment she testified to the general average good conditions of the New York moving pictures and protested against either any further censorship or any other limitations tending to prohibit the children from enjoying and benefiting thereby.

As a result, the motion encouraging further censorship was lost by an almost unanimous vote, only two votes being cast in favor thereof. This twofold tribute both to the picture and for the children will carry increased weight and influence wherever it is known. The constant pressure along these lines always exerted by the Moving Picture World in all its branches, combined with the thorough cooperation of the majority of manufacturers and exhibitors, is having its anticipated effects. The time is not far distant when the pictures will be superior to censorship, and the children will enjoy them without need of painful restraint, but rather under careful direction and encouragement.

ESSANAY AT NILES, CAL.

The Essanay Western Company, under the direction of G. M. Anderson, has moved from Lakeside, Cal., where they were quartered for two months, and are now located at Niles, Cal., near Oakland. A number of especially fine subjects are being planned by Mr. Anderson, who has found that Niles abounds in gorgeous natural scenery that will beautify forthcoming Essanay Western productions.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

OF AMERICA

KENTUCKY EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE.

Enthusiastic Meeting Held at Lexington—Officers Elected—Banquet Enjoyed.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors of the State of Kentucky met in convention in Lexington at the Phœnix Hotel on Thursday, April 25th, 1912. The convention was called to order by the chairman of the local committee, Mr. L. H. Ramsey. Mr. A. B. Tracy was selected as temporary secretary. The temporary chairman introduced Mr. M. A. Neff, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who addressed the convention in part as follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: We have met here to-day for the purpose of organizing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky, which will affiliate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The aims and objects of our organization are to uplift, promote and assist in every way possible to advance cinematography and everybody's interest engaged in our line of business, more especially our own, asking for nothing only a square deal for each and every exhibitor throughout the country.

"The motion picture exhibitors and motion pictures have been ridiculed and abused and, in many cases, misrepresented. When the business first started it was looked upon as an amusement for children, but as the business grew and the photoplays became more popular, naturally business men and the educators began to take notice. From humble beginnings cinematography has grown until to-day it is educating and amusing more people and has more patrons than any other business in the world. Millions of dollars are invested and thousands of people are engaged in the business, and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is doing everything in their power to educate the public and to advance cinematography to the high standard to which it is entitled.

"The cornerstone that was rejected and thrown away in the rubbish was found and became the chief cornerstone of the building. Just so with cinematography. It has been looked upon and is to-day by many looked upon as nothing but a passing fancy to amuse children, but to the most advanced thinkers and educators cinematography is the cornerstone of our modern civilization and education. In fact, it is the philosopher stone. It is here to stay and to-day is in its infancy. It has grown more rapidly than any other line of business ever discovered. Millions of dollars are being invested and, from the ticket-taker at the door to the most celebrated actor and actress, it gives employment. It is advancing at such a rate that even those of us who are engaged in the business are often surprised at the wonderful progress it is now making.

"Kentucky needs this organization; not only the exhibitors but all of the people of Kentucky. Through our organization, we are going to advance cinematography to the high plane which it so richly deserves. We need every exhibitor in America and every exhibitor needs us. You will find the national organization ever ready to assist you in bringing about a condition that will benefit all of us."

After Mr. Neff had addressed the convention, all present were asked to join the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kentucky, and every exhibitor came forward and paid his initiation fee of five dollars and became a member. The next order of business was the electing of officers. Mr. J. H. Stamper, Jr., of Lexington, and L. J. Dittmar, of Louisville, were placed in nomination, J. H. Stamper, Jr., receiving two votes more than Mr. Dittmar, was declared elected president. L. J. Dittmar was elected first vice-president. Sherman Arn, of Maysville, was elected second vice-president. L. H. Ramsey, of Lexington, was elected secretary, and A. J. Wellman, of Cattletsburg, was elected treasurer. Orrene Parker, Colonial Theater, Covington, Ky., was elected national vice-president, to represent the State of Kentucky in the national board of directors.

After the election of this committee the following committee on the constitution and bylaws was appointed: L. J. Dittmar, Orrene Parker, H. B. Struble, J. M. Perkins, M. H. Nave.

Other committees appointed were: On Legislation—J. M. Perkins, J. C. Taylor, Max L. Simons, E. C. Tarvin, Jos. J. Ciarlo; On Grievance—Geo. A. Duncan, S. C. Stephens, C. S. Graves, H. M. Hacker, F. Dolle.

After the delegates had lunch they assembled in front of the new Orpheum Theater, where a photograph was taken and also a motion picture by the Gaumont Company. Automobiles were in waiting to take the delegates sight-seeing. On arriving at the noted Haggin Stock Farm, Gaumont's camera was again in waiting to take a motion picture. The delegates then visited the Haggin dairy, where another picture was taken, and from there they visited several of the largest racing stables of the United States, where noted horses were shown and their pedigrees explained. The beautiful scenery and the grand old country homes continually reminded all of that song, "My Old Kentucky Home." The flowers in bloom, the trees budding, the sweet perfume of the flowers and the green waving blue stem reminded all that they were visiting the garden spot where, it is said, the richest soil in the world is to be found. All arrived safely but one automobile in which were L. D. McKinney, of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, of New York; C. Lang Cobb, of the Reliance Company, New York; E. D. Powell, of the Inventors' Specialty Company, Chicago; George M. Wesley, of Cleveland. The automobile was delayed by a punctured tire and the boys were left behind. Covered with dust but content all finally arrived at the hotel without further accident.

At seven o'clock p. m. the convention reconvened and received a few more members, who were late in arriving; adopted bylaws and resolutions and selected Lexington as the next place of meeting, on July 2, 1912. A motion was made and carried to employ G. M. Wesley, of Cleveland, to organize the State. A resolution was also passed thanking the editors and proprietors of newspapers in Kentucky who assisted Mr. Neff in bringing about the success of the convention.

After listening to a business speech and instructions from the national president, M. A. Neff, the convention adjourned to the spacious banquet hall in the Phœnix Hotel, where an excellent collation was served.

During the banquet selections were rendered by the following artists: Stamper & Lyons, character singers; Miss Katherine Johnson, soprano; Arthur M. Siebrecht, pianist; Miss Mattie West, pianist of the Orpheum Theater; Ertz and Frankel, character singers; Miss Nellie Brennan, pianist; Misses Buchignani, pianists of the Colonial Theater; Vertner P. Saxton, tenor; Miss Julia Hogarty, pianist of the Star Theater; entire vaudeville cast, with orchestra from Hippodrome.

Motion pictures were shown in the banquet room and a general good time was had. Over fifty exhibitors attended the banquet. Everybody was enthusiastic and it was predicted for Kentucky that they will secure every exhibitor in the State. Louisville was represented the strongest of any city. The local committee at Lexington and the citizens of Lexington showed that they have not forgotten the traditional hospitality of the grand old commonwealth of Kentucky.

OFFICIAL CALL FOR PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors of Pennsylvania please take notice: The State Convention that was called to meet at Harrisburg, May 6, 1912, has been called off and will be held in Pittsburg, June 24th and 25th, 1912.

Every Motion Picture Exhibitor in the State of Pennsylvania is not only invited to attend the convention at Pittsburg but is urged to do so, as matters of great importance to every exhibitor will come before the convention.

"The Soldier's Last Call"

Republic Film Company Produces Very Creditable Memorial Day Subject Containing Interesting Scenes.

Independent exhibitors will be indebted to the Republic Film Company for an excellent Memorial Day picture to be released May 28th under the title, "The Soldier's Last Call." Many of the scenes of this picture were taken at the Cornwall Military School for Boys, at Cornwall, N. Y., and the students in uniform take part in various military evolutions and a sham battle that is quite realistic. The picture is remarkable for its excellent photography and good posing of the scenes, some of which are quite unique. Altogether it is a distinct credit to the Republic Company.

The story concerns two old soldiers—one a Confederate officer and the other a bugler who served on the side of the Union. These two old warriors have served their time of usefulness and, sad to relate, have become charges of the State as inmates of the County poorhouse. Here they spend their days rehearsing their wartime experiences and fighting the battles over again. As their home is near a boys' military school, they frequently visit and mingle with the youngsters, who are ever ready and eager to hear the war stories of the old battle-scarred veterans, in whom they take a great interest.

Finally, the old Confederate officer, feeling the approach of his end and realizing that he has but little time to live, sends his comrade to ask the commandant of the military school to come to see him. The young officer complies with the veteran's request and learns that he wishes to have a military burial. The officer tries to assure the old fellow that he still is an able-bodied soldier, but promises the military ceremony if the sad event should occur.

Shortly after this scene a sham battle has been planned at the military school. When that thrilling event comes off, the old Confederate officer is seen viewing the evolutions of the boys from his accustomed seat on the porch of the county house. As the contest progresses, he becomes greatly excited and waves his sword, which is always with him, as he cheers the boys in their warlike sport. His excitement increases as the fight progresses until it becomes real to the veteran, who, unable to stand idly by, rushes onto the mimic battlefield and, placing himself at the head of the attacking column, shouts that he will lead them to victory.

It is a victorious charge that follows. With the old veteran of a hundred battles in front, his thin white hair streaming, his old sword waving, the gallant little battalion swarms up to the intrenchments of their opponents, driving all resistance before them. But the excitement is too much for the old soldier. As he leaps upon the breastworks, he is seen to hesitate, straighten up for a last effort and then crumple and fall as though a vindictive enemy had wrenched the fruits of victory from his hand.

To the old veteran no battle of the past could have been more real. He was fighting a real fight and his death was that of a hero—he had won all the honors of war. That is a gripping moment in this picture when his heroic figure trembles and falls.

On the following day the old fighter is buried with all honors; then, when his old comrade comes forward and demands the right to sound "taps" over the grave, he, too, succumbs to the effort and joins the friend who has gone before for the last roll-call. You will drop some tears when you see this picture, and be glad of the privilege.

Capital Kalem Feature

"Under a Flag of Truce," One of the Best of that Company's War Pictures.

WHEN the Kalem company of players, under the direction of Kenean Buell, established its headquarters at Jacksonville, Florida, it was with the avowed purpose of producing a series of war pictures, to be based for the most part upon historic incidents of the late War of the Rebellion. To further strengthen the work of its players, the Kalem Company contracted for the exclusive services of Mr. Emmett Campbell Hall, a scenario writer who had become unusually proficient in the art of composing picture plays and who is not unknown to the readers of the Moving Picture World. Realizing that a knowledge of the players would enable him to prepare his plays to better advantage, Mr. Hall spent several weeks with the Florida company. The result of this combination has been a number of exceptionally good pictured war stories, notable among which are "A Spartan Mother," "War's Havoc" and "Fighting Dan McCool," each of which are remarkable in point of dramatic action and effects.

While all these plays deserve to be classed as feature subjects, a later addition to the list entitled, "Under a Flag of Truce," shows, if anything, a marked improvement on the previous productions. This subject is dated for release on Friday, May 24th. The points of excellence are found in the better grouping of the players and the more spirited action in the ensemble scenes.

Scene from "Under a Flag of Truce" (Kalem).

There is a slight love story running through the picture which gives a touch of heart interest and a motif for the players. Tom Dean is the hero, who is in love with Rose Neville, daughter of a Southern planter. Tom is a Union sympathizer and is not in favor with the old planter. News of the fall of Sumter brings matters to a crisis. The old planter raises a company and goes to the front. Tom refuses to join and is cast off by his sweetheart. He goes North and enlists in the cause of the Union and some time later returns at the head of a troop, ordered to destroy the old plantation.

The old planter has been wounded in a battle and has found refuge at his home. The approach of the Union forces compels him to hide in one of the negro cabins. During the scrimmage between the opposing forces on the plantation, a worthless character named Bill Wheeler attempts to take liberties with Rose, but is caught by the soldiers and severely flogged. Smarting from his punishment he swears vengeance and organizes a party of bushwhackers with the intention of looting the plantation. Tom Dean, now a captain, overhears the plot of the bushwhackers and goes to the rescue, joining the old planter and his family in the negro cabin in their defence against the marauders.

When the fight is at its height, Rose's sister, Nan, manages to escape from the cabin and reaches the Confederate and Union forces and advises them of the danger that threatens the old Colonel and Captain Dean. Uniting under a flag of truce, the Confederates and Unionists go to the rescue and drive off the bushwhackers, relieving the defenders of the cabin just as they have abandoned hope.

The final scene of this picture shows another truce between the Confederate Colonel and the Union Captain who clasp hands in the light of the burning cabin. This final scene is beautifully toned and constitutes one of the prettiest effects in the picture. Especial music has been written for this picture by W. C. Simon, and a large variety of posters and advertising matter has been prepared. It is a worthy subject and one which the exhibitor may feature to the limit.

The cast of the principal characters is as follows: Tom Dean, Guy Coombs; Rose Neville, Anna Q. Nilsson; Col. Neville, Henry Hallan; Mrs. Neville, Helen Lindroth; Bill Wheeler, Hal Clements.

Mayor Gaynor Wants Action

His Honor Asks New York Aldermen to Get Busy on Picture Theater Ordinance.

Mayor W. J. Gaynor, of New York, went on record last week as a staunch advocate for moving pictures. It has been known for some time that he considers the moving pictures a source of great educational value and in the past has not hesitated to give expression to these views. In no public utterance, however, has the Mayor of New York expressed himself so favorably as he did in a letter to the New York Board of Aldermen when he wrote a letter to that body telling them in effect to "get a move on" and do something with the ordinance which has been buried in committee for nearly six months with no report from the committee as to what they intend to do about it.

The ordinance in question, known as the Folk ordinance, has been printed in full in the Moving Picture World and from all indications the trade is satisfied with it as applied to moving picture shows in the five boroughs of Greater New York.

Apparently the Mayor has no sympathy with the so-called censorship ordinance recently introduced into the Aldermanic Chamber by Mr. Nicoll, for he in no way refers to it in his present letter to the Aldermen.

Mayor Gaynor's letter in full to the Board of Aldermen is as follows:

City of New York, Office of the Mayor, April 29, 1912.

To the Honorable the Board of Aldermen:

Sirs:—At my suggestion the Commissioner of Accounts made a careful study of the conditions of the moving picture shows of the City of New York. This was brought about by many complaints which I had received. He submitted his report on March 22, 1911. I appointed a committee of citizens to examine carefully into the whole subject and to report a proposed ordinance for the government of these shows. They completed their work and reported the ordinance, which was duly submitted to your honorable body. The matter is one of such importance that I have thought it proper to address to you this special communication thereon. It seems to me that the ordinance is well thought out and should receive favorable consideration and be passed by you. I do not undertake to say that it is perfect. I dare say that you may find that it needs certain changes or amendments. All that I urge is that the ordinance be considered and passed as it is, or with such wise amendments as you think proper. These shows are a great solace and the source of much entertainment and education to the whole community. They are attended by all kinds of people, and especially by those who cannot afford to attend more expensive places of amusement. The pictures shown are moral and instructive. The great outcry of certain uninformed persons aginst them which existed not long ago has subsided. Our part is to safeguard these shows in all respects, physical, mental and moral, by a good ordinance.

Respectfully,

W. J. GAYNOR, Mayor.

Not long ago an indignant Brooklynite wanted the Mayor to refuse to sanction the licensing of a place for moving pictures in that city, but the executive promptly dismissed the property owner with the remark that moving pictures were a good thing and that there was no harm in having such shows near any person's residence.

CHARLES URBAN ILL.

Mr. Charles Urban, widely known as the pioneer and perfector of the now famous Kinemacolor motion picture, is reported to be seriously ill at his home in Ashley Gardens, London. Mr. Urban was taken suddenly ill while at his studios in Wardour Street, London. Physicians were summoned and a diagnosis proved that he was suffering from gastric ulcer. An operation was performed immediately and, while the patient is not out of danger, it is believed that he will make a speedy recovery.

"The Convict's Parole"

Edison Picture on Prison Reform from Scenario by M. H. Winstock, of Portland, Ore.

AMONG the Edison releases for the week ending May 18th is a picture entitled, "The Convict's Parole," credit for which is given to Melvin H. Winstock, General Manager of the People's Amusement Company of Portland, Oregon. This picture is based upon the action of the governor of the State of Oregon in establishing a system of parole for prisoners and breaking up a particularly obnoxious system of contract labor previously in vogue in that State. About the time this reform was instituted by the governor of Oregon, Mr. Winstock, an enthusiastic picture man, conceived the idea of building a photoplay upon the incident. He had considerable correspondence with the governor on the subject, receiving his official approval of the plan, which was afterwards taken up with the Edison Company. The result of Mr. Winstock's efforts is a very acceptable production, which deserves a place among the sociological topics heretofore pictured by the Edison Company. It will undoubtedly have an enlightening effect upon the legislators and the general public regarding the subject of penology.

Scene from "The Convict's Parole" (Edison).

The picture opens upon a scene in the workshop of a state prison, showing the convicts being driven to their greatest effort by overseers. The contractor and the warden of the prison are working together to extract the greatest amount of labor from the prisoners. Considering the condition of the prisoners, the governor decides to change the system, believing that it is the duty of the State to reform these wrong doers if possible. When it is learned that he has decided upon the parole system, the persons interested in the prison contracts descend upon him in his office and endeavor to change his opinion. The governor is firm and the contractors depart in disgust.

Carrying out his plans the governor visits the State prison and gives parole papers to a number of the inmates, whose record entitled them to consideration. After the parole prisoners have been released the warden and one of the leading contractors undertake to defeat the purpose of the governor by causing the paroled convicts to violate their parole. A stool pigeon is set upon their trail and manages to compromise three of the paroled convicts who are arrested and taken back to prison.

The matter is brought to the attention of the governor and an explanation demanded. It happens that one of the convicts overhears the plot and manages to secure a credible witness thereto. Consequently, when the matter is brought before the governor, the crooked warden is exposed and the plot is frustrated. The governor gives the paroled prisoners their liberty and to the dishonest warden his dismissal from office. The principal characters in this picture are: Governor of the State, Marc McDermott; the prison warden, Charles Ogle; a contractor of prison labor, Robert Brower; the warden's stool pigeon, John Sturgeon; paroled convicts, Mary Fuller, Augustus Phillips, Harold M. Shaw.

"A ROMANCE OF THE ICE FIELDS" (Edison).

Another production of the series of pictures taken in Maine last winter by the Edison players under the direction of Mr. Apfel, will be released this week under the title of "A Romance of the Ice Fields." Aside from the very interesting love story, this picture illustrates the method of harvesting ice on the Kennebec River. It is while at work cutting out the big cakes of coldness that the hero of this photoplay is set adrift on the open river by his hated rival. The girl in the case sees her lover in danger and hastens to his rescue. The ice field terminates in the falls of the Kennebec River, and the lover is in danger of going over if not rescued. The girl manages to get to the danger point with assistance in time to prevent the impending fatality. One beautiful scene in this picture is the Kennebec Falls in Winter, showing masses of ice formed in fantastic shapes.

"THEIR HERO" (Edison).

Adapted from "At Good Old Siwash," by George Fitch, the Edison Company has produced a fine football comedy entitled "Their Hero," that conveys also a moral to college men. Jarvis, a great football player, has won the big game and deigns to notice two young sophomores who are enthusiastic among his worshippers. Finally the young sophomores get jobs in the city and become shipping clerks to a mercantile firm. The great Jarvis also goes to town and attempts to practice law in which attempt he goes broke. His fiancée has advised him to get any kind of work that will support two in a few small rooms. Thus encouraged, Jarvis goes out looking for a job and runs across the two young men who worshipped him in college days. They recognize him and learning his plight proceed to help him out. Blood will tell in the long run and Jarvis eventually becomes the confidential man of the firm while the two sophomores are still shipping clerks. At this point in the story, Jarvis' fiancée comes to town and discovers him, whereupon there is a happy meeting of the lovers upon which the rest of the office force discreetly turn their back.

PHOTOS OF POWERS PLAYERS.

The Powers Picture Plays have still on hand a number of sets of 8 x 11 sepia tone photographs of their players. Any exhibitor who is not yet supplied with them may have same on the payment of twenty-five cents to cover the cost of mailing.

TO ENLARGE THEATORIUM.

Prof. Chamberlain Will Make Many Improvements in His Picture House at Mt. Carmel, Pa.

Word comes from Prof. L. J. Chamberlain, proprietor and manager of the Theatorium, the leading picture theater of Mt. Carmel, Pa., that extensive improvements in that house are about to be undertaken. The building will be remodeled throughout, according to the most advanced ideas of motion picture auditorium construction, at an approximate cost of $15,000, which will make it the most comodious and one of the most modernly equipped theaters in the central part of the State.

A two-story eighty foot addition will be built to the present house, giving it a total length of 150 feet. There will be fully equipped stage in the rear, 25 feet in depth, with an apparatus for hoisting scenery, which will have a height of 45 feet from floor of stage. Underneath the stage will be comfortable dressing rooms. The balcony will be extended and rearranged to seat 200. The total seating capacity of the house will be 750. The entrance and front of the theater will be of beautiful ornamental design. Terra cotta and marble will be used extensively.

The Theatorium was opened August 28th, 1907. The proprietor, Prof. L. J. Chamberlain, is a wideawake manager. Though competition has been keen during the past five years, the high class programs offered daily at the Theatorium have been a standard of excellence and have won a patronage for this popular amusement theater which compels the enlarging and improving of the house.

"AMERICAN" TO PRODUCE HISTORICAL SERIES.

Responding to the ever-increasing demand for historical subjects, the American Film Mfg. Co. announces for the near future a series of elaborate two-reel historical subjects. The subjects will be Western in character, in accordance with the American's policy, and promise some astounding effects in the matter of large aggregations of performers. Plans have been perfected that assure the use of 300 trained horsemen.

OBSERVATIONS.

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

ONE of the most difficult of stolen articles to trace is a motion picture film. Time and again entire reels have been stolen from film exchanges and exhibitors and have disappeared so effectively that not the slightest trace could be secured regarding them. The losses in this connection have been large, notwithstanding the contention made by many people that a film should be among the easiest of stolen articles to trace on account of its use being restricted to a particular field. To have any value they must be exhibited. Unlike merchandise, they can be used only in a limited field and, when they are offered to an exchange or an exhibitor by someone who is neither an exchangeman nor a dealer, suspicion is at once aroused regarding the means by which the party offering the film for sale or rental got possession of it. All this is very true, but recovery of stolen films has been the exception just the same. The principal reason for this has been that the guilty parties have been wise enough not to offer the films at pawnshops or to film exchanges or exhibitors. Those who have done this have generally been apprehended. But such offenders are not the kind that create the big losses. They are generally petty thieves who are not sufficiently mentally responsible to make a serious effort to protect themselves in the disposition of the loot. The big thieves, the wise ones, know where to place the goods with safety. Such locations are run by irresponsible people who are always on the alert for films, regardless of where they come from or how the go-between obtained possession of them. The crooked purchaser disposes of them without the slightest risk. By exporting the goods he places them beyond all traces and pockets the returns with all the confidence and calm conscience of a legitimate dealer.

This subject was brought to mind by a case in one of the criminal courts of New York City last week. This case proved one of the exceptions. The wise ones overlooked something and the party who stole the goods, as well as the receiver, were caught. About twenty reels of film were recovered. They were some of the best subjcts on the market, too. The case has not been disposed of yet, so all the facts have not been brought to light. It is stated that the party who stole the films was employed in a film exchange.

While awaiting the calling of the case, several people in the courtroom were debating as to who is the chief offender in a matter of that kind. The majority thought the receiver of the stolen goods should receive the most punishment if it could be shown that he had not been imposed upon and was not an innocent purchaser. Stolen wearing apparel, jewelry and many other things may be disposed of to an innocent quite easy, but not so with films. Although the motion picture business has grown to immense proportions, the handling of the films is done in a comparatively very limited field, and the party who buys films from strangers whom he does not know to be dealers or makers must expect to have great difficulty in convincing a court or jury that he did not know the goods were stolen, especially when it is shown that the price paid for them was ridiculously lower than the actual value. Some may claim they thought the films were dupes, and in some instances this plea has made good, but if the party charged is a dealer in films he has a hard time convincing his accusers that he cannot distinguish a dupe from an original.

We must all agree that the deplorable disaster created by the wrecking of the Titanic should be given as little attention as possible as an exhibition feature. Public sentiment seems to demand that the great grief wrought by the calamity be recalled as infrequently as possible. Legitimate pictures attendant to the subject are, of course, not referred to; but any attempt to show the sinking of the vessel, and other apparent fakes, must evoke censure. I learned this the other day when I visited a house that was featuring pictures of that character. The place was near a government building and large numbers of the employees witnessed the exhibition. Their comments were not at all favorable and convinced me that enterprise of an over-zealous nature hurts the motion picture business generally. The picture people have, or should have, the same license to deal with subjects as the newspapers. Whatever is "fit to print" should be fit for the screen, but this should not be taken as a license to distort or misrepresent. As one of an audience remarked on the occasion I referred to above, "I'll stand for almost anything if it is based upon and shows facts, but I certainly will not stand for 'bunk.' It hurts my feelings to be gulled into sitting down and looking at a lot of impossible stuff that is cooked up almost before a thing happens. It makes me sick to see either a newspaper or a picture show portray so-called actual occurrences when impossibility is stamped upon the pictures and illustrations. Take, for instance, this picture showing the Titanic with about a sixth of her forward length stuck into the iceberg which is supposed to have sent her to the bottom. Everybody knows that the collision did not occur in that manner. It was on the side that the vessel was damaged."

The proprietor of the house in which these remarks were made took part in the talk at this juncture and said that, in view of the actual occurrences at the wrecking of the steamer, it was foolish for anybody to expect pictures of scenes as they really took place. He said it was not claimed that pictures were taken at the time of the disaster; that the only representation made was that the pictures were reproductions of such scenes as were taken as soon after the wrecking as possible. "Then," said one of the party, "put that on the banners in front of the houses, and don't hold back the truth until after the people pay their money. Some of the banners I have seen displayed at the cheaper houses on the East Side and other places were misrepresentations to the point of criminality. The makers of the pictures should take a hand in such matters for their own protection. If they don't they must expect that their interests will eventually suffer. If a newspaper persists in dishing out to its readers statements and illustrations that are manifestly false, it does not take the public long to strike back by refusing to continue buying the paper.

"Oh, well," interjected a bystander, "let those who do the damage take their chances. I approve of much that has been said and believe that some of the things should be stopped, but I will not let it worry me. I have been in the motion picture business myself and know that at no time is it possible to please everybody. More than that, there are a bunch of chronic picture critics who are ever on the alert to knock the pictures and revive the reform cry. The kicker and knocker is ever with us. A few years ago, the wreck of the Republic was worked into a very interesting story that received general approbation. With one exception. One man kicked because he was pictured in the film without his consent and took the matter into court." Another member of the party then asked: "If it was proper to make reproductions of the Republic disaster, why should the line be drawn on the Titanic?" "Well, I'm not making any comparisons with ancient history. I have troubles of my own."

Overheard in a Park Row photoplay house: "Phat are those fellows in that pictur' saying, Mike?"

"Shure, I can't hear a word. Let's get a seat further up front."

ESSANAY PLAYERS.

Mr. Whitney Raymond, the popular young juvenile man with the Essanay Eastern stock company, left last week for Seattle, where he will meet his mother for the first time in four years. From Seattle they intend visiting in Victoria, B. C., then will leave for California, where Mr. Raymond intends to put in a couple of weeks tempting the fish to impale themselves on his hook. Mr. Raymond's trip will occupy five weeks and, on his return, intends to come by way of the north, stopping off among the Canadian Rockies at various watering places.

Vedah Bertram, of the Essanay Western stock company, has entirely recovered from her recent illness, and is once more assuming her place as leading lady in the Western subjects. "The Desert Sweetheart," a sensational and highly dramatic production booked for release May 25th, features Miss Bertram and G. M. Anderson in magnificent roles. The film was staged in the great American desert, and is a distinct feature.

Miss Martha Russell, who has been re-engaged for a series of feature films for the Essanay Company, makes her second appearance in "Signal Lights," a sensational railroad melodrama. Miss Russell's first appearance in the new films will be in "The Return of Wm. Marr," a splendid dramatic subject booked for early release and in which Miss Russell is called upon for some especially fine acting of the class that has won for her an enviable reputation all over the country.

Noteworthy Kleine Releases.

"Fatima," a Richly Staged Oriental Subject Produced with Lavish Hand—"Under the Sway," by Eclipse.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

GEORGE KLEINE will release on May 15th a subject of 800 feet, by Cines, entitled "Fatima." On this split reel is a length of 200 feet, by Cines, showing fine educational views of the City of Padua.

As the title indicates, the story of "Fatima" is Oriental and, necessarily, the production calls for rich and luxurious settings and superb costumes. The Cines Co., customarily lavish in creating the necessary atmosphere for their notable subjects, has succeeded admirably in this case, the acting, costumes and surroundings still further accentuating the effect of the staging.

The attack on the caravan in the desert is a spirited and exciting encounter, conveying most realistically the suddenness and savage ferocity with which lawless tribes assail travelers. The photography is pleasing throughout.

Scene from "Fatima" (Cines).

Abdul, a Mussulman noble, called away to engage in warfare, leaves his only son, Melik, in the care of Melissa, a trusted dependent of the family. Her own son, Omar, about the same age as the infant Melik, is reared with the latter and both grow up as foster brothers. Abdul is killed in war and Melik learns to look upon Melissa with filial respect and affection.

Scene from "Fatima" (Cines).

Twenty years pass and Melik assumes the dignities of his dead father. He becomes governor of the province and arranges to marry Fatima, the daughter of a Mohammedan nobleman, in a distant country, who had been betrothed to him in infancy. Busied with affairs of state he commissions Omar to set out, with befitting presents and escort, to bring Fatima to her new home.

Omar arrives safely at the stately palace of Fatima's father and presents his credentials and the costly gifts committed to his care. Then the party joins a caravan on the journey homeward, for better protection against the savage Touraks of the desert. The latter make a fierce onslaught on the caravan and take it by surprise; but Omar, single-handed, protects Fatima from capture and slays many of the foes with his sword.

The prowess shown by Omar in the fray wins the love of Fatima, and she shows it by many signs of endearment; but Omar, though smitten by her charms, is loyal to his foster brother and delivers her safely to him after many heart burnings in the desert.

Melik receives his betrothed with due marks of honor and esteem and loads her with princely gifts; but we can see that she receives his advances coldly and that his mind is disturbed. Persistent, however, he continues to press his suit with ardor, and his devotion is expressed by the bestowal of still more costly jewels. But jewels cannot win a woman's love, and Melissa, who had been observing Melik and Fatima, knew that something was amiss.

One day, when thinking of the matter, she came upon her son, Omar, in a fit of despair. Ignorant of her presence, he gives voice to his passion and then she demands the truth. He tells her of his love for Fatima and of his hopeless struggle against it. Then she resolves to let Melik know all.

First she seeks Fatima and learns that she loves Omar, and Omar only. While engaged in conversation they are interrupted by Melik. He brings still more jewels for Fatima's approval, but wearily she lets them fall from her hands. Then, in despair, she confesses her love for Omar. Enraged, Melik draws a dagger to dispatch her, but his foster mother seizes his other hand and, pressing it affectionately, reveals to him that his foster brother, Omar, returns the love of Fatima, but has never confessed it to her. Melik with great magnanimity forgives Fatima and releases her from her vows. Overjoyed she falls at his feet and kisses the hem of his robe. Then she rushes away to find her lover.

"UNDER THE SWAY" (Eclipse).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

An Eclipse subject, "Under the Sway," is scheduled for release by George Kleine on May 15th. The length is 800 feet, and on the same reel is placed an instructive short film on the hop industry, in Kent, England.

"Under the Sway" is a good average film, viewed from the standpoints of settings, acting and photography. The story holds interest throughout, and the climax brings swift justice to the wrongdoer, and a happy clearing of the innocent.

Scene from "Under the Sway" (Eclipse).

Maud, the young and attractive companion of Mrs. Rostand, is loved by Jack, the only son of the latter. Count Donati, a frequent visitor at the Rostand home, exercises a hypnotic influence over the young lady. This is demonstrated several times during the course of the story. He is dishonest as well as unprincipled and, while she is under his spell he commands her to obtain valuable jewels belonging to Mrs. Rostand and deliver them to him, in the dead of night, through a window of the Rostand mansion.

Maud is caught in the act by Jack, who fires a shot at the indistinct figure outside the window. Then he turns his attention to Maud, who has all the appearance of one walking in her sleep. She passes through the door on the way to her chamber, and Jack is discovered by Mr. Rostand, who has rushed into the room at the sound of the shot. Mr. Rostand discovers that his wife's jewels have disappeared and looks upon his son as the culprit. Jack, to save Maud, keeps silent.

Outside, in the meantime, we see that Jack's bullet has found its mark in the body of Donati. The wounded man staggers and falls and crawls towards a boat that will convey him from the scene. His fast ebbing strength is consumed in rowing the boat to the farther shore. He finally drops his oars and falls unconscious in the boat, which drifts slowly towards a point, where fishermen rescue him.

Scene from "Under the Sway" (Eclipse).

With his remaining strength he confesses his crime, places the jewels in their charge, to be returned to Mrs. Rostand, and clears Maud of all complicity.

Just as Maud, in order to clear Jack, is confessing to Mr. and Mrs. Rostand that she stole the jewels, a fisherman arrives and restores them, and also tells of Count Donati's death and dying confession.

AN EVENTFUL WEEK FOR GEORGE KLEINE.

Scheduled for release during the week ending May 11th, George Kleine has programmed two split reels containing an unusually mirthful Cines comedy; a beautiful travelogue; an excellently well acted and staged Eclipse drama, concluding with a short but highly interesting zoological study, and for Saturday, May 11th, the extraordinarily splendid Cines historically correct, magnificently staged and acted drama of the Empire period, dealing with the story of the love, marriage and divorce of Josephine and Napoleon. This exceptionally fine program is bound to prove a popular card and meet with the approbation of the public and deserves the support of exhibitors.

The comedy, "A Contest and No Prize," the release of May 7th, shows in a highly entertaining manner how a vivacious and fun-loving girl coquettes with two rival suitors who are ready to do or die at her bidding to gain favor in her eyes. Many laugh-creating situations are presented through the ridiculously funny stunts the girl sets the ardent lovers to do. The reel is completed with beautiful views of the town of Fiume, Hungary, showing the Cathedral and many quaint buildings, streets and interesting waterways.

The Eclipse subject for Wednesday, May 8th, entitled "The Squire's Fate," is an intense drama relating how Marian, the beautiful daughter of the miller successfully thwarts the evil plan of the Squire to ruin her father and compel her love. To complete this reel, an exceedingly interesting nature study called "Tropical Creatures" is added, showing several species of curious, stick-like creatures which inhabit trees in the tropical regions.

The third release of the week, the Cines "Josephine" for Saturday, May 11th, is one of the many splendid films which this excellent company has in store for the public's approval in the near future. Those who remember this company's "Joseph in Egypt," "Brutus" and other excellent pictureplays released by them will give credence to the report that this coming release is one of the finest ever placed on the market in this country. In this beautifully staged, gorgeously costumed, splendidly acted drama of 1100 feet in length, the historical romance of Josephine and Napoleon is magnificently portrayed. In a very realistic manner is depicted their meeting, wooing, their ripening love, their marriage, happiness, and finally the pitiful circumstances which led to their divorce, and Napoleon's subsequent marriage to Louise of Austria. The final scene shows Napoleon on a balcony of the palace displaying to the joyous multitude gathered below the new heir, the little Napoleon, King of Rome.

The growing popularity of Cines and Eclipse films will be well deserved if the standard of excellence presented by this week's trio of releases is maintained.

A MILLION FOR PICTURE HOUSES.

Globe Amusement Company of Los Angeles will spend $1,000,000 in Beautiful New Suburban Motion Picture Theaters in that City.

If all reports are true it is doubtful if the Pacific Coast has ever known a more progressive showman than H. W. Nixon, General Manager of the Globe Amusement Company, Los Angeles, Cal., who proposes to build within the next few months a circuit of fifteen beautiful suburban houses, each with a seating capacity in the neighborhood of 1,000. This will bring within walking distance of the suburban residents a downtown picture and vaudeville theater of the highest class and at an admission fee just equal to the cost of a street car ride downtown and back.

L. F. Spaulding, the well known real estate owner and builder, is even now erecting a magnificent theater to be known as Globe Theater No. 4, for this company on his lot situated near Eighteenth Street on Main. This theater when completed will, it is said, be the largest and most perfectly equipped Motion Picture Theater west of Chicago, and will cost $75,000 with a capacity of 1,000. The Globe Amusement Company's circuit will be operated on a plan that is unique in this locality. No expense is being spared in the furnishings and equipment of these houses.

The Globe Theater at Fifth and Los Angeles Streets is in active operation, and the other theater buildings are under process of construction. The side walls of the Globe Theater No. 3 at Sunset Boulevard and Echo Park Avenue have already reached a height of sixteen feet and the house will undoubtedly be completed and ready for opening within sixty days. This house will have a capacity of over 800 and will cost something over $35,000. The Globe Theater No. 2 at Central Avenue near Jefferson, with a capacity of over 750, will cost about $30,000 and will be completed in time for the opening of the other houses.

Contracts for locations of other theaters to make up the circuit of fifteen are being rapidly completed, and there is little doubt that this company will not only have the best theaters and the best locations, but will be in a position to supply their patrons with the best of everything in the nature of exclusive first-run films and vaudeville acts.

Los Angeles people take kindly to a proposition of this description and it is conservatively estimated that ninety per cent of these people are patrons of motion picture theaters. It is a well-known fact among showmen that these people are only satisfied with the very best and when given that, are the most liberal patrons of any in the United States.

ABOUT IMPROVED CURTAINS.

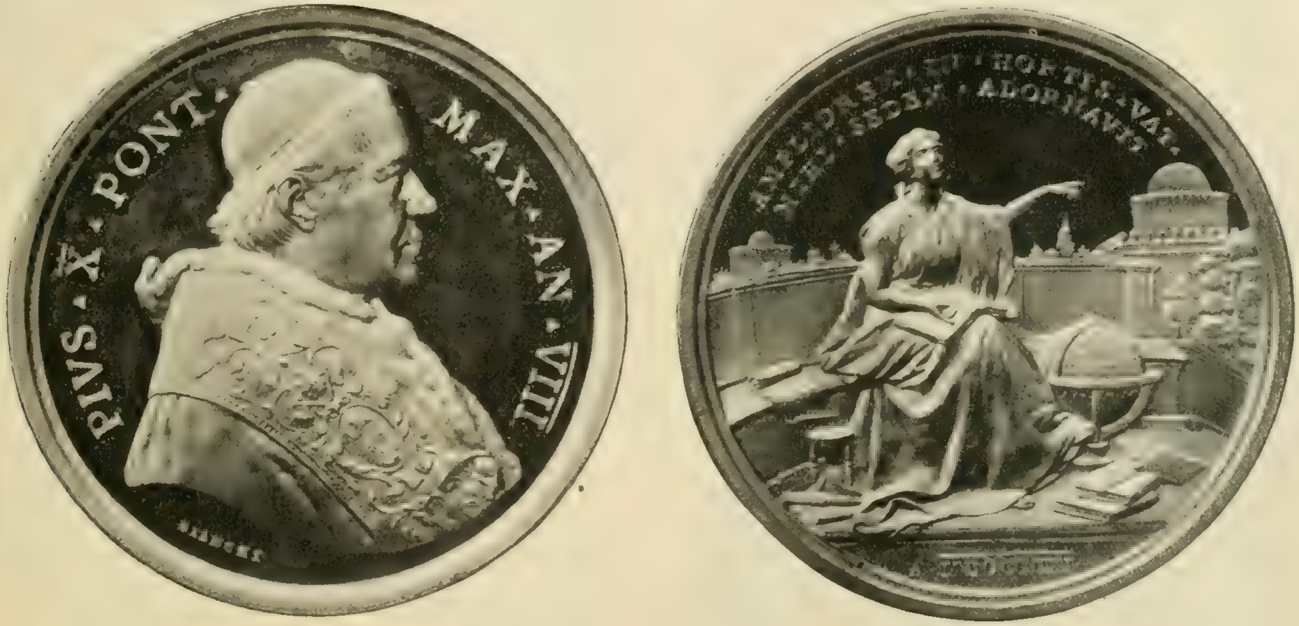
Among the many screens now on the market, the Radium Gold Fibre Screens made by the American Theater Curtain and Supply Co., of St. Louis, are giving great satisfaction. Several recent installations have produced additional orders from the same localities as well as highly satisfactory letters in praise of the results obtained. "Metalized theater curtains, twice the light at half the cost" is the way their advertising man puts it and his claims are backed up by superior workmanship and unsurpassed quality, compared with the old style muslin or canvas sheet, the results obtained from some of the new style curtains are really remarkable and well worth investigation by every exhibitor who is looking for improvement. Clearness of detail in the pictures and sharper relief of the figures is something to be desired at all times.

Pope Pleased With "The Coming of Columbus."

Father Tonello Describes Interview with Pontiff and Brings Presents for W. N. Selig.

"THE COMING OF COLUMBUS" has created intense interest throughout Europe. The rights for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and for Austria and Germany have been sold for some time. It was widely published in Europe that Pope Pius the Tenth had been presented with the three films last summer by Wm. N. Selig, through the Rev. Joseph Tonello, who has been engaged in missionary work in America for a number of years, and who was paying a visit to Rome when Mr. Selig requested him to deliver the films to the Holy Father. The reader will peruse with much interest Father Tonello's story of his interview with the Pope and his description of the presents brought back by him, in the capacity of special emissary of the Pontiff, for presentation to Mr. Selig.

"It is rather hard at certain times," Father Tonello writes, in describing his interview with the Pope, "to obtain a private audience, but, through a dear friend of mine, I received a letter of invitation to be at the Vatican at 12 o'clock sharp on a certain day. The day before I had invited several prelates, ladies and gentlemen—among these the sisters of the Pope, to see the films on the screen. The Sala Perosi, or Sala Pia, was well packed, and the history of the great discoverer, with all his hardships, joys and sorrows, was viewed by the illustrious spectators with the greatest interest and enthusiasm. The private secretary of the Pope, Mgr. Piscinni, and the Mgr. Ugolini, who were sitting at my side, were particularly impressed, and in occasional bursts of enthusiasm whispered, 'Oh, how lovely!' 'How grand!' At the end of the exhibition the audience gave a viva for Mr. Selig.



Obverse and Reverse of Medal Presented to Mr. W. N. Selig by Pope Pius X.

"The next day at noon sharp I passed through the main hall, where the Pope gives public audiences, and was at the door of the Pope's private apartments. Brother Damaso, the director of the Sala Pia, had preceded me and had told the Pope of the success of the exhibition. When I entered the room I found his Holiness standing by a kind of cabinet, picking from it some small red caskets containing medals. 'Come in, my son,' he said. 'I was just looking for some nice suitable gift for your Mr. Selig.' Then he showed me a little silver medal bearing his own likeness. 'This is not pretty enough,' he said. 'Never mind, your Holiness, this is all right for me,' I answered. He gave it to me with three other smaller ones which I dared to ask for, seeing how good he was to me. Then he said, 'I have something better for Mr. Selig.' He crossed the room, went to another cabinet and got another beautiful medal in a red plush casket. 'Now, this is for Mr. Selig,' he said.

"The medal was struck last year as a souvenir of the opening of the new observatory erected by the Pope in the Vatican gardens. It bears on one side the image of the Pope and on the other that of a matron representing astronomy sitting on a chair and pointing out the new building, while the old observatory is seen in the background. The inscription running around the medal reads: 'Ampliorem mihi in hortus, vaticanis sedem adornavit,' which is, 'He beautified for me a larger seat in the Vatican gardens.'

"All this was done before I presented the reels. Then the Pope bade me sit down by his desk. When I had given him the reels, the Holy Father examined the small pictures. He had been informed by Brother Damaso and others how beautiful they were on the screen. Then he turned to Brother Damaso, who was there, and, giving the reels to him for the Sala Pia, said, 'You will have a big show now,' and smiled happily.

"We talked awhile about the splendid exhibition of "The Coming of Columbus." Then the Pope said: 'You will please extend my thanks and congratulations to Mr. Selig, and my wishes for the greatest success of this 'Coming of Columbus.' I wish to encourage him to make other films of such historic and moral value.'

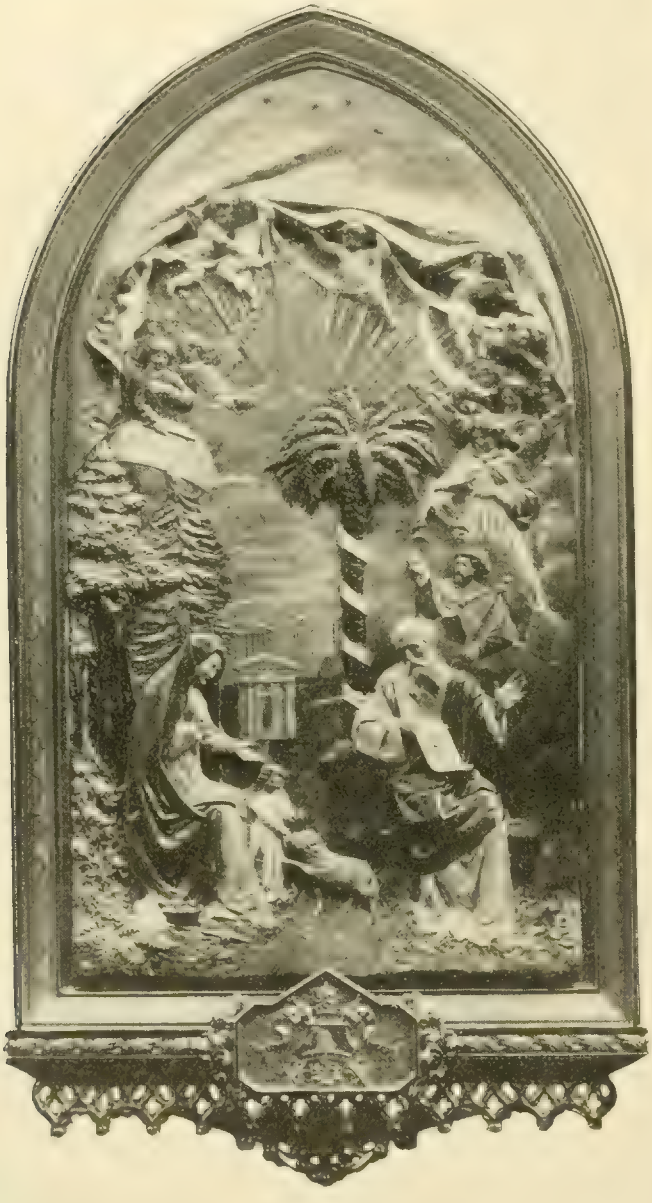
"As I knew that the Holy Father had forbidden all priests to go to moving picture shows, owing to many irreligious and immoral films exhibited in Rome, I told him that the censorship in America was much more strict, especially in regard to immoral and irreligious subjects. He was very glad to hear this and said: 'It is my great desire that this great invention should become a school of truth, of high education, of morality, of social and domestic virtues and of real benefit to humanity and religion.

"After a few words about other matters I knelt down to ask his blessing for me, my family and my many friends. He waited patiently until I was through my list, blessed all of them, and said, 'Tell Mr. Selig that I bless him, his family and his work.' I left with the impression that I had been conversing with a saint.

"In the evening Brother Damaso surprised me with another gift he had from the Pope to be presented to Mr. Selig. It was a beautiful bas relief, or ceramic, the work of one of the best artists in Italy. It had been especially made for the Vatican exhibition, on the occasion of the golden jubilee of Pope Leo XIII. It is a copy of a large painting existing in St. Joachim, a church erected in honor of Pope Leo XIII, whose name was Joachim.

"The painting, as well as the reproduction, represents St. Joachim reading the prophecy, 'A virgin shall conceive.' The saint looks upon Anna, his wife, who points out the little Mary feeding the lamb with lilies, and crushing under her feet the serpent. The rose which the angel presents to St. Joseph, who does not touch it, is the figure of Mary, spouse of Joseph. Sacred to Mary are also the palm, the cedar and the platanus trees, as recorded in the Scriptures. Angels lift the veil of night, revealing Mary as the aurora, which presents the rising of the sun of justice. Again, Mary, queen of heaven and earth, is represented by angels, holding the crown and placing the scepter on the globe. Around the palm tree and in the upper part of the painting runs a white ribbon with the different titles the church gives to Mary. The vision closes with the words of St. Anne, 'The Lord has granted my prayer.'

"The day following I left Rome. When in Paris I received from Brother Damaso the following letter for Mr. Selig: 'Honorable Sir—In the name of the members of the Association of the Sacred Heart, I thank you for the splendid gift, 'The Coming of Columbus,' presented by the Rev. Joseph Tonello to the Holy Father for La Sala Pia. Let the good Father be the interpreter of our gratitude and let the gift which he brings to you show how your generosity has been appreciated.'



Ceramic Presented to Mr. W. N. Selig by Pope Pius X.

"Many Roman papers spoke about the exhibition of the reels in La Sala Pia and afterwards other Italian papers commented upon the exhibition. We quote a few words from one political and one religious paper. 'La Vera Roma Illustrata' had the following: 'His Holiness deigned a few days ago to admit to his august presence the Very Rev. J. Guiseppe Tonello, a zealous missionary in North America. Father Tonello was the bearer to His Holiness of three magnificent and original films, which Mr. W. N. Selig, of Chicago, sent as a gift to the Pope. The Holy Father was extremely pleased with the gift and expressed his high appreciation by donating to both Father Tonello and Mr. Selig handsome souvenirs.'

"'Il Corriere d'Italia' published the following article: 'The other night, before a goodly number of guests, prelates, ladies and gentlemen, especially invited, were shown on the screen the reels of 'The Coming of Columbus,' sent as a gift to the Holy Father, Pope Pius the Tenth, by Mr. W. N. Selig, of Chicago.

"'It was the grandest thing ever seen; the only drawback to the exhibition being the Roman machine, which was not up-to-date to show such a film. It was the whole history of Columbus, from his arrival in Palos to his return to Spain loaded with chains, that was presented to the eyes of the spectators, who were deeply impressed. All the scenes were beautiful, but the most impressive and picturesque were the scenes of the caravels (the Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria), the voyage of Columbus, the expression of his fears, his hopes and his anxieties over his arrival finally in the promised land. Many eyes were moist in seeing the undertaking of Columbus shown so vividly, with such truth and life that it seemed almost as if one were participating in the vicissitudes, the perils, the glory and infamy of the great Genoese.'"

MESSRS. HITE AND THANHOUSER TOGETHER.

The other day moving picture circles were startled by the news that there was a man with a big enough bankroll to buy the Thanhouser Company—and that he had bought it. Thanhouser films had been rated among the leading Independent brands and Edwin Thanhouser was thought the last man in the world to want to "sell." So it all simmered down to a matter of figure. Thanhouser got his. The man who gave it was C. J. Hite, of the H. & H. Film Exchange, Chicago. And while the sum that exchanged hands was "big" in the fullest sense of the term, people who knew Hite well said it was all in his day's work—he wouldn't lose the smallest jot of sleep thinking about it!

Carpenters were busy constructing a new private office at the Thanhouser plant when a World man dropped in early in the week and it was revealed that the sanctum was for Mr. Hite, who was then in Chicago. He is due in New Rochelle late in the week, when will commence his association with Mr. Thanhouser in the conduct of the Thanhouser manufactory. Mr. Hite will engage mostly in the business end of the enterprise, giving Mr. Thanhouser more time to devote to the producing department, thus enabling him to realize an old ambition. Mr. Thanhouser has always been in very active touch with his producing force, but business details have taken up a lot of time that he would like to have spent in the "making" department. Under the present arrangement he will be able to give pretty nearly his undivided attention to the actual work of making the films, and an advanced product is necessarily looked for—if better Thanhouser pictures are really possible.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

Making the Most of Things.

MELVIN G. WINSTOCK writes: "Have persuaded Pathe Freres to send Earl, one of their camera men, here. Have the whole state digging good stuff for him and incidentally am slipping a lot of ads for the company." Company means the People's Amusement Company, and being a practised press agent, Mr. Winstock realizes that the best advertisement is that which does not appear to come from the house itself.

The other day the Portland Journal had very nearly a page from one of the Omaha papers on Governor West's parole system. There was not a line in the sheet about the play Mr. Winstock wrote with the practical collaboration of the Governor, and which the Edison company will release on Friday, May 17. Most persons would not regard this as advertising for the chain of theaters run by the People's Amusement Company, but everyone has read of the Winstock play in earlier articles and the mind at once connects the two and the page article helps more than it would have done had some mention of the photoplay been dragged in. This is something not easy for the novice in management to understand, but the advertisement that does not seem to be an advertisement is the best sort of advertising in the long run. Thousands of people will read the story, both in Nebraska and Oregon, and when the photoplay comes along the article will be recalled and make business for the production.

Make the most of your opportunity and you'll find that the number of times your house is mentioned does not determine the value of a press notice. It's the "draw" the story has.

Doing Things Well.

We have urged the value of appealing to the clergy, school teachers and superintendents when you have something out of the ordinary and we are indebted to R. D. Carrothers, of the Orpheum Theater, Pocatello, Idaho, for a very practical demonstration of the value of this form of advertising. Mr. Carrothers obtained the Edison "Children Who Labor," and sent out this letter to all who might be interested in the subject:

> We want you to see the class of pictures we are showing to the people of Pocatello, hence we take this opportunity of inviting you to witness the Edison Educational and Dramatic subject entitled "Children Who Labor," which we will run to-day and to-morrow.
> This picture is produced in co-operation with the National Association for the prevention of Child Labor and we think a production like it deserves the support of every sane man and woman in the country.
> We are enclosing two complimentary tickets, which we hope you will find time to use at either the Daily Matinee or Night Performance.

In sending the letter Mr. Carrothers wrote that he thought it would be good advertising. A letter dated the following day carried a letter from the Reverend Frederic A. Hamilton, of the Congregational Parish Church, that bore emphatic testimony to this fact. Mr. Hamilton wrote:

> I never accept gratuities of such a nature as you were kind enough to send me, and I return, herewith, the tickets.
> I did, however, attend your film show this afternoon and saw your title, "Children Who Labor"—saw it with pleasure and profit. I desire to congratulate you on this special number as, indeed, on the entire program. Such things as the title cited are calculated to draw the attention of thoughtful people to a really great problem in a striking and convincing way.
> I have always felt that, given a man with conscience to direct, the modern picture show can be a factor of genuine educational value.
> And so I thank you for calling my attention to the opportunity, and for an hour well spent.

In obtaining such an endorsement Mr. Carrothers has done a service to the business as a whole.

Letters and Letterheads.

We are inclined to think that one of the reasons the letter was heeded is that it was sent out in good form. The letter was short, pointed and well phrased, but more than that it looked "right." A heavy indentation on either side threw the text into the middle of the sheet, and the sheet itself was good to look at. It is a French gray set in heavy gothic, printed in black. The name of the house and the line "The little house with the big show," is boxed in with an outline ornament at either end of the legend, but the rule is light so that it does not overshadow the type, and the ornaments are tasteful. In the extreme upper corners are the words "Picture plays" on the left, and "Specialties" on the right, while the name of the manager appears in a small eight point below the box.

We think the name of town and state should have been printed in and a black would have been better than a purple ribbon, but these are minor matters when compared to the red and blue and green abominations that so many seem to think is the proper style. Colored stock of a neutral tone costs little more than white paper and good press work with a good black ink costs very little more than a cheap job. A dollar or at the most two would cover the cost of a thousand sheets and envelopes and even before the envelope is opened the impression of good taste and business dignity is created.

A good letterhead as a business investment is something that not ten men in a thousand realize and yet all are susceptible to the impression created when they see the proper sort.

What Wesley Says.

Wesley, of Gardner, Mass., says:

> I am enclosing a little matinee getter that I use most of the time. Every ticket that is sold in the evening the purchaser gets one of these tickets to use at a matinee, and it's surprising how many I get back from the mothers, sisters and sweethearts attending in the afternoon, of course the ones I get back I use over again.

The ticket is printed on cheap-colored card stock, two by three and a half inches and the face carries this printing:

Picture Program Changed Every Monday, Wednesday, Friday
THIS TICKET AND 5 CENTS
Paid at our Box Office will entitle the Bearer to One Admission Ticket to the Matinees ——AT THE——
GARDNER THEATER
High Class Vaudeville and Pictures.
"WESLEY SAYS SO."

It seems to be a good way of getting your matinee tickets out. They appear to be given as a perquisite instead of a throwaway and so are valued more highly than something that is obtained for nothing. There is a fine art in making gifts so that they are appreciated at more than their face value, and few have the knack of making things seem worth while. If you merely throw out a handful of tickets they have much the value of waste paper, but if you give them out carefully with the suggestion that they are of value it is like giving away the same number of five-cent pieces and more—because then it becomes a semi pass.

The Weekly Hint.

And here's the starter for the program circular, listing five reels of photoplay and a couple of singers, as well as two vaudeville acts. Wesley says:

> IT'S SMASHED!
> The old saying: "There is nothing new under the Sun," is smashed to "smithereens." I have something new to-day; a show that is an eye opener. You won't have to put on your spectacles to get this. Here is the Show to send you home in a happy mood.

And so it must be so, because he says so.

Cameraphone Gets Ideas.

In a recent issue we spoke of the Pittsburgh Cameraphone offer of passes in exchange for ideas. In the latest issue of the program to hand, the first results of the offer are given. We do not think that many of these ideas are of any particular value as such, but in their effort to obtain the coveted admissions we imagine that in addition to the matters cited in the announcement, the Cameraphone management obtained many valuable first-hand opinions of how the house was run. We give results for the benefit of others:

> In a recent issue of the Bulletin for the East Liberty Cameraphone, we offered a six months' pass for ideas that we could use to the betterment of our theater. In reply we received a number of suggestions, some of them we think of value and for which we are glad to pay in passes—others we did not think we could use.
> Both Mr. A. S. Kaerscher and Mr. J. R. Willison suggest that we announce by electric sign what piece of music is being played and we will adopt the idea.
> Mr. F. W. Swartz suggests that we devote one evening each week to comedy pictures only. This is a good idea, but it depends largely on our source of supply. Comedies are popular with all exhibitors and the General Film Company may not be able to supply us with a program each week.
> Mr. Clarence Garin suggests that ladies sitting in any part of the theater should be compelled to remove their hats. This may be a good idea, but we are not brave enough to try and enforce it.
> Another gentleman suggests that we have a few canary birds in the theater. This might be all right when the house was open, but when closed the cat might get busy.
> Mr. C. A. Comfort suggests that we have signs asking patrons to take seats nearest the wall. We think this idea worthy of a pass, and the expenditure of a few dollars in signs and are intending to try it.
> It is not too late to exchange ideas for passes and we would like to carry out our part of the deal.

A Stylish Card.

The Montana Amusement Company opened the American Theater, Butte, April 6th, and to call attention to that fact sent out an admission card and a form letter. We do not like the appearance of the letter, since carbons seem to have been sent instead of originals. The phrasing of the invitation is much better than the appearance of the sheet, though the letterheads themselves, in green on green, are attractive; a point which only calls attention to the horrible purple carbon. Were we running the house there would be a hurry call for green typewriter ribbons to match the type matter and we would have had the form letters printed through silk in the same color. The letters read:

> Dear Sir:—
> This is to invite your attention to the opening date of our new American Theater in this city. We trust that you and your family may find time to pay us a visit on that day as our guests, and can assure you that we will appreciate the honor of your presence.
> Yours cordially,
> THE MONTANA AMUSEMENT CO.
> By Wm. Cutts, General Manager.
> Kindly present the enclosed card.

The "enclosed card" is on fine stock and except for a cut crest it is so well printed that it requires close scrutiny to distinguish it from copper plate. This is partly due to good press work, but as much, if not more, to the selection of the type, which is the A. T. F. "Engraver's Shaded," a very useful face where plate effect is sought. The cost of several sizes is no greater than the cost of cutting the plate and you have the type for future use. If your printer will not stock a letter you want to use, buy the fonts yourself.

Some Rex Remarks.

B. W. Copeland, manager of the Rex Theater Company, of Spokane, Washington, sends a self-explanatory letter. He writes:

> I submit you herewith a plan of advertising which I adopted to call attention to the Rex Theater, which we are now building.
> We have a frontage of thirty feet on Riverside Avenue, the principal business street of the city. When work was started on the new house a fence ten feet high was erected, covering this thirty-foot space. The Theater is to be called The Rex, and, across the entire upper part of this fence, I had a sign painter write me in script letters "Copeland's Daily Rexograms"—Bulletins of Pertinent Publicity."
> In spaces three feet high and ten feet long I posted the "bulletins," changing them every day, each one calling attention to some particular feature of the new house or to the moving picture business. I submit you a few specimens:
> "A Few Newly Coined Words from the Rex Dictionary"—
> REXITIS—An epidemic of talk concerning the New Rex Theater, which is now rapidly sweeping over Spokane."
> REXOLOGY—The art and science of preparing good entertainment for Rex patrons—we are experts.

> Whether this style of advertising will be productive of results I am unable at this time to state, for the house will not be ready to open until about May 1st. I believe, however, that it will have some effect, for already there is considerable talk about the new house.
> I would be pleased to have your opinion on this matter.

Crisp Lines Always Effective.

Crisp advertising lines are effective at all times and one never knows just what line will carry the greatest effect. The scheme here suggested is a good one from every angle. It starts talk and keeps it going, and by the time the house is opened everyone will want to attend out of curiosity, if nothing more.

Any live wire talk will sink in. Some of these lines are too general in their application. The more definite talk, such as that on ventilation, is what counts for most, because there is argument as well as cleverness of phrase. If there are points about your house deserving of brag, by all means brag, modestly and temperately, but with a warmth that shows your pride in your accomplishment.

The El Kalem Pictures.

Licensed exhibitors will be interested in matter that they should have received from the Kalem company by now, relative to the first release by that company of the Egyptian pictures made by the African section of the stock company. It has been announced that "The Fighting Dervishes" will precede "Dust of the Desert," originally scheduled for the first release, the subject being published May 27th.

The advertising sent out by the company includes an offer of four 2¼ by 1¾ half tone cuts of a screen that will show well on common stock. They can be supplied to newspapers with a moderately fast run and will look well in advertisements on cheap stock.

There are also four photographs to be had, showing scenes different from those used for cuts, giving eight views all told. If you need more cuts your local engraver can supply you with cuts from these and give you a supply of eight cuts.

There is also a piano score of music to fit the film with proper oriental color.

This is a good equipment of printing material and there are one, three and six-sheet posters in four colors for lobby and general work, but the company cannot do your special work for you, and what you get back from the film is what you work for yourself.

Do Some Press Work.

During the last few months there have been printed in the Kalem Kalendar a lot of paragraphs about the oriental company. Get these notes out and see if you can't get the local papers interested. Tell how the Kalem company sent a company to Egypt and the Holy Land, armed with credentials to consuls and missions from the State Department and the various boards of foreign missions. Tell of the fanaticism of the Moslems and the precautions they took to avoid rousing the religious prejudice of the natives. Tell of the two Irish trips, enlarge upon the enterprise shown in sending a company half-way around the world in order to get new subjects with correct atmosphere. Pave the way for the religious subjects, taken in the Holy Land, that will come later. Get the editor interested and he'll take the clippings and make a story himself out of them. Keep him posted on the coming of the films. Make certain that he and all his family are in the house when it is run, for there will be other subjects coming and this is merely the starter. You'll want to work up the others and he'll help you a lot if you get him headed right.

This list of scenes will help you figure out the story and give an idea of the variety of the backgrounds. Read it over and "get it down pat," so that you can talk it to the newspaper people and the patrons. Have it painted on a bulletin and hang it in the lobby to start the talk. It runs:

THE FIGHTING DERVISHES OF THE DESERT.

Produced in Egypt Near the Ancient City of Thebes by Sidney Olcott. Scenario by Jack Clark.

Cast of Characters.

Zahrah, daughter of the Coptic High Priest	Gene Gauntier
Hassan Ali, the Arab Sheik	Jack J. Clark
Isma'il, Sheik of the Dervishes	Robert G. Vignola
Father Moosa, Coptic High Priest	J. P. McGowan
Arab runner	H. A. Farnham
Arab envoy	Abdulla Ya Fari

Copts, Arabs, Dervishes, Etc.

The Arab Sheik Hassan, of Moslem faith, meets the Coptic Christian maid, Zahrah, daughter of the High Priest.

In his encampment on the Great Desert, Hassan dreams of Zahrah.

"You must obtain my father's permission."

Hassan sends his envoy to Zahrah's father, the Coptic High Priest.

(Showing a religious Scimitar combat of the Whirling Dervishes.)

Hassan's suit rejected. "Christian and Moslem cannot mate."

The return of the envoy.

Hassan swears vengeance. The fanatical Dervishes on the way to massacre the Copts give Hassan his opportunity to be avenged.

Hassan repents and determines to warn Zahrah.

The Dervish, Isma'il, prevents the runner from delivering the warning.

The unsuspecting Copts worship in their church.

The women flee from their section of the church.

The fighting Dervishes start to raid the Coptic village.

Hassan takes the oath of Christianity. (Showing the Temple of Luxor, built two hundred years before the birth of Moses and used by idolaters and fire worshippers.)

And together they departed to a land of peace and happiness.

Hints in This Paper.

Handling the Special Release, in recent back numbers will give you some hints and the special reviews of these films from time to time will give you full advance information.

For street work the Arabic costumes will offer small difficulty. White bathrobes of turkish toweling with a small stripe or even gaudy colors and a sash, will serve for the burnous if you sew it down the front, leaving it open at the throat for six inches. Get the kind with hoods and the headgear will be correct, or take a couple of yards of cheesecloth and double it, then bind it around the head with a bright ribbon or cord and let the ends be disposed so that they can be caught under the chin. The cuts sent by the company will give you the idea. For make up get grease paint from the drug store or ask the druggist to get the sticks for you.

It's worth spending five or six dollars apiece for costumes, for you will have a number of reels and if you put your faked Arabs on the street every time you get one of these reels it will not be long before the sight of the Arabs will be public notice that you have another El Kalem.

If you have the title of the film and a catch line on white oilcloth tacked to the backs of the perambulating advertisements you'll have every man and woman looking back to get a second look and you'll have the children helping with the excitement.

You probably had The Colleen Bawn and Arrah-na-Pogue. You can do even better with these and in advertising these reels you are advertising the entire motion picture business, since the value of this enterprise is not confined to the Kalem company alone. It puts all pictures on a higher plane.

And when you've done it, let's hear what you have done.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Well! Well! Well!

WE print below two letters, the first of these coming from E. Haydon Bozel, which comes on a sheet of plain typewriter paper, though Mr Bozel states that he is a publisher. In reference to an item a couple of weeks ago, he writes:

> I note in your issue of April 13th, an article from the Manuscript Department of the Kalem Company and would ask that you publish this letter in your next issue.
> Before commenting upon people and classing them as fools, I think it would be quite wise if not more businesslike to find out full particulars thereof.
> On February 13th a manuscript entitled "Cherubim Chimes," was sent to the Kalem Company on ten days' approval with notice printed on the mss. that it was submitted upon ten days' approval and if unavailable to be returned within ten days from receipt thereof.
> I am a publisher and expert moving picture man, having been in the business for the past ten years and am quite aware of the methods of handling scripts, etc., as well as writing them, and if it came to a show-down could produce as good a script and know the business as well as any of the Kalem so-called editors. The manuscript mentioned for your information was not written by me, but taken from manuscript published and owned by me, the original published story having been read by at least a half-million people in the United States.
> Being a publisher, I did not deem it necessary to enclose postage as amateur writers do, as I thought the Kalem Co. were businesslike enough to return this script should same prove unavailable for their needs; besides, had they notified me as they mention, I would have gladly sent them postage.
> This script had notice thereon as stated to return within ten days if unavailable and to be held over this time would constitute their acceptance of the script, and if they did not return the script or send me money for same it is my privilege to try to collect it through whom I please.
> You will understand that I own this script and can't afford to pay stenographers to typewrite work for the mere pleasure of the Kalem Co. or to suit their convenience either.

A copy of this letter was sent the Kalem Company and their reply follows:

> Your favor of the 20th inst. is at hand, enclosing copy of a communication received from Mr. E. Haydon Bozel, realtive to the manuscript which he submitted to the Kalem Company.
> As stated in our letter which was published in a recent issue of The Moving Picture World, Mr. Bozel's manuscript came to this office February 13th, carrying a two-cent postage due stamp and no postage was enclosed for return of manuscript, which was found unavailable. On the same date, therefore, a notice was sent to Mr. Bozel, requesting that he forward the necessary stamps. On the rare occasions when similar notices have not reached the addressee, they have invariably been returned "for better address." We have, therefore, felt assured that our request was duly delivered to him.
> The manuscript contains the following statement:
> "WARNING: The above script is the property of E. Haydon Bozel, Fredericksburg, Virginia, and is taken from a published story of the same name, etc., the published story being the property of said E. Haydon Bozel.
> "The owner of this script offers a reward of $50 cash for the arrest and conviction of anyone using this said script unless same is purchased.
> "This script is sent on ten days' approval and must be returned within ten days unless purchased; a report on this script must be furnished within ten days from receipt thereof."
> In view of the hundreds of unavailable manuscripts we receive —a large percentage of which have no return postage enclosed – you will readily see that it would be impossible to make an exception even had Mr. Bozel been known to us, and until receipt of his manuscript we had never heard of him. Scenario writers who supply us with subjects at regular intervals and with whom pleasant relations have existed for a long time, never fail to enclose postage and the regular acceptance of their work has never prompted them to overlook this matter of business etiquette.
> There can be no possible argument regarding Mr. Bozel's case and we have brought the matter to the attention of The World that it may be read by the scenario writers who follow your department. This party's statement that failure to return manuscript in ten days will indicate acceptance, means nothing whatever to us. The manuscript will be promptly returned when he forwards the necessary postage. It is not a matter of four or six cents, but we do not propose to establish a precedent in Mr. Bozel's case, particularly as his contribution was entirely unsolicited.
> Our relations with scenario writers are uniformly pleasant. The editor gives his personal attention to each script received and efficient assistants look after the recording and return of unavailable subjects. Authors who are becoming familiar with the Kalem policy have learned that the return of their scenarios is no reflection upon the merit of the manuscript. Several of the Kalem producing companies work along lines which have been definitely planned for them and this is particularly true of the organization in the Holy Land as well as the one in Florida, which handles the spectacular military plays. We are not in the market for scenarios adapted for these companies and when writers send us such manuscripts, which are oftentimes quite worthy, we are obliged to return them. Kalem is always pleased to consider the strong drama of modern conditions and the novel comedy. Each week brings us a new friend and when an unpleasant affair occurs it is usually due to a person whose calibre is apparent without any comment being necessary.

We fail to see that Mr. Bozel's statement alters any of the facts of the case. He admits sending the script to the Kalem Company without stamps and while he states that he received no short-postage notification from that company he admits trying to collect through an agency without having first queried the company.

It Mr. Bozel is a publisher and most publishers have letter-heads he should know that a submitted script should be accompanied by return postage and should be sent fully paid whether sent by a publisher or an "amateur," to employ Mr. Bozel's designation. Personally, we think that Mr. Bozel, himself, is less well informed than the average beginner since he imagines that the statement that to hold the script ten days constituted an acceptance. Following this unique idea to its logical conclusion there would be nothing to prevent an author from demanding acceptance by return mail and commencing suit the following day.

Mr. Bozel, having something to sell, must wait the action of the prospective purchaser. He must keep that purchaser free of costs and he must abide by the rules of action laid down by that purchaser.

If Mr. Bozel were a farmer he would not send his produce, unsolicited, to some commission firm, leaving the freight charges half paid, and demand that the goods be received from the railroad and either sold within a specified time or returned at the cost of the consignee. Why should he expect the fact that he is a publisher exempt him from a rule imposed by all publishers? If he is a publisher he should know the rules and abide by them. He should know that the Kalem Company would be justified in throwing the script into the waste basket without ado.

In view of the gratuitous insult conveyed in the reward offer we are sorry that is not what the Kalem Company did. They do not advertise for scripts; they do not need to advertise, since they get most of their scripts from men like Emmett Campbell Hall, Captain Charles Kiener and others at the head of photoplaywriting. They treat with courtesy the unsolicited submissions and have helped hundreds of beginners along the right road, but there is a limit to courtesy and when an underpaid script is sent with an arrogant demand that it be acted on at once and with the suggestion that it will be stolen by the company, Mr. Bozel forfeits all right to courteous treatment.

It is unfortunate for the real photoplaywright that such ignorant persons should find it possible to disturb the market for those who play the game fairly, yet it is Mr. Bozel, and others no better informed, who are driving the companies to have dealings only with writers of standing and a knowledge of the game.

Not Necessary.

We notice in a photoplay publication the advertisement of an individual who offers to obtain copyright for photoplays for a fee of five dollars. It is not necessary to pay a man four dollars to get you a copyright when all that may be done can be done by yourself without fee. In procuring a patent the services of a reliable attorney are almost essential, but in copy right there are no specifications to be drawn, no interferences or other technical difficulties.

Write your story in the accepted form, making sure that the action and inserts completely tell the story. Send to the Register of Copyrights, Washington, D. C., stating that you have some photoplays you desire to register and ask that application blanks be sent. Fill in one of these blanks and send script, blank and a money order for one dollar to the Register. It is not even necessary to stamp the letter. Take it to the postmaster in a small town or to the Inquiry window of a branch office in a large town. If your name and address are written on the envelope the script will be franked. If registration cannot be had the script and money will be returned, but if the story is in proper form, there will be no difficulty, unless the new Townsend bill becomes a law.

In any event, under the present conduct of the Copyright Office by Mr. Thorvald Solberg, the Register, you are assured every assistance on the part of the office, and no self-styled expert can give you as good.

The model photoplay given in these columns last summer and reprinted in Technique of the Photoplay, is precisely the form in which photoplays are accepted for registration.

Kick and Kick Hard.

Unless you are one of those whose interest in photoplay matters stops with the selling of the script, here's a way you can help toward a better condition. The thousand foot photoplay should run about eighteen minutes. When you see a full reel skidded through in from eleven to fifteen minutes, kick to the proprietor on the way out. Do not kick as a photoplaywright but as a patron. If you'll do this and get all your friends to do it, too, you'll help to insure better projection. It will be for some other fellow's story, but perhaps some other fellow is doing as much for you. Time each reel and base your kick on figures instead of guesswork and you'll be able to make your complaint important. Don't merely say the stuff is run too fast. Complain that it was run full four minutes and a half too fast and it will be shown that you know what you are talking about.

"Pulling New Stuff."

At any rate it is a welcome change from the invariable cry of thief to get this variant from a sheet published in Massachusetts for the photoplaywrights. After declaring that he never found a condition of affairs more irritating than the film business, the writer adds: "The trade journals contain numerous advertisements of individuals and companies variously located that pretend to have the inner road to the promised land whose services are obtainable on some percentage."

We do not recall having seen these numerous advertisements mentioned but there are several play disposal bureaus which offer to sell scripts on commission, though none that we have seen hint at any pull with the editors. The one editor who announced a bureau for the sale of scripts is no longer on the job. It is the only instance of suggested graft that has come to our own observation and this was not in the form of an advertisement. We do not think much of the play-selling adjuncts to the scenario schools, but at any rate they do not suggest an intimacy with the editors except one "Association," that advertises with the sheet in question, and this is only in the form of an inspired editorial.

What vaudeville players allude to as "new stuff," is a change, but it is not a statement based on facts and therefore should not be made.

Using Author's Names.

Miss Marian Lee Patterson, who is herself a photoplaywright, writes from Washington, D. C., regarding the use of the author's name on the poster. She writes:

> The paragraphs in the issue of April 20, about giving more prominence to name of photoplaywrights remind me that the Edison practise of advertising the name on the poster for the front of the theater, has found sanction in recent experience of mine, when on two different occasions I heard: "Oh, that's an Edison—and by Bannister Merwin—let's go in!" Evidently the writer's name was an added inducement.

The photoplay business is of rapid—almost over-rapid—growth and manufacturers have been slow to realize that Shakespeare did not go far enough with his "The Play's the Thing." The photoplay is the attraction, but the fact that it is by a well known author will help identify the product as the real thing. Men like Mr. Merwin and Campbell McCulloch are well known to general magazine readers; Emmett Campbell Hall is known to thousands of the readers of the Motion Picture Story Magazine as an interesting author. Such names mean money on the films and posters and there are scores of others whose names would mean as much in a short time if the practise should become general.

It's very true that these might be put in a position to demand better pay than the usual $25 to $35; indeed, they are getting it now, but this increase is absurd in proportion to the advantage gained in advertising and credit. Here's evidence of that fact.

Oh, Shush!

There is one of them born every minute, so we do not wonder at the number of fake scenario schools in the market, but sometimes it wearies us to read some of the glowing promises with which these schools bait their hooks for gudgeons. Read this from the circular of a St. Louis school that offers a four week "complete" course for $10 cash or three dollars apiece for four lessons. Listen to this:

> You can tell a story—who cannot?—and you can write moving picture plays if properly instructed. There is no more profitable or fascinating employment for spare hours or evenings at home. Good moving picture ideas bring high prices and prompt payment. Prices for average moving picture play scenarios are from $25 to $100. For some scenarios $1,000 has been paid. Even novices in their first attempts after proper instruction receive not less than $10 for accepted stories or scenarios. Doubtless at some picture show recently you have seen a poor picture play and said to yourself, "Why, I could write better stories than some I see." And that is perfectly true. You could, with proper technical instruction, "write better stories." The pictures that cause such comments as the above are the product of untrained writers whose work the producers have been forced to take because of the enormous demand. The producers realize the absolute necessity for more and better picture plays and acknowledge it by their earnest solicitation for new writers.

The average price paid for a photoplay is between $20 and $35. Some of the stars get as high as $100 for special stories, but never since photoplays were made have we heard of $1,000 being paid for a script as a script or in connection with the advertising value of the author's name.

If the men who run these schools really knew about writing scenarios at first hand we would not offer objection, but so far as we have been able to learn there is not one with practical knowledge of photoplay.

Let Go.

Do you hold on to your ideas through thick and through thin or do you know when to let go?

Many writers are unable to improve their work through revision simply because they lack perspective. They cannot get back and take a disinterested look at their work. They stick to the same incidents without being able to realize that perhaps some other form might be better. As a result their work is disjointed and unconvincing. The story may have been suggested by some single scene or incident, in itself striking and original, but in the development it may be that the scene, itself the germ of the idea, might be replaced by another situation more in harmony with the development of the rest of the story. In such a case the wise author will remove the scene, holding it for use in some other play, and substitute a scene more in keeping with the story as it stands, but a certain class of "stickers" hold to the main scene and instead of writing in a scene to fit, they endeavor to fit the other scenes to this one.

We have seen three and four versions of the same script in which the leading scenes are retained in essential form, though in the later versions these scenes have no place in the story. No matter how good the scene may be by itself, if it doesn't fit cut it out. Don't throw it away, but keep it to use some other time.

Few writers can sit at their machines and write the story just as they planned it. As the story progresses changes and improvements will suggest themselves and the true art of writing lies in being able to get the best there is in a plot on paper. It may not be the story originally planned, but if it developed freely and consistently it's mighty apt to be a good story. If you insist upon keeping to one set idea your work never will gain fluency. If you start to write a tragedy and find that you're writing a farce, let go of the tragedy situation and attend to the farce. After a while perhaps you'll have the tragedy as well.

The man who can see but a single line of incident in connection with a situation is not an author at all. There may be twenty ways to work out a single story and perhaps each of the nineteen others is better than the one selected.

Take the advice Phil Lang, of the Kalem Company gave A. Van Buren Powell. "Let it get cold." Set it aside for a week or two weeks or a month, according to your temperament, and when you take it up take it up with an open mind. Be ready to rewrite it in whole or in part as may be necessary and don't go at the work with the idea that certain parts cannot be changed in the least. You've nothing in your story that cannot be altered with improvement to the story, else you've written the sort of story that even Kipling can't write. Let go of that pet incident if it hurts the rest of the story and bring the whole thing into harmony.

The Fatal Thirteen.

Did you ever notice how the number thirteen figures in your script? Seven times in ten you'll find that thirteen is an important scene. Look it up on your old scripts and you'll find that it is so.

The answer is that thirteen is about the time when the plot begins to thicken, if the story is written properly, and naturally thirteen is either an essential scene or is the link or break between two essential scenes. If your story is still running smoothly in scene thirteen it's a sign of bad luck, because the trouble should have started by then.

This is not superstition. It's just plain technique.

INQUIRIES

M. E. H.—Look for a reply next week. We do not place the missing players.

MISS D. L.—There are lots of companies purchasing scripts. Probably the reason you get the scripts back is because they are not properly written or because they do not contain plots sufficiently new. We will discuss this more extensively in the Photoplaywright page when space permits.

C. C.—The Essanay Company has one section in the West at San Rafael. The Selig picture was probably made in or near Los Angeles. We do not place the locale of the Kalem mentioned.

RUBY.—William West appears in two releases by the Edison Company the first fortnight in May. He is still with the company, but it is the Edison policy not to use the same players too often. With so many releases each week the constant appearance of the same players might prove tiresome.

W. N.—You can send in as many scripts at one time as you please, but two or three should be the limit at any one time. Spelling is regarded in most studios as less important than plot. We do not know the "longest time" an editor usually takes, but it took Majestic five months and seven days to turn back one script. As a rule it is well to wait eight weeks before making any inquiry. Questions not involving the handling of scripts are not charged for, but this department does not undertake to handle scripts in any way. If you will supply your address you will be advised where to send it. A six months' subscription will cost half of the yearly price, or $1.50. The use of what you call "fine words" is not recommended. Put your ideas down in plain language. It is the idea, not the form, that counts, and prose poems seldom work out into good photoplays.

A. I. A.—C. G. P. C. is the designation of the European product of the Pathe Freres and the names of the foreign players are not to be obtained, but the girl who played the title part in "Jane Shore" is not the Biograph's former Priscilla.

J. A. M.—Miss Louise Lester was the girl's mother in American's "The Duel of Candles." George Nichols was the lawyer in Thanhouser's "Flying to Fortune." Bob Coffey was the first victim of the Vigilantes in American's "The Trail of the Eucalyptus." What "Bison's Broncho Bill" do you mean? We fail to find the title. G. M. Anderson, of the Essanay, has taken "Broncho Billy" as his title for a series of pictures. Didn't you get your wires crossed? The Indian Chief in Bison's "The Deserter" is not named. Harry Cashman was the husband in Essanay's "The Valley of Regrets." We have no information as to the nationality of William Russell.

L. A. M.—The Thanhouser Kid does not "belong" to James Cruze. Warren Kerrigan does not live in Muncie. He lives in La Mesa, Cal., where the company is located.

W. P. Y.—We cannot tell what the matter with the film was. It was not dark because the day was cloudy, for we have seen splendid work done while a light shower was falling. It is probably some fault of development, but just what it was we cannot tell without having seen the film. Possibly this will settle your dispute since the cloudiness of the day had nothing whatever to do with it.

E. H.—Miss Jane Wolf is cast as the Miser in the Kalem film, "The Secret of the Miser's Cave."

A FAN.—Miss Storey is playing with the Vitagraph home company in Brooklyn. This address was given in this department recently. A letter should be sent her in care of the company. We are not advised as to her previous stage experience. She was with the Vitagraph before her Melies connection and we believe that this was her first engagement. Vitagraph's "The Heart of the King's Jester" was released January 3. Miss Vedah Bertram was the girl in Essanay's "The Ranch Girl's Mistake." The subscription price of this paper is three dollars a year.

KENWOOD.—Miss Ruth Roland was the lead in Kalem's "The Schoolmistress of Stone Gulch." The name you mention as that of the possible player is not familiar to us. Miss Lottie Pickford has appeared in Kalem's recently released. Two different reviewers saw the two pictures you mention and do not identify. Miss Leah Baird was the other wife in Vitagraph's "Working for Hubby," but she did not "play opposite" Miss Gardner.

N. B.—We have no knowledge of the concern, but if you will supply us with the facts we will look the matter up.

J. H. R.—You seem to need the services of a detective bureau rather than an inquiry department. Nothing doing.

O. U.—The cast does not state the character, but we think you have reference to John Adolphi, who played the nephew or John Troyano as Kid in Eclair's "Letter with the Black Seals, or Kid, Kit and Kittie."

B. M. S.—George E. Reehm was the smooth-faced German in "A Gay Time in Jacksonville." He used only straight make-up, getting his expressions through the control of his facial muscles. In point of service he is one of the oldest photoplayers in the business and it is this long practice which enables him to dispense with lining paints in his make-up box

Licensed.

"TRUE TILL DEATH" (Melies), April 25.—We have already commended this idyllic story of love, broken by the hard fortunes of war, but remaining true to its dream through a long life, even unto death, when the little white-haired widow in black dies in her armchair. She had seen her grandson and his young wife, dressed in "before the war" costumes, off to a fancy dress ball. The old memories had come thronging in upon her, and, for a few minutes after she was left alone, she lived the old days over again. The picture of her young husband comes to life and holds out its hand toward her, and she dies. Many of the photographs of the picture have high poetic beauty, many of its scenes are lovely. It is an American story, commendably praising that spirit of heroic endurance and devotion, so nobly exemplified in the women of the South, during and after the struggle between the States and to which a very beautiful monument has been recently erected in South Carolina, a picture of which we saw in last week's Animated Weekly.

"FOR THE PAPOOSE" (Pathe), April 25.—An Indian story, told with scenes mostly in the woods, through which runs a muddy stream. There are no wide or extensive natural scenes. The photographs are not very artistic, but are clear and serviceable. The story is clearly told.

"ONE IN BUSINESS, THE OTHER IN CRIME" (Biograph), April 25. —The pleasing quality that marks this picture comes largely from its sincere acting, the grace of its sets and backgrounds, its very artistic photography, and its moral purpose. It puts a barb into complacent hypocrisy, and this is always popular with normal people. The story is clear, but not very fresh, except in the things, sometimes referred to as little matters, by means of which the producer had added immensely to the picture's powers of suggestion

"THE PINK PAJAMA GIRL" (Vitagraph), April 26.—Miss Lena Kiefe's charmingly clever interpretation of a dandy comedy situation makes this picture's excruciatingly funny climax a scream of merriment, and at the same time she manages to keep the romantic side of the picture from falling down in the least. The two are blended together in a most satisfatcory way. Miss Julia Swayne Garden and Mr. Harrison support her very well. Perhaps a more descriptive title might have been found. It deals with an accident, the slamming of a door. Thus the little heroine is shut out of her apartment in pajamas. She had stepped out to slip a letter to her beau in the mail drop. Her mother and her friends are at the theater. She doesn't know it, but her sweetheart is on his way to the hotel. Enough fun has been found in this predicament to keep laugh following laugh until the end. It is a first-class comedy picture, very well photographed.

"AN UNUSUAL SACRIFICE" (Edison), April 26.—Telepathy, which is the faculty claimed by some by which the mind of one man is enabled to make his thoughts real and clear to the mind of another at a great distance, is utilized to give a strange and weird climax to this unusual picture. On this account, the picture is instructive, as showing this peculiar phenomena in a most vivid way. Nothing could be plainer than the story, as it is developed, and it makes a deep impression. We commend it as a picture out of the ordinary, one that will excite discussion of a kind that will advertise the houses where it will be shown, as well as motion pictures generally. Two musical composers, very close to each other in their friendship, love the same girl. The more original of the two is crippled by an accident and the other wins her. He didn't know how dependent he was on his friend for musical ideas, and after the marriage and the friends are separated, his work loses quality. The lonely genius has become famous. He hears of the distress of his friend and the woman whom he loves, but his offers of help are not accepted. He has a new composition and feels sure that it will make him famous. He also knows of his strange faculty, and, although a great distance separates the friends, he throws his music into the other's heart, giving it to him without his knowing. It is very well acted by Mary Fuller, Augustus Phillips and Barry O'Moor. The photography is excellent.

"A COMPLICATED CAMPAIGN" (Lubin), April 24. A fresh and dandy little comedy of political life in the future, perhaps. The old party's choice for mayor finds that there's a woman candidate with a good chance of election. The boss tells the candidate (Mr. Harry Meyer plays the role), that he must win even if he has to marry the opposition candidate. This lady (Miss May Buckley takes the part) consents to withdraw after she has a written promise that the man will marry her two weeks after he is elected. She then steps out of the race and the indignant women put up a second candidate (Mrs. Geo. Walters plays the new lady), and she, too, gets a written promise. After his election, the new mayor jumps the town, but a good way is found out of the embarrassing difficulty. The idea is in itself amusing, but the producer, the players, and the camera man all have added much to it. It is very good entertainment, and a large afternoon audience seemed to take much pleasure in it.

"JOHN MILTON" (Eclipse), April 24.—There is one beautiful scene in this picture that is like a painting by a master. The story, supposedly biographical, deals with John Milton after "Paradise Lost" had been printed and Charles II. was king. The love story is furnished by the poet's favorite daughter, Debora, whose lover is Lord Devenant. It is a simple, dignified picture, not very accurate, but pleasingly conducted and photographed. The best scene in it shows a faint foot-path leading through the green twilight of a forest.

"EXHIBITION DRILL OF THE H. M. S. EXCELLENT" (Eclipse), April 24.—On the same reel we are given clear photographs of the sailors of an English warship handling big field guns. It is a good offering.

"A LEAP YEAR LOTTERY PRIZE" (Lubin), April 29 —This prize was the young, unmarried minister, played by Arthur Johnson. This minister at first was reluctant to let himself be auctioned off, but they assured him that Lottie Brisco, one of the most desirable young ladies of the parish, positively would draw the winning number. They reckoned without the minister's housekeeper, who listened at the keyhole. We do not know who this player is, but she put over this freak character very well, yet with much grace of movement. The situation is too preposterous to be very convincing, yet is very amusing. The strangers behind the review didn't like it, but throughout the audience there were many laughs. The pictures are clear as a bell.

"PATHE S WEEKLY, NO. 18," April 29.—The Weekly Topical announces the death of one of its camera correspondents, Noel Malchard, who, with the other Titanic heroes, was drowned in the recent disaster. Perhaps the two most widely interesting pictorial items this week are a very intimate and good view of the Crown Prince and Princess of Prussia. They were photographed at a famous race course near Berlin. And a long item, showing the ceremonious transporting of the body of General Phil Kearney from the Trinity Church burial ground to Arlington Cemetery, at Washington. There is also a beautiful view of the new monument erected in Columbia, S. C., by the men of the city in honor of the women of the Confederacy. Another item shows us the French army manoeuvers as seen from an airship. This series of pictures includes some fine birds'-eye views of Vincennes and the suburbs. A view of the large and destructive fire that recently destroyed valuable property in Hartford, Conn., is also included. With these are the usual Paris fashions and other items.

"THE LESSER EVIL" (Biograph), April 29.—A sea and fishing village love story, with fisher folk, smugglers, beauty in danger and distress, and the hero coming to the rescue with U. S. revenue men in a speedy, wave-leaping motor boat. It is well acted, giving realistic naturalness and rough humor. In fact, because of the skilful manner in which the whole situation has been handled, it impresses one as having much freshness of interest. The "lesser evil" is death; the heroine preferred death to being the sport of a smuggler's ship-load of drunken, mutinous sailors. The hero arrives in time. The camera work is commendably fair.

"EXPOSED BY THE DICTOGRAPH" (Selig), April 29.—Every one knows that a dictograph was used in several cases lately by detectives to get evidence. This picture gives a very vivid object lesson on it, and how it is used. It is a good detective story in which secret service men get evidence against a Senator and a briber. The Senator needs a chauffeur and the detective gets the job. We know that the briber is to meet the Senator, and the series of scenes showing the detective getting the dictograph set up so that he and a stenographer can overhear the conversation are filled with suspense. The Senator's daughter, she is very pretty, is used to maintain the suspense and give added interest to the story. The photographs are, for the most part, very good indeed.

"THE PASADENA PEACH" (Kalem), April 26.—The young lady who plays the lead in this comedy is vivacious in such roles and very attractive. It was she who played the schoolma'am of Stone Gulch. The situation presented by the picture is true enough and human enough to put most of its scenes over in good shape. The "Peach" had many beaux, but preferred one. The others bothered her, coming to call. She had to receive them, so as each came, she saw to it that he found her at some hard labor. Being much in love, each relieved her. She had one washing clothes in the kitchen, one in the sewing room, one out on the porch, one digging a well, one watering the garden She, the while, entertained the chosen one in a hammock. The camera work is very fair.

"A WINTER VISIT TO CENTRAL PARK" (Edison), April 27.—An interesting and fairly well photographed topical film, showing glimpses of New York's great pleasure ground. It includes views of its big museums, its famous walks and drives, its zoo, etc.

"THE BUTLER AND THE MAID" (Edison), April 27.—A startlingly novel conceit and a pleasing, light comedy situation mark out this bright, little picture. It shows a love tiff between the butler and the maid. The butler, piqued at the maid, his sweetheart, dreams that the marble statue has consented to go to the ball (he has a ticket which cost a dollar and will admit lady and gentleman). He will show the maid that she isn't the only, only; but the statue, on coming home, stumbles and gets broken. It is very well made and acted, Harry Beaumont playing the butler, Jeanie MacPherson, the maid, and Viola Tulgrath, the statue.

"THE LOS ANGELES FIRE DEPARTMENT" (Selig), April 26.—An instructive and interesting picture. The photography in many of the scenes is good; in all of them it is fair.

"SCENES IN KOREA" (Selig), April 26.—A very commendable offering. We don't remember seeing in any other film picture the very interesting Hermit Kingdom; it is now Japanese, and think that audiences will be very glad of this one. The views are mostly animated street scenes filled with quaint people and interesting activities. The camera work is fair.

"THE QUEEN'S MESSENGER" (C. G. P. C.), April 26.—A beautifully colored, historical drama dealing with Cardinal Richelieu and Louis XIII., with his unhappy queen. This is is incident that Dumas made use of in his famous novel. It shows how the messenger from Queen Anne to the Duke of Buckingham was intercepted by the Cardinal. The scene showing the death by torture of this man is not beautiful; it is decidedly painful. On all other counts, the picture is a praiseworthy success

"THAT HOUN' DAWG" (Pathe), April 24.—From the reception that this very bright and amusing travesty received, we venture to predict that it will win a star in popular approval. It doesn't need to be a work of art; it isn't, except in as much as it truly gets the real spirit of the song. It certainly does get this in a remarkable degree It divides itself into four parts Each is preceded by a stanza of the song with a line of music and each then illustrates that stanza very well indeed. The audience on Broadway, Saturday afternoon, thoroughly enjoyed it.

"THE CHARCOAL INDUSTRY IN CUBA" (Pathe), April 24.—This well photographed topical, on the same reel, is something fresh and new It is interesting and instructive

"THE LOST DOG" (Lubin), April 27 Those trick film farces certainly make the people laugh. The Lubin people in this farce show two poodles just alike. One is stolen from its mistress and she sets up a disturbance, or rather two On one hand, a young would-be knight sees the other dog in the care of a husky looking man of about his own size They parley and then fight it out to a tattered finish. While this is going on, a chase of the real thief is well on in its most amusingly freakish trick film progress, on the other hand, and between the two there is much fun.

"THE FORGOTTEN POCKETBOOK" (Lubin), April 27.—This farce is in quality very much like, yet different from, the other. Both seemed to be popular and both are funny. Both are perfectly photographed.

"THE INDIAN AND THE CHILD" (Essanay), April 27.—We do not know the name of the clever little player who, as the child, leads in this picture; but in some of its scenes she is fine. The story is dramatic and fair, though not quite up to Essanay standard; but the acting of the child most distinctly shows imagination. She shows remarkable, even brilliant promise. We commend the picture; people will like it. We also commend the Essanay people for the spirit that prompted them to give this little player something all her own, to show her metal.

"LEAH, THE SUFFRAGETTE" (Cines), April 27.—If any given audience fails to laugh at this excruciating farce, something must be the matter with it. We know that one audience laughed long and loud. We laughed with the others and enjoyed it. The camera work is good.

"CONFUSION" (Cines), April 27.—A very laughable comedy, slight, but clear and well photographed. It is not quite so amusing as the farce on the same reel, but the two make an acceptable offering

"THE MEXICAN REVOLUTIONIST" (Kalem), April 25.—A splendid Mexican Kalem. Because of their absolute fidelity to truth, their correct rendering of every detail and the charm of their outdoor settings, these Mexican Kalems have justly become very popular with exhibitors. Their educational value is considerable. Americans have learned more about conditions as they exist in the sister republic through these pictures than through any other medium. There are some very fine and novel features in this particular reel, notably the breaking up of the insurrectos' camp, the call to arms, and the fight between the federals and the insurrectos, which are thrillingly realistic. The correctness of these pictures from a military point of view is surely not the least of their merits. The plot is simple, but pleasing and probable, and the acting is beyond all praise

"THE WOMEN HATERS" (Vitagraph), April 25.—A happy departure from the commonplace. There is a touch of rare art about this refined comedy; it might be called a character comedy. The four women-hating fathers of the adopted child reminded one of a sketch of Rembrandt, grouping, shading and portraying of character made a most delightful scene, which passed all too quickly. The acting is of the Vitagraph standard. Such reels are a distinct gain for exhibitor and spectator, and reveal anew the possibilities of the art, when it is used by competent hands.

"PAYING THE PRICE" (Lubin), April 25.—This production reflects great credit on the director. The theme itself shows no gloss of newness, but the handling of it makes this picture rise very far above the average There are some dramatic moments in it, which have been conceived by a gifted mind, and the conceptions are rendered into life and motion by splendid actors. The picture rises indeed to the dignity of a feature, and may safely be advertised as such. The settings deserve special mention in this day of fine outdoor work. What lends however an extraordinary charm to the picture are the horses and the riders. In conformation and speed one at least of the lovely animals shows traces of the thoroughbred. The horses are handled superbly by the riders, not less than by director and camera man.

"THE DOCTOR" (Essanay), April 25.—This is a weak and watery comedy. The plot is hoary and there is nothing in the treatment of it to rescue the production from the monotonous. The vim and snap, which are often found in Essanay comedies, are here conspicuous by their absence.

"THE LAW OF THE NORTH" (Selig), April 23.—For a Selig this picture is a bit disappointing. To be sure there are many interesting scenes in it, and there is much capable acting by the Selig performers. The plot, however, is old and weak, there is a good deal of repetition, and traces of undue haste in preparing the production are here and there plainly visible. The best thing about the picture is its catchy title, and that, too, is by no means new.

"THE NEW WOMAN AND THE LION" (Selig), April 25.—This farce comedy was, at least by one large audience, considered as a scream, and it received no help from good sound effects at all, nothing but a piano being used. There is a savage looking lion, "Bloody," in it, loose, and we are sure that with a good man working a growler sound effect, it would have been still better. It has climaxes of the kind that make one jump, and these are followed by relaxing moments that made a roar of laughter. There are parts in it better than others; but, as a whole, it gives the merriest kind of entertainment The photography is good enough, so that nothing that is amusing is lost.

"GENOA, ITALY" (Cines), April 30 An unusually commendable travel film of Genoa, one of Italy's very beautiful cities. It is very well photographed, tinted carefully, and gives a good idea of the city. It takes about half of the reel or a little more.

"'TWIXT LOVE AND WAR" (Cines), April 30. A slight story of love in Italy and Tripoli. It seems to have been produced to show a romance in Tripolitan war-time backgrounds. There is a picture, a set piece, of a battle and many views that must have been taken in Africa It is well photographed and interesting.

"NAPATIA, THE GREEK SINGER" (Essanay), April 30.—A picture of modern life in Chicago. It tells the love story of a fireman and a street singer whose parents were rather brutal to her. It is set in the outskirts of the city, and the time is early spring; there is melting snow and slush on the sidewalks. The story is not speedy; but is very convincingly acted, except, perhaps, and only for a moment, at the climax, which, we believe, was founded on fact, or a newspaper report of fact. The camera work is good. It made a fairly entertaining picture.

"A LA FRANCAISE" (C. G. P. C.), April 30.—A very amusing farce comedy that made a large Broadway audience roar with laughter. The girl sends her suitor to France to learn how to make love. He goes and, as solemnly as an owl, learns how to do it, à la Française. Then he comes back and makes love that way. The players are pleasing; the photographs, perfect.

ABACA, ITS CULTURE AND USE IN THE PHILIPPINES" (C. G. P. C.), April 30.—Abaca is Manila hemp, very useful in commerce. This is a colored picture and one that is unusually valuable, as something to interest and instruct. It is very complete. The photography is fine.

"BETTY IS WORSE THAN EVER" (C. G. P. C.), April 30.—Just a few feet of good fun, that made the audience laugh several times

"FRANK COFFYN'S HYDRO-AEROPLANE FLIGHT" (Vitagraph), April 29.—Here is a picture that has awakened enthusiasm all over town. It is a sure feature. Those who have watched motion pictures closely have already seen "The Canvas-Back Duck," the name Coffyn has given to his water or air craft; but this time the camera man was in the machine with him and took bird's-eye views of New York City (bits near the water) that are remarkable. These views must have been taken by five or six cameras—one on the hydro-aeroplane, one on Liberty Statue, one on Brooklyn Bridge, etc. The pictures are remarkably good.

"WINTER LOGGING IN MAINE" (Edison), April 30.—Logging is a big business, and these views of it make a big picture. It is absorbingly interesting and a picture that, judging by its reception here in New York, can be counted a very sure feature. The views show the wintry, snow-choked forest, and picture to us the whole logging process, from the fall of the green-limbed monarch up on the hills to the laying of the logs on the frozen river, to springtime and the thaw that shall set them afloat on the water. The man who made this picture has the "news sense," and his camera has produced good photographs.

"FOR HIS MOTHER'S SAKE" (Pathe), April 27.—We have noticed in the last three or four pictures by the Pathe American Company a very pleasing human quality. They also have had an atmosphere quite different from pictures by all other makers. This one we and the audience, a large one, who saw it with us liked very much. It isn't critic-proof, and as far as its outline, its situation, goes, it is old; but it is human and has one very fresh and delightful scene. The son is becoming wild. His mother is sadly distressed. In her library are pictures—one of him as a child, one as a young man, and also a picture of her husband. These come to life in a way very creditable to the camera man and give her convincing dream-memories. Octavia Handworth, with Messrs. Cavanaugh and de Grasse, plays the lead in it, as the young woman in the case. It is well acted, humanly conducted and very clearly pictured.

"THE STOLEN INVENTION" (Kalem), April 29 A pleasing and interesting picture. The situation isn't new (few pictures have a new situation); but it is freshly conducted and pretty well acted. The camera work is very good, and the sets and backgrounds, tropic plants and southern California scenes are pleasing.

Independent.

"THE IMPOSTER" (Nestor), April 29.—A dramatic story in which a man, in hard luck, sees a stranger fall and then taken to a hospital. He later learns in a paper that the man has lost his memory. He has picked up the unidentified man's wallet and takes the risk of impersonating him. The suspense created by this situation is well maintained. The heroine is just a slip of a girl, fairy-like and very pretty She falls in love with the imposter and is heartbroken when she learns of his duplicity. It has an ending likely to be popular. The backgrounds, park scenes with palms, water and flowers, and well furnished interiors are often delightfully beautiful. The camera work is fine.

"RETURN OF JOHN GREY" (Reliance), April 31.—Scenario by Emmett C. Hall. John Grey (Henry Walthall) had a nice family (Miss Fearnleigh and Baby Rosanna); but he had one or two bad habits drink and reckless speculation. He steals and loses the money in a bucket shop. He leaves his coat and hat by the river and disappears. Years pass and now Miss Gertrude Robinson takes the place of Baby Rosanna, as his daughter She has a lover (Mr. Johnson plays this part) who is rich. John Grey at the gate, sees these young people pass out He comes in to his wife who has thought him innocent. She hears the truth and persuades him not to remain and disgrace the daughter. The photographs and acting are pretty fair

"HIS LOVE OF CHILDREN" (Reliance), May 3. The appeal that this picture makes, comes especially from the three children who, as little romps, are as natural as any youngsters. The most interesting section of the picture shows them at the Bronx Park Zoo. These views are fine. The story is also effectively told and clear. Miss Fearnleigh plays very well the role of a frivolous young wife, whose life is exclusively for society, but who misunderstands the reason for her elderly husband's visit to a neighbor's, a widow, mother of the three children. The photographs have the sharp contrasts between background and highlights often noticed in Reliance films. It sets the figures forth, but it leaves somber shadows, and these are not without their effect on the impression left.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 7" (Sales Company), April 24.—The topical this week covers an unusually large number of interesting items. Among them will be found: Opening of the New Municipal Play Ground for Children by Mayor Gaynor and a children's ceremony; a new monorail suspended passenger car; a glimpse of the removal of Gen. F. D. Grant's body to Governor's Island; a good, close-up view of the German Emperor; a Masonic ceremony at the laying of the corner stone of the University Club at Washington, with President Taft; the first steamboat on the Detroit River after the ice; a beautiful monument, unveiled in South Carolina, to the women of the Confederacy. We also see very good views of the baseball grounds at New York with "Matty," McGraw and the team; also Geo. M. Cohen and President Brush. One item shows a holiday in Athens, another Abdul Baba, a very reverend old man, on a visit to this country. There are also an unveiling of a bust to the first flying man at Cairo, Egypt, the unveiling of a new statue to our great naval hero, John Paul Jones, weekly hint from Paris, La Follette, the picture of good health; a big fire in Butte, Mont.; the Chinese baseball players, etc.

"HER MOUNTAIN HOME" (American), April 25.—In this picture a love story is developed amid the rush of miners to a newly discovered bonanza. The story has a villain as well as a hero; and a thread of tragic happenings as well as one of comedy is woven in. It is played by Miss Von Trump, Miss Bush, Mr. Kerrigan and Mr. Richardson. The camera work is pretty good and one or two of its scenes are excellent pictures.

"BILLY'S INSOMNIA" (Solax), April 26.—Billy was to have insomnia for four weeks, so the doctor said. Billy invited in his friends to celebrate. The other boarders in the house (including Fanny Simpson), hearing the racket, call upon Billy and offer condolences and advise various ways of getting sleep "for the length of the count" longer; but nothing works with Billy. The farce has also some very amusing trick photography that made laughs. At length he is cured. The photographs are as clear as good eyesight.

"THE EVERLASTING JUDY" (Nestor), May 1.—A good, dramatic comedy. Jed's wife, "the everlasting Judy," was a "rip snorter," a perfect hoyden. Jed could neither tame her nor live with her; he had to run away. He runs far, but fate is unkind and he finds her in the new cook at his ranch. Lively times follow. The picture closes with Jed making a final escape. The boys in pity had given him a horse and told him to "keep right on aridin'." There is a lively touch of realism in the picture, not only in its rougher management, but the acting. This, with the fact that there is no stalling, makes it absorbingly interesting, and it is very amusing also. Mr. Jack Conway, Mr. Geo. Gilbert, and Miss Virginia Forde, the leading players, surely deserve praise. The camera work is very good indeed. It was produced by Mr. Fahrney.

"A PIECE OF AMBERGRIS" (Imp), April 27.—Mr. Cumpson plays, in this comedy picture, Cap'n Binks, an old salt, and Rolinda Bainbridge plays Miss Linky, a washerwoman in love with him. Miss Linky owns a piece of ambergris of great value, and Cap'n Binks owns a mortgage. He marries her to get the ambergris, but what he had seen and thought was ambergris, he finds is soap. The ambergris was the little piece; he had stolen a bit of it. The situation lacks absolute clearness; it doesn't bite sharply enough; yet it is very amusing. The photographs are very clear.

"U. S. ARTILLERY PRACTICE" (Imp), April 27.—An interesting exhibition drill with field guns and siege guns.

"MISS ARABELLA SNAITH" (Thanhouser), May 3.—Another excellently photographed and beautiful Florida picture. Mr. Cruze plays one lead, a popular novelist taking a vacation incognito. We do not know who plays Miss Arabella Snaith, the ubiquitous and troublesome, man-hunting, hotel girl, but she is a clever character comedienne. After the rising tide had kept these two out on a rocky point all one night, the man had to give a funeral and pretend to bury himself, and then he had to pay a friend to marry the young woman in order to get rid of her. The backgrounds are beautiful interiors, in a big hotel and in a private house in the South; a Florida garden park, and the sea beach of a bay in Florida. Some of the humor is a little artificial, but the views are very fine.

"THE PENSIONERS" (American), April 29.—Mr. Kerrigan and Mr. Richardson play, in this picture, the two worthless sons of an old Civil War veteran, who sits in the sunlight cherishing his memories and his sword. The first son is good for nothing, an idler; the second makes much money at cards. Miss Bush and Miss Von Trump play two girls who are left orphans and come to live with the pensioner and his gray-haired wife. The story shows the results of the presence of these newcomers, especially on the character of the lazy son. It is not convincing, as a story, perhaps, because the players should have been in their early teens. The photography is good and the backgrounds give pretty bits of scenery in Southern California.

"IN FRIENDSHIP'S NAME" (Powers), May 4.—The situation, in this well photographed and well acted melodrama, is more amusing than thrilling. Such a story as this could be true; it might be one of those dramatic records sometimes found in the daily newspapers; but it fails to convince strongly. The heroine is a heavy villainess, an international swindler, wanted all around the world. She kills one of her lovers and gets the second lover convicted of his murder, but in the end, her maid, who knows her secret, tells the police. Such pictures as this have a large following; they are gallery pictures, however, sensational, not human.

"THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN" (Thanhouser), April 30.—The Moving Picture World has already commended this glorious, two-reel feature made after the poem of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, and has pointed out the value of such releases to humanity and their civilizing power. This reviewer, however, takes pleasure in pointing the charm of the picture that most strongly appealed to him. It is in the character of the mill worker's youngest child, a vivid and quite fresh creation. The producer, in the way he has handled the possibilities that this character gave to him, shows a senstive, poetic imagination. This child, played by the Thanhouser Kid, seems the very breath of poetry, and, to give one instance, that scene in which we see her beside the bunch of pussy willows, changes the effect of every other scene in the picture. The picture needed some such contrast in order to bring out its values at all, but this, coming as it does with the scene just before it, shoots like a poignant cry to the very last scene. We wish that all the contrasts offered by the picture were as sincere. These scenes really live. The picture, as a whole, has much living truth, and is very effective. The camera work is good.

"WHEN THE LILY DIED" (Powers), April 30.—A picture of Easter time, very slight but pretty. A little girl of about nine, with brown ringlet curls tossing around her neck, is the heroine. It tells how she earned a lily to give to her sick mother. It is a Sunday school story, and will be very acceptable. The camera work is commendable.

"THE FIVE SENSES" (Powers), April 30.—On the same reel is this delightfully human comedy parable of the five senses. Two charming youngsters, a boy and a girl, play it. It is a story set on a farm and deals with a stolen pot of jam. It will make many hearty laughs. A Licensed company recently made a picture along these lines, but it was nothing like this; it was not so human, nor so good.

"AN ITALIAN ROMANCE" (Champion), May 1.—Little Italy furnishes this romance with backgrounds—a corner of a sweatshop, a bit of the room where a shoemaker sits at his last and bench, a barroom, the heroine's room with its cot, over which hangs the Virgin's picture, etc. Giovanni has been brought over to America by the money Mariania and her father have earned. He was her lover, but in America he forsakes her; this gives the situation that quickly develops into a story of fiery passion, which is clearly told, pretty well acted, and fairly photographed.

"THE REFORMATION OF MARY" (Solax), May 1.—In the first scene of this picture Mary is shown coming from prison. The story of her reformation is built on the usual lines of old time emotional melodramas; it cannot be taken as a picture of life and is intended to excite the uncritical. Mary has a hard time at first; the only word of friendship that she gets is from a child. She cannot make an honest living, so she falls back into evil ways and robs a safe. The man who is accused is, she finds, the father of the child, her only friend, so Mary confesses and brings back the money. The young lady who takes this part is winsome in herself, and seems a competent player. The photography is good.

"ARABELLA'S DROLL WOOING" (Lux), May 3.—Arabella we have seen before; she was also Skivvy in some Lux pictures. The drollness of this picture comes from the efforts of Arabella's lover to get an iron kettle off his head that the girl's father had cast down upon him from above. It is like other farces of its kind. The camera has given pretty clear pictures of it.

"BILL AS A BRIGAND" (Lux), May 3.—On the same reel is this picture in which we find "Bill" wandering among the ruins of some old city, relieved of all his money by a brigand. Brigandage seems profitable to him, and he, too, becomes a brigand, with amusing results. The picture was taken among the mountains and gives some interesting backgrounds, not very artistically photographed. It is quite laughable and is good entertainment.

"THE END OF THE FEUD" (American), May 2.—In that broad, open land that the people have come to know and grown to like as a background for pictures that give glimpses of epic doings, is set this dramatic story of love and hatred. Out in the great West the man (Kerrigan) from Kentucky fell in love with the daughter (Miss Von Trump) of his family's enemy. The feud anger, bitter, relentless, and deadly, had gripped him, but love, deep, sincere and true, had gripped him also. In these the struggle is hot, but love wins. This seems a better, more human picture than the last six or seven Flying A's. The photographs are clear, but have little artistic atmosphere. It is well acted, of course.

"COUSIN KATE'S REVOLUTION" (Eclair), May 2.—A character farce comedy. The Strongs are queer people, as queer as real life folks sometimes are. Cousin Kate comes on a visit from the country. She has some common sense and doesn't approve of the carelessness and helter-skelter disorder at the Strongs'. In effecting her revolution, with the help of the slatternly maid, she made the mistake of cleaning up Mr. Strong's study—he wrote novels. It isn't intended to be a picture to keep the audience in a roar, but it never fails to amuse. It is burlesqued only just enough to put over to the spectator the real life conditions and characteristics that it makes fun of, and it is very well acted and unusually commendable in almost every way.

"HER CORNER ON HEARTS" (Nestor), May 4.—A picture of the well-merited predicament of an outrageous flirt played by Miss Vivian Rich. The story is set at an evening reception in some fashionable house, at which she certainly did some flirting, and managed things, so unskilfully that from five escorts who wanted to see her home, she found herself with no escort at all. On her way home, through the palm-tree shadowed walks and parks, she has several adventures, giving a gallant workman much to do to protect her. It is very well photographed in sharply contrasting blacks and white, which are pleasing. The sets and views are interesting and well brought out. The story is clear and lively, and the heroine is very pretty. At the party there are many pretty girls in handsome dresses.

"ISLETA, NEW MEXICO" (Nestor), May 4.—This is an Indian city of adobe houses of the Pueblo Tribe. It has a church built at about 1,600 A. D. The views of the city and of its intelligent inhabitants are very interesting. There is plenty of good fun in it. The camera work is good.

"THE MUSICIAN'S LOVE" (Great Northern), May 4.—A picture of pleasant characters in country backgrounds, such as in Denmark. It is a picture of sharp contrasts; there is a brutal character in it who makes trouble for both the musician and his love, but the trouble is smoothed out. The photographs are peculiar, with extremely bright high lights and whiter and rather obscure shadows.

"ALL FOR HER" (Imp), May 2.—A fine picture. Its chief characters are two old musicians, kindly, old-fashioned, well-to-do; a little newsgirl whom they had adopted, and who has grown into a budding artiste. The picture now changes. The girl is married and prosperous, and the musicians are in want. She discovers this through seeing one of them playing on the street; she brings him in, and cares tenderly for him. This situation is, of course, not new at all, but it is here so smoothly told, well acted, and photographed, with such artistic effects, that it is truly delightful.

"THE SHADE OF AUTUMN" (Gaumont), May 2.—The Gaumont producer has utilized the well-known, pathetic story to make some very artistic pictures. The dying mother is to live till the leaves fall. The leaves are falling. She dies. The little son doesn't realize that his mother is dead. It is the truthful account of what really happens in many and many a home, and it is very effective, very poignant. The picture was made by an artist.

"THE BANKS OF THE DANUBE" (Gaumont), May 2.—These views were taken from the deck of a river steamboat, and show the quaint villages, the castles, palaces, and towers that one sees on such a trip. The film is very highly commendable.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

TROUBLES OF THE MANUFACTURER.—Very few there are, outside of the office and factory of the manufacturers, who have any realization or conception of the troubles which beset the path of the maker of moving picture machines.

His is indeed not a bed of roses, but rather one of the thorniest kind of thorns. On the one hand, he is confronted with the demand for a mechanism which will deliver practically perfect results on the screen, and which will require a minimum of repairs and give a maximum of service. All of which means that the machine must be built of the best of materials and constructed with a high degree of mechanical accuracy, and for this he is offered a sum by no means sufficient to reasonably reimburse him for such high-class workmanship and excellence in materials.

He is also up against the proposition of placing a closely built mechanism in the hands of men who, in many instances, know absolutely nothing about a projection mechanism and very little about mechanics. I have known of cases where men of no experience whatever in the handling of machines of any kind have purchased a moving picture mechanism and undertaken to run it. They did not even know enough to oil the machine, and yet, when it very quickly began to resent such treatment, they put up a terrific "kick," demanding that the damage done through their ignorance be made good.

Of course, only a comparatively small percentage of the mechanisms go in the hands of men as incompetent as above described, but it is nevertheless a fact that a very large percentage of them are placed in charge of men who cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be termed fully competent, and it naturally follows that the machine suffers. The manager, as a rule, does not place the blame for this where it belongs. Four times out of five he lays it to the machine itself, instead of to the abuse of the mechanism. He promptly condemns the machine and its maker, all of which adds materially to the joyfulness of the machine manufacturers' existence, and helps to make life for him just one glad, sweet song.

The machine manufacturer is confronted with the necessity for hardening certain parts of the mechanism. Unfortunately these very parts are those which must be absolutely mechanically true, even down to the quarter of a thousandth of an inch. This, in turn, requires the installation, and ofttimes the invention as well, of exceedingly costly, special machines for grinding the parts after they have been hardened, in order to eliminate the effects of warping. He is also confronted with the fact that there are a dozen or more different shapes and sizes of perforations in films, all of which the sprockets of his machine, which must, of course, be of one standard dimension, will be expected to handle perfectly. One would think the foregoing list quite sufficient. It is, however, but a beginning. Not only is he obliged to meet and deal with all the difficulties hereinbefore set forth, as well as many others of a somewhat similar character, but he has yet worse things to contend with, viz: The fact that practically every large city in the United States has its own set of laws and regulations dealing with moving picture machines, and the ideas of the authorities in Chicago may be, and in many instances are, directly contrary to the ideas of the authorities in Washington. The authority in Boston differs materially in its requirements from that in Washington. Cleveland, Ohio, wants something else again. San Francisco has other notions as to what constitutes proper safeguards for a moving picture machine. St. Louis has its own individual ideas, and New York City has still other views.

It is a fact that the very same things demanded by the officials in Washington are denounced in Chicago as unsafe—at least they are not allowed in the latter city; and some of the things approved by Chicago authorities are not tolerated in Boston, and some of the things tolerated and approved in Boston would not for a moment be permitted in New York City; all of which seems to prove conclusively that the authorities themselves are not at all agreed as to what is and what is not safe in an operating room—a thing not at all to be wondered at as since few, if any, of them are practical operators.

But the pitiful part, and I might almost say the disgusting part, is, that these various "authorities," with the exceptions of Boston and New York, seldom or never ask advice of anyone. They fail to consult with the machine manufacturers when changes are in contemplation, but go ahead and pass laws, rules and regulations, and frequently compel the manufacturer to comply with them, at great cost, within a ridiculously short period of time.

Chicago, it is claimed, is particularly reprehensible in this latter respect, and it would be a mighty fine thing if some of the manufacturers would take these matters into the courts and determine, once and for all, just how far officials can go in the matter of compelling the adoption of their own individual ideas, when these same ideas are practically condemned by supposed-to-be equally well informed authorities of other cities.

It is rather a cowardly thing, too, when you come to think of it, because these "authorities" well know that no machine manufacturer would dare to fight their demands, no matter how absurd and unreasonable. If he did, he would unquestionably be sooner or later driven from the field, since the authorities hold the club, and can so harass a manufacturer with petty annoyances that it would be impossible for him to do business within the jurisdiction of the authority he had offended. It would seem that as a matter of common decency, to say nothing of being a matter of common sense, that the various law makers, and authorities, would, when a change in requirements is in contemplation, consult with those who are to be affected, and who are presumed to know something about such matters. At least they might secure their views in the matter. We must give the Boston and New York authorities credit for that and compliment them on the fact that they have, in many instances, consulted with the machine manufacturers before making changes in rules or laws. It is the fair thing to do and reflects distinct credit on these officials.

It is often very difficult indeed for the man who knows operating room conditions to understand the why and wherefore of some of the requirements made by various authorities. For instance, a case in point comes from Boston. The authorities there have just sent out a circular letter to the machine manufacturers concerning some change in operating room requirements proposed to be made. One of these is that a motor shall not be set less than two feet below the bottom of the lamphouse. Now the writer is supposed to know a little something about such matters. He has written the Chief of the District Police in Boston, who is the authority there, asking his grounds for this requirement. The editor is absolutely unable to see any reason in the world why a motor should be necessarily set two feet below the bottom of the lamphouse.

But, without going into these matters further at this time, let it be noted that the diversity of ideas as between authorities of various cities, works a terrific injustice and hardship on the manufacturer of moving picture machines. It is not right from any point of view, and it is an outrage any way it is looked at. Probably there is, at this time, no way of altogether avoiding these things. The authorities could, however, as has been suggested, consult with machine manufacturers and secure their views before enacting laws requiring changes, which are, more frequently than not, purely nonsensical.

Before closing, let me cite one or two other instances. Washington requires that the back of the lamphouse be closed in with a sort of a back porch arrangement—that the lamphouse wear a bustle, as it were. Now, who in the world ever heard of anything being set on fire by reason of the back of a lamphouse being open? Why, you could hang a reel of film up within two inches of the rear end of a lamphouse, the whole back of which is wide open, and it would hang there until the Day of Judgment, so far as catching fire from the arc, or sparks therefrom, be concerned. Such a requirement is purely nonsense.

There will presently be placed on the market by one of the manufacturers a new lamphouse. Now the writer has for a long time been interested in getting more ventilation in the lamphouse, and he succeeded in getting this manufacturer to cover the whole top of the new lamphouse with perforated metal, so that the whole top, except for the perforated metal, is open. Over the perforated metal is a collapsible top, which, when raised, is open at the far side, thus allowing full and free ventilation, and stopping an enormous amount of condenser breakage. This scheme is wholly and entirely safe—positively and absolutely so. Yet, a few days ago a gentleman who perhaps is in a better position to know what the authorities in Chicago are likely to do in such a matter than any other one man, stated to me positively that Chicago "would not stand for it."

This I would be loath to believe did I not know from experience that the authorities don't, in many instances, base their acceptance or rejectance of a thing on positive knowledge of its safety or unsafety, but rather on their own individual ideas and views. This would be all right if the aforesaid ideas and views were the result of knowledge gained through experience, or through the experience of others. New York City has approved of this lamphouse top; in fact, the officials of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, expressed themselves as being well pleased with it. It will also—I have no doubt—be approved in many other cities. Of course, I don't know that Chicago will condemn it, but if it does, we shall again have the somewhat amusing spectacle of New York City's authority saying, "this is perfectly safe," and the Chicago authority saying, "this is dangerous, and is disapproved"—rather ridiculous, isn't it? Somewhat absurd! Gives one the idea that something needs fixing somewhere, doesn't it?

CINCINNATI UNION IN GOOD SHAPE.—Cincinnati, Ohio, writes as follows: "I hand you herewith a list of the newly elected officers of Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union, No. 165. The address of the secretary is Mr. Henry Lacy, 115 East 9th Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio. Matters are in a healthy state here, and the boys are trying to please the exhibitors with good projection. This is creating an excellent feeling between the Exhibitors and the Union. The newly Board of Examiners with Building Commissioner Rapp, and City Electrician Sturtervant at the head, are ensuring safety to the moving picture loving public. Attached hereto, find exact copy of the rules and regulations governing operators, which you will grant are excellent. The boys here appreciate the Projection Department and eagerly await each number. All items are noted and discussed. The representative of the Simplex machine has been in the city during the past week demonstrating that projector. Two of the leading theaters, the "Lyric" and the "Grand," will run pictures during the summer months, under the direction of Messrs. MacMahon and Jackson, the Buckeye film magnates. The Keith "Columbia" will probably run straight pictures for matinees, and at night, during the summer, will have vaudeville also. Messrs. Frankel, Riley, Bernadi & Co., are erecting an imposing structure at 9th Avenue and Baymiller Street, in which vaudeville and pictures will comprise the bill. It is to be known as the "Hippodrome." It will seat 2,500. The rules and regulations referred to are as follows:

"The Commissioner reserves the right to revoke or suspend a license for the following causes: (1) The operators' booth must never be left in charge of any one except a licensed operator, while film is exposed to the light. (2) Operator must not operate and rewind at the same time. (3) All drop shutters must be suspended with a light cord. (4) All extra film must be kept in metal cases. (5) Must provide two extra empty reels for each machine. (6) Additional fuses must be kept on hand at all times. (7) Operator must see that all exits are clear of obstructions, and that all exit lights are burning when he goes on duty. (8) A chemical fire extinguisher must be kept in booth at all times. (9) Smoking or permitting smoking in the booth at any time. (10) Allowing door of booth to remain open while operating. (11) Having more than three reels per machine in booth at one time. (12) Lending certificate to any person to enable latter to operate. (13) Maintaining a dirty booth. (14) Operating a detective machine. (15) Operator must report all film fires to the building. (16) Reading while operating machine."

I am much pleased to hear of the prosperity of Local Union No. 165, and it was with satisfaction that I read your statement that the boys are trying to please the exhibitors with good projection. That, in my humble judgment, is as it should be. It is not so much a matter of "pleasing the exhibitor" as it is simply a matter of right. The organization should bend its efforts to improving the work of its members. The Union advocates higher remuneration for its members, and higher pay naturally calls for better work, or at least for good work, as I have time and again pointed out in these columns. The exhibitor cannot expect very much for $15 per week, and still less for $10 or $12. In order to produce good work, the operator is obliged to put brains into it, and brains are not ordinarily to be rented for the sum of $15 a week. When, however, the manager begins to pay real salaries he expects, and has a right to expect, excellence in results to follow; hence, as I have said, the first thing the Union should do, is to seek to improve the work of its own members to the end that they they be justified in demanding increased salaries. As regards the rules and regulations, they are as a whole, very good; but I object strenuously to the use of that word "booth." Please show this to Commissioner Rapp and City Electrician Sturtervant, and call their attention to the following two sentences: I do not know anything about "coops," "booths," "cages" or "boxes." On the other hand I know what an operating room is. Get them to cut out that "booth" business, and have their regulations drawn up covering operating rooms. Webster defines "booth" as a construction erected from boughs and loose branches of trees. I would also suggest that the drop shutters not only be suspended from a small, strong waxed cord, but that all these individual shutter cords be attached to a master cord, and that this master cord be brought down directly over and within twelve inches of the aperture of each machine

It would seem that rule No. 7 might better come under the regulation governing managers, though, there is nothing particularly wrong with the operator looking out for it also. I should say that the commissioner might better have the rules printed himself and supply one to each operating room. The department will be glad to hear from Local Union 165 from time to time, whenever there is anything of interest.

The union has just elected the following officers: President, Harry Schwartz; Vice-President, William Newman; Recording Secretary, Henry Lacy; Financial Secretary, Walter Kinney. Trustees: William Thornton, William Flodter and Harry Harbaugh. Business Agent, Edward Kirsch. Alternate Business Agent, Henry Lacy. Delegates to International Convention: Harry Schwartz and Edward Kirsch. Sergeant-at-Arms, Fred Bierie. Delegate to District Conference, Harry Schwartz.

AN ERROR.—Colorado Springs, Col., writes: "Many thanks for your reply to my questions, April 20th issue. Under the heading "Among Exhibitors," I noticed the statement that a theater is being erected in North Union Ave., Pueblo, Colo., by Frank Taylor for the Orpheum Circuit. This is an error, as my father and myself are to be the proprietors of this house, which we will run as a first-class moving picture theater. The operating room will be of reinforced concrete, instead of iron. My experience is that when iron is used the noises are too greatly magnified."

We heartily agree with you that reinforced concrete is far, far superior to iron (which, by the way, is as poor a fireproof material as can be used for operating room walls), and would be glad to have a detailed description of the method of construction, when convenient.

ROSE RING SPROCKET.—Mr. J. E. Boyle, Proprietor Dreamland Theater, 530 Main Street, Dubuque, Iowa, writes: "I am sending, for your inspection, a "Rose Ring Sprocket," which I am placing on the market as per my display advertisement in the "World." You will please note the accuracy of workmanship in this device, the shape of the teeth, etc. Lubin has had the exclusive sale of this sprocket in the past, and has never had a complaint against it. The spun brass teeth, by actual test, wears as long as steel, and does not wear so much in a hook shape. These sprockets are made for 7-32, 8-32 and 9-32 shafts, and are furnished with collars, as required, for various machines. They are used by Mr. Rothapfel in his Minneapolis Theater. I want you to see this sprocket so that in case of inquiry you would be in a position to reply intelligently."

Friend Boyle has taken the right course. I have already had a few inquiries as to this sprocket, though not very many as yet. There are very few appliances put out concerning which I do not receive letters of inquiry. I have carefully examined this sprocket, and while I cannot say positively as to the wearing qualities of its teeth, I certainly can vouch for the excellence of the workmanship put into it. The sprocket is mechanically well made, and I see no reason in the world why it should not work perfectly. The removal and insertion of the tooth ring is a very simple operation indeed. The sample sent me was not intended for use as an intermittent sprocket. I don't know whether Friend Boyle makes a sprocket designed for intermittent use. In fact, I doubt if it could be done, since there must necessarily be considerable metal in the two hubs, and this would, I believe, make the sprocket too heavy for that purpose. My judgment is that for a top or bottom sprocket, the Rose Ring would work perfectly. If Friend Boyle will send stamps, I will return the sprocket to him.

FROM ATLANTA.—Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I am a constant reader of the Projection Department, and fully realize the benefit to be obtained through its columns. I am an operator, but, after reading the department, I have a feeling that I am really only a "crank turner," for I find something in the department every week which gives me better ideas on the projection of moving pictures. Recently, there appeared in the department an article on the fast running of a picture, which I think was a corker. I hope all of the managers and operators, especially in this city, read it, and take a special note of it. There are a number of theaters in Atlanta where you can see a thousand feet of film in from ten to eleven minutes. In one place, the "Alamo," the manager has a regular schedule for its operator to run by. In several places it calls for ten-minute pictures. I would like to see a whole page of talk to the managers about the handling of operators. I think it would do some good and I believe your department is the only place in which they would pay much attention to it."

As regards your thinking yourself only a "crank turner," because you learn something every week, I will say that I, too, then am merely a "crank turner," since I would account that week as lost in which I did not learn something. The man who lets a week pass over his head without learning something about his business is either too shiftless to learn, or else he has not the right kind of filling in the top of his head. I am sorry indeed to hear such report from Atlanta. I have published your words because if they are not true, they will promptly be disputed, and if they are true, then I am perfectly willing to make Atlanta feel ashamed of herself. Running an ordinary reel of film in ten or eleven minutes is not projection. It comes nearer being a breach of the peace. If audiences who pay their good money to see a "show" of this kind, realize how they are being swindled, there would be probably a breach of the peace in reality. If Atlanta is really doing anything of this kind, it is high time her ways be mended. As to a talk to managers, why my dear boy, I have talked to them to some extent pretty nearly every week. But I think I know what you mean, and in due course of time, doubtless, you will see something of the kind in these columns.

OPPOSED TO THE I. A. T. S. E.—From Columbus, Ohio, came a letter, which has been hanging on my "not yet answered" hook for a month. I have looked at it several times, and have put it back, not quite satisfied to ignore it, and not quite satisfied to give it attention. However, I cannot pass it by without comment. The Columbus friend expends 22 pages in what seems to be a general roast on the I. A. T. S. E., and he seems to have the idea that I also am opposed to that organization. I am sorry indeed if anything I have said has been thus misconstrued. I am by no manner of means opposed to the I. A. T. S. E.—to Aux. L. U. No. 35 of which I belong. I am, however, opposed to certain laws on the books which apply to operators, though intended for stage hands, and I am also strenuously opposed to certain acts, or rather lack of acts, on the part of the I. A. T. S. E., as applied to operators. I hold that it is but right that I should publicly point out those mistakes on the part of the organization. I hold that it is an act of true friendliness thus to do, and I would be lacking in moral courage if I feared to take the stand which I have as regards these matters; but let it be clearly understood that this does not by any manner of means mean that I am opposed to the organization. I think, myself, that it would probably be better were the operators organized into an independent international organization, but that, however, is not the condition The operators are organized in and under the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees, and until such time as they, if they ever do, sever this connection, we must confine our efforts to remedying the faults within that organization—that is to say, its faults as applied to operators. What I mean by this is that the laws and rules of the organization were made to fit the condition of stage employees. Naturally, when we come to apply these same rules and laws to operators, we find they do not fit perfectly, and that certain changes are necessary from the operators' point of view, one of which is the "six months' law," as at present applied. A remedy was recently suggested to a Milwaukee brother, and I hope something similar will be adopted by the next convention. The friend in Columbus expends several of the said pages in pointing out the disadvantage of affiliation of the stage employees, the principal point made being that it gives the stage employee opportunity to butt into the operator's game, when business in his line is slack. I don't think there is very much in this, but granting even that there is, it must be conceded that advantages are also gained through the I. A. T. S. E. affiliation. It is somewhat of a complicated proposition, but I have faith to believe that time will settle all these various questions, and settle them right. Meanwhile, let us do all we can through the organization our lot is at present cast with.

BOWLING GREEN, Y. M. C. A.—The Bowling Green, Ky., Y. M. C. A. has just purchased and installed something like $500 worth of projection machinery, consisting of two Power Six machines and inductors. This fact is mentioned as showing the importance attached by such organizations to the projection of animated photography. No doubt, these machines will be used to project films of an educational, religious and semi-religious character—thus, from the point of view of the organization, serving a double purpose. When an organization such as the Y. M. C. A. in a comparatively small city like Bowling Green, will expend the sum of $500 for projection machinery, it is useless for the pulpit to rail against moving pictures, and condemn and denounce them with a blanket condemnation. We are glad to say, however, that there are to-day but few preachers so prejudiced and so blind to the advancement of the times as to continue occupying such an absurd and ridiculous position. The pulpit is coming to very generally recognize the value of the moving picture, and to so qualify its condemnation as to make it apply only to those of questionable character, in the denunciation of which we all heartily join with them.

LEGAL FOOLISHNESS.—Some good friend sends in a clipping from a daily paper, the "Metropolis," Jacksonville, Fla., the heading of which announces the fact that "moving picture operators face strenuous laws." "Bill introduced by Councilman Peller requires examinations before licenses are given. Measure purely protective. Operators of machines must conform to strict rules of watchfulness when occupying booths in theaters."

A very pretentious heading indeed. According to the "Metropolis," the law itself is as follows:

> The most important parts of the proposed ordinance are as follows:
> Section 2.—All operators of moving picture machines must be licensed and of a legal age. Before issuing a license to any operator his habits shall be carefully inquired into and an examination of him shall be made by the Chief of the Fire Department and the Fire Committee of the City Council as to his qualifications and fitness for such position.
> Section 3.—All licenses for operators of moving picture ma> chines shall be issued by the Chief of the Fire Department and the Fire Committee of the City of Jacksonville.

> Section 4.—Operators of moving picture machines shall be held strictly accountable for the safety of the establishment where employed, and for the people who attend the performance. The machine must be in a first-class condition and must not be operated except in a fireproof booth equipped with sand, water and fire extinguisher. Faulty films are not to be used, and all extra films are to be kept in metal boxes. Smoking in booth is absolutely prohibited. No one shall be allowed in the operator's booth except his assistant, the operator being held responsible for the actions of his assistant while absent from the booth.
> Section 5.—It shall not be lawful to rewind one film while the operator is showing another. In case of an accident the operator shall throw off the lamphouse and then throw on the house lights. The operator shall not read while cranking a machine. Before showing a film publicly he shall carefully examine it. If sprocket holes are torn or worn he shall mend the film. If the film is in poor condition he shall discard it altogether. All loose pieces of celluloid films shall be kept in a tin box, and carbon thrown in the sand pail.
> Section 6.—An operator's license shall be immediately revoked if he is caught smoking or shall have a fire or accident due to his carelessness. Rheostats or rheostaticides must rest on asbestos, stone, or brick at least six inches above the floor. The wires from the switch to the lamphouse to be kept covered with serviceable asbestos. Under no circumstances shall less than thirty-five amperes of electricity be used, and the fuses never heavier than fifty amperes.
> Section 7.—Be it further ordained, That violation of any regulation or provisions of this ordinance shall be punishable, upon conviction in the Municipal Court of the City of Jacksonville, by a fine not exceeding $50 or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or by both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of this court.
> Section 9.—Be it further ordained, That all ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with this ordinance are hereby repealed.

In the first place, we note that under Section 2 the operator is to be examined by the Chief of the Fire Department and the Fire Committee of the City Council, as to his qualifications and fitness as operator of a moving picture machine. I would respectfully suggest that before this is done, some competent authority examine the Chief of the Fire Department and the Fire Committee of the City Council of Jacksonville, and determine whether or not they are competent to judge of the qualifications of an operator, carefully investigating as to how much they know about practical projection. Unless they are thoroughly conversant with practical operating room practice, I would imagine that their examination of operators must be somewhat similar to a carpenter undertaking to examine a doctor as to his qualifications to practice medicine. Most certainly, as a matter of plain every-day common sense, such an examination board should contain at least one practical electrician, and one man thoroughly conversant with operating room practice—that is to say, a practical moving picture operator. Section 4, according to the "Metropolis," makes the operator strictly accountable for the safety of the establishment in which he is employed, as well as for the people who attend the performances. The machine must not be operated except in a fireproof "booth" equipped with sand, water and a fire extinguisher. Faulty films are not to be used, etc., etc. What justice is there in holding an operator responsible for the safety of an audience and the safety of the house, when neither the one thing or the other is within his control, except to a very limited extent? Supposing the operator finds an unsafe condition, is he going to have the fault remedied at his own expense? Is he in a position to force the manager to have it remedied? Most emphatically, no, to each one of the questions. If he attempted to force the manager to remedy the unsafe condition, or reported it to the Fire Committee, I can imagine about how long that operator would last. He would be fired so quickly that it would make him dizzy, and all the Fire Committees and officials who ever lived could not prevent it. And who is going to decide what is a "faulty film?" Pray, tell me. Also unless the Jacksonville managers are of a different breed from those in other cities, there are likely to be some very spirited disputes as to whether or not a machine is in "first class condition." Then, too, the utter absurdity of allowing an operator an assistant, and then holding him responsible for the acts of that assistant, while he is perhaps away to dinner or supper. Truly, Section 4 sets forth a lot of very questionable legal effort, and we trust that Alderman Peller did not overstrain himself in its compilation. In case of accident we read in Section 5 the operator shall "throw off the lamphouse" and throw on the house lights. Doubtless this is a case of misreading on the part of the reporter who examined the ordinance. If, however, it is the way the ordinance reads, let us hope he does not "throw off the lamphouse" too hard, because a lamphouse costs money and we would not want to get it "busted" up too frequently. We read, also, in Section 5, that before showing a film publicly, he shall carefully examine it and shall mend the film if sprocket holes are torn or worn. If the film is in poor condition, he shall discard it altogether. It will take an operator two hours at least, to carefully examine and put in good condition four reels of ordinary film. Who is going to pay him for this? The Fire Committee or the Chief of the Fire Department? You can bet your everlasting life the average manager won't do it. Mayhap the estimable Alderman proposes to saddle the poor operator with this duty without any pay at all, in which case I can only remark "fine!" The committee might also, since it has already placed the duty of about everything else, except taking in the money, on the operator, make him do that, too, and then he would be the whole show.

But why comment further on this kind of piffle. It is, of course, quite possible that the "Metropolis" has garbled the whole thing, and perhaps it may not be quite so bad as appears from the clipping. In any event, however, it seems to contain about two either foolish or bad requirements, to every one which is good. The "Metropolis" says that the bill was prepared under the advice of operators and managers of "picture play houses." We don't believe a word of this. Certainly the managers would not willingly stand for some of the provisions, and I don't believe Jacksonville operators are foolish enough to approve of any such piece of legal idiocy as the foregoing.

TRANSFORMER.—Eau Claire, Wis., writes: "If it is convenient to do so, and as a favor to me and other operators who run the Champion film, will you kindly find out what the trouble is with their lens, camera or stock. I refer to the releases a "Cure for Divorce," "Thou Shalt Not," and several others I have run lately. The objects in the center are in a way out of focus, and I can imagine, and sometimes see, my audience turn around and say, 'Gee, what a bum operator.' As I run my Union slide on the screen before the show, this is embarrassing to me, to the manager and to the Union. Some time ago, I noticed a brother who wrote in concerning the film of another manufacturer, which jumped. You gave the matter publicity, commented on the same, and very shortly afterward the jumping stopped. While I am on this subject, let me say that the titles of the Eclair film, "Brooms and Dustpans," were so dark, one could hardly read them, as were also the sub-titles. We use 55 amperes through a H. & H. compensarc, have a Power Six, 72 feet throw, and a 16-foot 9-inch picture. Have a poor screen, but will have a new one next week. Which, in your opinion, do you consider best, the mercury arc rectifier or a motor-generator set? Is it possible to get a transformer to cut 110 volts down to the arc voltage? If so what are the dealers' addresses? We have five theaters in this city; three use Licensed service and two Independent."

I have taken this matter up with the head of the company manufacturing the Champion film and, to his credit, he frankly acknowledged the fault. It lay in the lens of the camera, and was not discovered until the releases taken with that camera were ready for distribution. He assured me that the fault had been eliminated and that it would not appear again. The thing was unfortunate, but I am always inclined to be lenient with him who frankly admits a fault—at least much more lenient than with the man, who, while he knows the trouble exists, denies it. Your query concerning rectifiers and motor generator sets cannot for obvious reasons be answered in these columns. Yes, the N. Power, Edison, American Machine Co., or Mr. J. H. Hallberg can supply you with such a transformer. See advertising columns for addresses.

TROUBLE REMEDIED.—Crossett, Ark, writes: "Your answer to our inquiry, April 6th issue, regarding torn film, was correct. I would have communicated with you sooner, but wanted to give the information suggested by you a thorough trial. We found that emulsion on the tension spring was, as you suggested, the seat of our trouble. We occasionally run a film never previously put through a machine, and the emulsion gathers on the tension springs as hard as flint, hence the torn film. Have examined the apron as Indianapolis suggested, and find that as you stated in April 20 issue, film doesn't touch at that point. However, I appreciate our brother's interest in our troubles which, however, have been entirely overcome, thanks to the Projection Department. I don't really see how the small exhibitor can possibly get along without your hand-book. We find it our "Bible" in every respect, and it has been our salvation many, many times. In regard to condenser breakage I would like to say something on it, but I shall steer away, as I might make you laugh, as did our brother from Colorado Springs, when he mentioned a "film house." I guess I will stop, now, lest you think by the length of this, I am attempting to write a 'Mary J. Holmes' novel."

I am glad to know your trouble has been remedied. Would suggest that you don't remove the emulsion with a steel instrument, but use a wet cloth. Water softens emulsion very quickly. A silver coin is all right also, but a steel instrument will most likely scratch the spring and thus aggravate the trouble.

SPOT LIGHT.—Seattle, Wash., writes: "Will you please publish description of an up-to-date spot light; also how do they obtain the different colors?"

Seattle will find this question answered on page 331, April 27th issue. But why all this excitement about spot light out in the Western city?

FLYWHEEL, BELTING, ETC.—Anadarko, Okla., writes: "I note your taking exception to operators belting their motor to flywheel of machine. Now I, like Mr. Hayward, of Dalton, Ga., have used an old fan motor, hooking it up direct to flywheel of a Powers Six. My reason for so doing is that in getting any reels that I am dubious about I like to run them over by hand first, and by putting my pulley on crank shaft it would make things a bit unhandy. While speaking about motors, want to say this: In the two months that I have had my motor on there has never been a foot of film run through my machine except that either myself or my father (who has been helping me now for about five months) sat on the stool beside the machine, not because I like to confine myself so much, but I don't like to allow my machine to do my thinking. Say, just what does 'Good Work—Indiana' (April 20 issue), mean, when he says, 'Have an operator who has run 18 months without a shutdown, and only one stop of four minutes in that time?' Does he really mean he has not had a stop in 18 months? According to his way of reckoning, I haven't had a shutdown in three years. Does that apply also to Tucson, Ariz.? As to Galveston; just took a condenser out of my lamphouse that had big half moon in the center; his remedy wouldn't do much good in that case, would it? Now I, like Salem, Ind., am having trouble with a flame running around my upper carbon. I have a Powers lamp, D. C., using ⅝ soft cored carbon in top, ⅜ Electra solid in bottom. A flame starts at one side of the carbon and runs clear around. It happens at any and all times. You said not to use city carbons. This city uses Electras. Is there any difference in the grades of them?"

As regards your reasons for belting to the flywheel, they are not good; hence your apology is not accepted, Anadarko. The Power Company furnish a special motor-drive. You can, however, put a pulley on the crank shaft, having the same of a radius equal to the crank, and, near its rim, place a handle similar to the crank handle. You will then have a pulley and crank combined, and the crank part will work just as good as would the regular crank. As stated before, my objection to flywheel belting is that it places a heavy additional strain on the bearing which already is subjected to the heaviest wear of any bearing in the machine, and this usually, sooner or later, sets up trouble. If all operators did as you do my objection to motor drives would no longer exist. Only a few days ago, I went into a house here in New York City, where motor drive is used. I was standing down below, when the operator spied me, and he stood in the door of the room, at least six feet from where he should have been beside the machine, and talked to me for three or four minutes, while the motor did the operating, such as it was. Twice he stepped over to the machine, hastily adjusting the light. Before he did this, however, I called his attention to the fact that there was a shadow creeping up on his picture. I would like as well as anybody to see the operator relieved of the tedious labor of grinding the machine, but I absolutely will not give my approval to motor drives until such time as some effective scheme has been adopted compelling the operator to remain at his post while the machine is running. As to Indiana and Tucson, I guess they will have to answer for themselves. Galveston's condenser breakage remedy I have no doubt would be of considerable value, and I believe it to be well worth a tryout, but that it will stop condenser breakage entirely—nothing doing. The only way to accomplish that particular feat, in my humble opinion, would be to reduce the heat to which the back lens is subjected. As to the carbon flaming, perhaps you are using a carbon altogether too hard. Street light carbons are much harder than projection carbons. The manufacturers of Electra carbons undoubtedly make street light carbons also; whether they are branded "Electra" or not, I cannot say. I think your trouble will cease if you secure the regular Electra projection carbons from your exchange.

IN ERROR.—St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I see, April 20th issue, where the brother of Local Union 194, Indianapolis, Ind., tried to explain to you the difficulty the brother of Crossett, Ark., has encountered; also gave a remedy for the same. I wish to say that the trouble is not in the machine at all. It is not caused, as the Indianapolis brother supposed, by the apron. I run a Motiograph and have the same difficulty, with certain films only, viz.: the Pathe, C. G. P. C. and Cines. The reason for this is that they make their patches backwards, so that the ends catch on the moving parts of the machine. Attached hereto, you will find sample of patches which will better explain what I mean. I hope you will try to have this matter remedied."

In the first place, brother, the sample of film you sent is neither a Pathe, C. G. P. C. or a Cines. It is instead a Kalem. Also the two patches shown are not manufacturers' patches, but patches made by an operator and with very, very poor cement. The patches are not strong and moreover they curl badly, and are exceedingly stiff; also the film cracks along the edge of the patch, due to the latter's stiffness and to the injury worked to the celluloid by the cement. As to the Pathe patches being made backwards: I do not remember which way the Pathe people make their patches, but, I am satisfied to accept their way as the right way, since they have had more experience in that matter than perhaps anyone else. I would consider them as being as high an authority as we could have on the right way to make a film splice. My own idea is that a patch should be made so that the top end comes behind the lower end. I find that one of the patches in the sample you sent, is made that way, and the other is made the other way, so I guess, after all, St. Louis, you are a little twisted in your data, and will have to explain just a little more clearly what you mean.

COMMUTATORS.—Atlanta, Ga., writes: "I have noticed recently several letters concerning commutators, and some good advice concerning them has been offered. I agree, however, with the writer who says "hands off" unless there is a reason. Too many like to play with trouble so well that they are continually and forever having trouble. I know of one operator here in Atlanta who has been using a Ft. Wayne motor-generator set for thirteen months and only changed the brushes once. He has had no trouble at all with the machine. I attribute this to the fact that he is not always trying the tension first on this brush, then on that one; and is not always down with a piece of sandpaper trying to find a rough place on the commutator. The machine gets oiled once every day. Its commutators are cleaned with a piece of cheese cloth, perhaps sometimes with a little vaseline on it, once every week. I would like to say for the Ft. Wayne motor-generator set that it is a most excellent device. The set in question has been in use for thirteen months, thirteen hours a day, and six days a week. It is, however, in the hands of an operator who is not eternally tinkering with it. He doesn't bother it, and it never bothers him. There is nothing in continually tinkering with a motor just for the experience. It doesn't pay with a moving picture mechanism either. The most common troubles experienced with M. G. sets is sparking at the commutator. This is not usually objectionable if moderate in duration and amount; but if allowed to continue beyond these limits it will burn and roughen the commutator, thus setting up other troubles, or at least encouraging them. Sparking may be caused by several things, viz.: brushes not being set at the neutral point, poor brush contact (due largely to insufficient tension) or the commutator may have some high bars. To find the neutral point, or position, carefully shift the brushes backward and forward until sparking is reduced, or stopped. But in doing this, you will have to be careful not to reduce or increase the speed too much. If there are high bars on the commutator, I would advise operator to turn the matter over to a competent repair man. When you undertake to do things to a commutator, be sure as to what you can and what you can not do. Do not experiment! I believe the idea of the Powers Co., in putting out their first No. 6, without an intermittent adjustment was to prevent the operator from tinkering with it, and attempting to make adjustments without adequate knowledge. I know of one of those non-adjustable Power machines that is still running, and giving excellent results, and I accept it as a lesson to let the adjustment of a Power machine alone. As long as I can get a steady picture, I do not care how much play there is in the intermittent. However, of course, you will have to keep as much play as possible out of the shutter shaft, and keep down the back lash."

I have printed the Atlanta brother's letter because it presents one of two extremes. I imagine that the brother means all right, but the way he says it conveys the impression that he does not believe in the operator doing anything to his machine or to a commutator. What he really means is that the operator should not be forever monkeying with the thing and should be contented to let it alone as long as it is giving the desired results. In this I heartily agree with him. It is a fact that a great deal of trouble is caused by operators attempting to do things when there really is no necessity that anything should be done. If you have a good steady picture on the screen, it does not matter, as the Atlanta brother says, how much play there is in the intermittent movement. It is results on the screen that count. If your commutator and brushes are running nicely and everything is as it should be, then there is no earthly sense of monkeying, or fooling with that commutator. Let well enough alone! On the other hand, however, it is quite necessary and likely important that the operator know how to remedy difficulties when they do occur. You are correct in supposing that the idea of the Power Co. in putting out that non-adjustable intermittent movement, was to prevent the operator from making adjustments, but it was quickly discovered that an adjustment was vitally necessary, and the fact that one machine has given satisfactory service all this time without any adjustment has not proved that other machines would do the same thing, in fact, they have not. It is essential that the operator understands how to make the adjustments and make them properly when they become necessary. That was the idea which brought forth the photographic instructions on the various machines, three of which have already been published and two more of which are nearly ready. I am very glad to have the report of the Ft. Wayne set. Up to date, for some reason or other, neither the users nor the manufacturers of that machine have taken any pains whatever, to inform me as to its performance, therefore, I have been unable to recommend it to anyone. This is the second report I have had on that device.

POWER'S SIX TROUBLE.—Waco, Tex., writes: "I received much information from the department, and now refer to you a little matter which is in dispute, viz.: When a Power 6 machine is framed all the way down, and the shutter is in perfect time, is it possible that it will make any difference when it is framed all the way up? Will it show travel ghost either up or down from titles, or sub-titles? If so, kindly explain why. We have a 34 foot throw and an 18 foot picture with a special ground short distance lens. Use 30 amperes, through a mercury arc rectifier taken from 110 volt, 220 cycle current."

A Powers 6 may show no travel ghost when the carriage is clear down and show travel ghost when the carriage is clear up, or vice versa. This is due to the fact that the gears shift slightly in framing. If the gears of your machine are not worn, set your carriage either clear up, and then, while framing it down slowly, watch gear 680, plate 3, Jan. 6 issue, and you will see it move slightly. That is the answer. If the gears are worn, gear 680 may not move, but the relation of the shutter to lens is altered just the same.

RAINEY AFRICAN PICTURES MAKING GOOD.

Our gumshoe man, Sherlocko, dropped into the New York Lyceum Theater recently, unbeknownst to the management or to Mr. Jack Hemment, the photo-lecturer. There was found a large and seemingly breathless audience. Apart from the spokesman's voice there was not the faintest trace of sound, not even a cough, or the clearing of a throat. One might have supposed it were a clinic where so delicate a surgical operation were in progress that a cough might spoil everything. Such was the interest in the Paul Rainey Jungle Pictures that were being exhibited on the screen.

The most lasting impression to be gained from these pictures is that one touch of nature makes the whole world kin. Spontaneous applause at frequent intervals showed that the entire audience was kin. They were as one person in their tribute to nature. The ordinary movements of the jungle beasts carried with them the greatest interest. The assemblage of the various species at the water hole is a touch of nature that would fill the Mongol, the Turk, the Tuscan, the peon, the cockney, or the Eskimo with the same interest were they seated side by side at this exhibition. The whole world is kin in witnessing the Rainey pictures, and that is why they will in all probability be popular all over the world.

There was a ten-minute intermission, during which men gathered in the lobby to smoke. Everybody was "boosting." They gathered together in little knots and told each other what a good show it was. If there is anything sweet to a manager's ear, it is to hear an audience "boosting" a show when they come out. It is too bad that Mr. Rainey or Mr. Hemment could not have heard it. The audience could easily be considered as being of high class. We opine that among those present were quite a few out-of-town managers who have developed the habit of coming to New York occasionally to see what new features are to be booked or bought. The Rainey pictures will continue to be exhibited at the Lyceum for a few more weeks. A similar exhibition of the same pictures begins in Philadelphia May 6th for four weeks.

HANDY HOUSE ORGAN.

The Kansas City Slide Company is issuing a comprehensive little booklet weekly which is called "Slide News." This pamphlet consists of 20 pages of information about slides and should be quite valuable as a business getter. It is published every month and takes the place of the catalog formerly published by the same company. If interested in slide information get your name on the K. C. Slide Co.'s mailing list.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"A GAME OF BLUFF" (Nestor).

The Nestor comedy entitled "A Game of Bluff" will receive a unanimous vote of approval by the followers of the voiceless plays. The plot of the story is one that will hold one's attention. With Russell Bassett as one of the bluffers, Lee Moran as the other, and Vivian Rich as the reason for the bluffing, without mentioning the excellency of the photography, the play is one which will be universally popular.

In the first place, "Aleck," portrayed by Lee Moran, who is the younger and more inexperienced man, is not really a fortune-hunter, but on learning that the girl to whom he has lost his heart is an heiress, he conveniently recalls the maxim that "All's fair in love and war" and decides to cast his scruples aside. So, on presenting himself to the father (Russell Bassett), he professes himself as being a young man of great wealth, much to the delight of that fond parent.

Scene from "A Game of Bluff" (Nestor).

Circumstances arise, however, which compel Aleck to show more material signs of his great riches, his father-in-law-to-be suggesting that he and his daughter visit Aleck on their return to the city, so it's up to our friend Aleck to make good his bluff and he hastens to fix up an apartment worthy of so wealthy an occupant. Aleck's salary is nearly $15 per, so he is compelled to resort to the plebeian but convenient method of obtaining furniture $1 down and $1 a week, and in less than no time we see Aleck complacently sitting in the luxuriously furnished apartment, awaiting the arrival of his guests.

Papa is delighted with our hero's home, and as Aleck has decided he really loves Grace, notwithstanding the fact that she may be heiress to a few million dollars, the suggestion that they marry at once is made by papa. Aleck, however, is inclined to get cold feet at this juncture, but the persistency of the father of his loved one finally gains the consent of Aleck and a minister soon arrives to make the happy couple one.

After the departure of papa, Grace confesses the bitter truth to Aleck—that father is but a poor bookkeeper in a furniture store, but Aleck doesn't care. When papa gets back to the furniture store the next morning and sees Aleck's name entered on the books, he does care and hastens to his son-in-law's apartments. The birds have flown—to the Cupid apartments, and he hurries there with anger in his heart. When he confronts Aleck and accuses him of his deceit, Aleck calmly shows him the card which he had presented to Aleck on their first meeting, reading: "Willis Smithson, Capitalist," and the old man is forced to admit he was as much of a schemer as the young man, so they decide they are quits, and Aleck and Grace finally receive the old man's blessing. This comedy will be released May 11.

"THE THESPIAN BANDIT" (Nestor).

The Thespian Bandit, the Nestor release for Wednesday, May 8th, is one of the funniest Western comedies ever produced by the Nestor Film Co. Besides the theme of the play being so humorous, the splendid acting of Jack Conway as "The Thespian Bandit" helps considerably toward making this farce so entertaining. A screamingly funny scene is shown where three actors, having decided to beat their passage to California to join a moving-picture company, are discovered on top of a freight car by a brakeman, who takes Harry's hat and coat, in lieu of cash. This, however, is the least of Harry's troubles, for on the arrival of the three followers of Thespis in California, hungry and without the wherewithal with which to purchase food, they decide that quick action is necessary. Observing a poster announcing that $1,000 reward is offered for the capture of the bandit, "Black Bill," Harry's two friends conceive the idea of fixing him up to look like the bandit and thus get the reward. Harry's strenuous objections are of no avail and in a few minutes, poor Harry's resemblance to the picture on the poster is without question. The boys' plan is nipped in the bud, however, by the arrival of the bandit himself, who, seeing the feasibility of the idea, takes possession of Harry himself, and hands him to the sheriff. The bandit, however, is recognized, and the reward goes to Harry, who joyfully returns East, leaving his companions to foot it.

"THE TEN OF DIAMONDS" (Nestor).

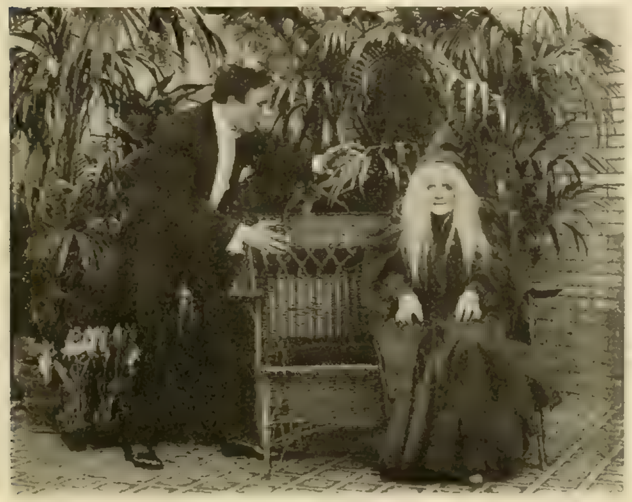
Besides being a wonderfully interesting subject, there is a splendid moral attached to "The Ten of Diamonds." Vivian Rich and Sydney Ayres handle the most difficult acting in a very capable manner. A father, observing his son's growing weakness for cards, decides to check him by relating his own sad experience, and the picture takes us back some twenty years before, when the boy's father and mother were just starting to battle life together. It shows the father's fondness for gambling and the ultimate result—poverty; and how, in the end, the father's manhood asserted itself and he swore never to touch cards again. The boy, realizing what serious results may be the outcome of his now harmless pleasure, promises his father that he, too, will be a stranger to cards in the future. This uplifting drama will commence preaching its potent sermon on Monday, May 6th.

NESTOR NOT BOUGHT BY MUTUAL.

Owing to rumors that the Nestor Film Manufacturing Company has been bought by the Mutual Film Corporation, Mr. David Horsely has requested that we publish his emphatic denial that the Nestor Company has undergone no change whatever, either in management or ownership. Mr. Horsely also states that, so far as he is concerned, the Nestor Company will stick to the Sales Company as long as there is any Sales Company to stick to. Mr. Horsely is now on his way to California, but will return to New York in June. With him is Mr. Wesley Gilmour, who goes to the coast to assume the general managership of the Nestor studio at Los Angeles. Mr. Gilmour is widely and favorably known in the moving picture business. It is the intention of the Nestor Company to release only two Western pictures a week instead of three as heretofore. Their third release from now on will be in the form of domestic dramas, released on Mondays.

"THE PUPPET'S HOUR" (Lubin).

"The Puppet's Hour," which the Lubin Co. will release early in May, is a fantastic idea with, however, an excellent moral. It is intended to suggest that a girl's beauty (though admirable) is not the sterling quality to be sought by man to insure perfect happiness. The fantasy is illustrated as a fairy tale. The puppets in a Toy Shop are permitted one hour of life, to see the old year out and the New Year in. Most of the dolls are wonderfully pretty and the one called the Society Puppet is an exceptional beauty; she pleads that she may spend her hour of life in the Society world, and this is granted provided that she returns on the stroke of twelve. If, however, she fails to return she will turn into a wretched old crone. She plays her role well, and quickly attracts the attention of a rich young swell who becomes enamored and forgets his excellent sweetheart who, though extremely good, is not a beauty. The Society Doll is so entranced by attention and sweet words that she forgets the hour and the would be lover finds that he is embracing a withered hag. The costuming of the photoplay is rich and fantastic, and the scenic settings very realistic, especially so the toy shop, which is filled with toys and puppets to make glad the hearts of children on the New Year.



Scene from "The Puppet's Hour" (Lubin).

JOHNS-MANVILLE CO. IN LARGER QUARTERS.

The executive offices and New York show rooms of the H. W. Johns-Manville Co., manufacturers of asbestos, magnesia and electrical supplies, were moved on April 20th to the new twelve-story "H. W. Johns-Manville Building," Madison Avenue and 41st Street, New York City, from their old quarters at 100 William Street, where they have been located for the past 15 years.

This move marks the 54th anniversary of the company. Under the name of H. W. Johns Manufacturing Co., the business was conducted at 87 Maiden Lane previous to May 1st, 1897, when it was moved to 100 William Street. In 1901 the firm name was changed to H. W. Johns-Manville Co., a consolidation being effected between the Manville Covering Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., and H. W. Johns Mfg. Co. This last combination brought together two of the largest manufacturers of pipe and boiler coverings, packings, roofings, etc., in the world, and the growth of the company since that time has been almost phenomenal.

They now have factories located in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Milwaukee, Wis.; West Milwaukee, Wis.; Hartford, Conn.; Nashua, N. H.; Lockport, N. Y., and Newark, N. J., with an asphalt refinery at South Amboy, N. J.; and extensive asbestos mines at Danville in the Province of Quebec, Canada, which are the largest in existence and produce an exceptionally fine grade of asbestos. They also have a branch house in every city of any size in the United States and Canada, as well as representatives in about all foreign countries.

In the new quarters the company will have the distinction of being one of the few manufacturing concerns which occupy an entire twelve-story office building. In its entirety, the company now occupies over 2,657,160 square feet of floor space or about 61 acres. The employees number approximately 5,000 and there are about 425 salesmen.

Increased business interests in this and other parts of the country have necessitated the move. The large floor area and spacious rooms in the new building will enable a much larger and more complete stock of goods being carried on hand than heretofore, and will also permit of a better supervision over the company's long chain of branch offices, warehouses, stores and factories scattered throughout the United States and Canada.

"THE EYE THAT NEVER SLEEPS" (Essanay).

The Essanay Company announces the first of a great Secret-Service series of photoplays dealing with the many exciting adventures of Howard Mayne, the greatest sleuth of two continents. Francis X. Bushman, the well-known and deservedly popular leading man of the Essanay Eastern Stock Company, has never found a better role than that of Mayne, affording him a wealth of opportunity for sterling characterization and clean cut acting of the highest quality.

Seated in his office, Chief Arnold, of the Secret Service Bureau, is giving vent to his wrath over an article in the morning paper that ridicules his department for not being able to stop a flood of counterfeit $20 bills with which the city is being swindled. "The Eye That Never Sleeps" seems to have become "The Eye that Never Wakes," harps the newspaper, and Arnold summons three of his sleuths in, shows them the article, then one of the counterfeit bills and savagely orders them to round up the perpetrators or he will clean out the department.

Scene from "The Eye That Never Sleeps" (Essanay).

After this scene Chief Arnold decides to put Mayne, his prize detective, on the job. Mayne is called back from his vacation and undertakes the case. How he runs the gang of counterfeiters to cover and effects their arrest is vividly told in the picture. As Mayne, Mr. Francis X. Bushman gives one of the finest characterizations of the many he has played.

Wm. Mason plays his own name-part of "Mason" well, Frank Dayton is splendid as Ayers the counterfeiter, and the gang are portrayed by Messers. Washburn, Cashman, Missimer and Hitchcock. Wm. Walters is effective as the Secret Service Chief.

The picture is booked for release May 14th.

SIMPLEX PROGRESS.

On and after May 1st, the Simplex Agency Office in Fourteenth Street will be discontinued and all business will be transacted from the factory. Owing to the great success of the Simplex, double the space has been taken in the factory building and splendid offices have been constructed adjoining the factory.

Reception rooms, exhibition rooms, experimental rooms, etc., together with a larger space for office help, makes it much more convenient to consolidate the Sales agency with the factory. All correspondence from now on should be addressed to the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317-323 East Thirty-Fourth Street, New York City.

"UNCLE AND NEPHEW" (Great Northern).

"Uncle and Nephew" is an exceptionally strong story dealing with illicit love which is checked in a most tragic manner for the guilty parties, and the forgiving nature of the injured husband stands out in vivid contrast.

Professor Steinfeldt, well along in years, has a handsome young wife who is quite susceptible to flattery. Carl, a nephew of the professor, comes to live with them. Steinfeldt is engrossed in the work of experimenting and spends a greater portion of his time in his laboratory pursuing scientific researches, leaving his wife and his relative to their own diversions. The daily contact is fatal and the wife falls in love with the handsome young man. While the professor is engaged in experimenting, there is a love scene between the two young people. Steinfeldt returns to the parlor for some forgotten article, parts the curtain and sees his wife in the arms of the nephew. He is furious, but withdraws quietly and they are unaware of his presence. The guilty conscience of the nephew troubles him and he goes to the laboratory of his uncle. The older man is a keen reader of character. He fondles a tube and informs his nephew that it contains a deadly poison. He drinks from a glass and leaves a portion of the water in the receptacle upon leaving the room.

Scene from "Uncle and Nephew" (Great Northern).

Carl thinks only of his infatuation for the wife and is desperate. He resolves to poison his uncle and pours poison in the glass. The uncle returns and the wife enters. It is a tragic moment. The uncle dextrously throws the poisoned water out of the glass and refills it. He drinks of the contents and the agony of the nephew is pitiful to behold. . He is sure he has been instrumental in causing the death of his relative. Steinfeldt offers the glass to the wife, who is faint, and the nephew dashes the cup from his hand and the wife learns intuitively of his purpose. Carl leaves the room and the erring wife is contrite. She feels the hideousness of the affair and sees Carl in his true light. The contrast convinces her and she goes to the husband and he—wise and knowing the cure is complete—takes her in his arms and they are happy.

"FATHER BEAUCLAIRE" (Reliance).

The atmosphere of the church breathes throughout this well-acted picture, and the work of Mr. Hal Reid as Father Beauclaire stands out above the field. Mr. Reid is at his best in portraying ecclesiastical roles, having done such parts in notable religious pictures on a number of occasions, notably in "Cardinal Wolsey" by the Vitagraph Company. That Mr. Reid is sincere no one can deny, and it does not seem possible that he is other than pious in doing work of this character.

The case of Father Beauclaire is a well-known episode in the history of the Catholic Church; and how he gave his life to keep sacred the secrets of the confessional. He had his charge in a wild and lawless part of France that was given over, in a great measure, to brigandage. One day a murderer came to confess a crime recently committed and receive absolution, which was granted by Father Beauclaire. The crime, however. was of such a nature that popular sentiment was aroused against the criminal and measures were taken to apprehend him, whereupon the guilty man turned upon the good priest and accused him of being the murderer, even though the accuser had confessed it but a short time before. Father Beauclaire held the secrets of the confessional to be sacred and above all worldly considerations. He therefore remained mute in the face of this accusation and suffered himself to be led to prison. Under the circumstances he could not defend himself without giving up the secrets of the church. At public trial he was accused of murder, found guilty and sentenced to die on the guillotine.

Scene from "Father Beauclaire" (Reliance).

The great reverence of Father Beauclaire is the dominating note of the entire picture. It is played by Mr. Reid in a masterful manner and played from the heart out. It is impossible not to be impressed with his tender rendition of the gentle Father.

After the execution of Father Beauclaire, the mental sufferings of the murderer are shown, by double exposure, in a very impressive way as he has visions of the devout man whom he caused to go to his doom. This picture will, beyond a doubt, be very popular in church circles, particularly the Church of Rome, to which it pertains mostly. Already the Reliance Company have received a hearty letter of commendation from a well-known New York Father Superior of the Paulist Order advising that every good Catholic should see the picture.

A TRIO OF MAJESTICS.

Majestic offerings for the month of May show a pleasing variety, well balanced as to comedy and drama. The other day we were given a look at a number of them, three of which were especially taking, namely a comedy named "Dogs," and another comedy called "Buncoed," and a highly dramatic offering, entitled "Redeemed." The reviews herewith are given in the order in which the pictures were seen, but that is probably not the order in which they will be released.

"Dogs."

A lively comedy, made particularly interesting by the introduction of a number of fine, large bulldogs and a few clumsy bulldog pups. A suburbanite departs from his home, kissing his wife good-bye and leaving her there alone for the few days that he is to be absent. Hardly has hubby vanished when a hobo applies at the back door for a hand-out. He is treated as every hobo expects to be treated, but oft-times is not, to wit; he is given a large wedge of pie and other delicacies for the inner man. In spite of the tramp's gratitude the young wife (Miss Trunnelle) is badly frightened at the thoughts of what might happen in her husband's absence. At night she thinks of burglars and takes every precaution against them, such as looking under the bed and placing large obstacles of furniture against the doors.

When night comes, the aforesaid tramp, remembering his courteous treatment of the morning, desires to return to the home of hospitality and camp out on a bench that sets by the house. He is discovered there during the night by the apprehensive wife, who, upon the advice of the housemaid, gives him a shower bath from her window above. The next day it is deemed advisable, for their protection, to buy a bulldog. The ladies go to the kennels and rent a whole family of dogs; large ones and small ones—all bulldogs. They are a fine, healthy lot of dogs and very pleasing to look upon, besides which they create considerable amusement by their own natural actions, especially the puppies.

The next day the tramp comes and all the dogs are turned loose at him. But the only thought they have in mind is to play with the tramp. The tramp gets a hand-out from the kitchen and the dogs become interested only in what the tramp has to eat. The picture closes with the hobo feeding the dogs by turns from the large piece of pie in his hand. This picture will surely make a hit because of the dogs and puppies, if for nothing else. The acting is good, but the dogs are the main thing as the title implies.

"Buncoed."

A comedy of rather an original turn. A young woman is stranded in a country town and applies at the hotel for a job as lady clerk. She is told that there is no vacancy, and is therefore in a dilemma. About the hotel are a number of bumpkins, and as the young lady starts for the depot, they all volunteer to carry her grips. As they near the station the girl makes the horrifying discovery that she has lost her money. She tells them that she had a five-dollar bill with the corner of it torn off, but now she is obliged to remain in town until the money is found. All hands are soon back at the hotel, including the girl. After a time it begins to percolate through the brains of some of these bumpkins that a good way to make a hit with her would be to tear the corner off a five-dollar bill and bring it in to the young lady, claiming that it was the one she lost. The humor of the situation can be imagined at once as each of the bumpkins in his turn enters the parlor and informs the young lady that he has found her money. In this way she accumulates quite a tidy sum and manages to get out of town with something to spare. The part of the stranded girl is played by Miss Mabel Trunnelle in charming fashion and the parts of the bumpkins are played by the Majestic comedians without being overdone. Their make-ups in their Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes, as they appear to keep their dates with the adventuress, are funny in the extreme. The reel is sure to get a big laugh wherever it is shown.

Scene from "Buncoed" (Majestic).

"Redeemed."

This is a very dramatic affair and it should be followed by strong comedy, if possible, to ease the mind. It tells of the misfortunes of a young widow, soon after having lost her husband and child. She drifted to the city and fell in with a Bohemian set of artists, through a card that she once received from an artist who was painting in the vicinity of her former home. She tried very hard to maintain her respectability among such company, but the odds were too overwhelming and she fell for the wiles of men and drink, particularly through the encouragement of members of her own sex. She became a popular model, and was much sought after. She seemed to forget her old life, until one day she was induced to pose as a mother in a picture called, "Mother and Child." While posing, holding a baby, memories of her home life came back and overwhelmed her with remorse. Her companions noticed a change in her from that time on. The mother of the child that was used for the picture was dying. The widow went to her and obtained permission to adopt the little one upon her death. From that time on she made it her business to bring up the little one in atonement for her erring ways and as a fulfillment of the motherhood that had been denied her.

"WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN" (Champion).

The saddest words of tongue or pen are not always "what might have been." It transpires in this new Champion offering that things might have been worse. The picture tells a story of woman's fidelity to the idol of her youth that points out the truth of the old saying: "Everything comes to those who wait." In youth she lost her lover. She waited, and in the ripeness of middle age he returned to her, with interest.

Scene from "What Might Have Been" (Champion).

HALLBERG EQUIPPING THEM COMPLETELY.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, the "Economizer Man," reports a splendid increase in business during the past week. He has orders from the Imperial Amusement Co., Paterson, N. J., for one Simplex M. P. machine, one Hallberg 220-volt D. C. Economizer, and a full line of supplies. W. J. Ward, 186th and Washington Ave., the Bronx, has purchased two Edison "Model B" M. P. machines, one Hallberg A. C. Economizer, and full line of supplies. W. J. Waters, Milford, N. J., has bought an Edison "Model B" with Hallberg Economizer. Skidmore's Imperial Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., has purchased one Edison "Model B." Collingwood Opera House, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has bought one Hallberg Special 60-Ampere A. C. to D. C. Economizer.

THE REAL NOBILITY.

The real nobility of man does not lie in such vain and immaterial things as titles. The badge of suffering and courage despite it is the only coat-of-arms worth a thought. A real, human heart and a strong, human soul are worth the aristocracy of all the ancestry in captivity.

The vain, snobbish aristocratic mother in "Drawing the Line," Rex release of Thursday, May 9th, didn't think so, however. Her one object in life, outside of just breathing, was to marry her son to an heiress and her daughter to a nobleman. With the son the matter involved him enough to make a plan or two himself in the premises, and it just happens that his plan did not coincide with that of his mother. That's why there's a story.

Scene from "Drawing the Line" (Rex).

To make a short story keep away from growing up, he married a stage girl, and was ostracized from the family circle. The girl married the earl. The earl and the girl made an awful muddle of life. The earl thought a wife meant nothing but a bank account to be spent on lobsters with fancy dressing and broilers without. Her heart broke, and she returned home with the remnants. Her brother had found happiness and sweet contentment with his actress wife, and in repentant sorrow the mother realized the aged truth that all is not gold that glitters and all not nobles who are titled.

THE INCENDIARY THANHOUSERITES.

They've gone and burned down another! Yes, another house; the one they sacrificed for the film "Flames and Fortune" last May didn't halt the Thanhouser house-burning activities at all. This time, Tuesday afternoon, to be exact, they fed a Jersey structure to the flames for "Jess," their two-reel H. Rider Haggard release of Tuesday, May 28. The scene depicts the destruction of Silas Croft's home. Croft, you will remember, was the uncle of Jess. The blaze proved a thriller and will be a feature of the subject.

AN UNPRECEDENTED RECORD.

The following telegrams received by the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, explain themselves and give credit to the above company, for the fine production they are distributing.

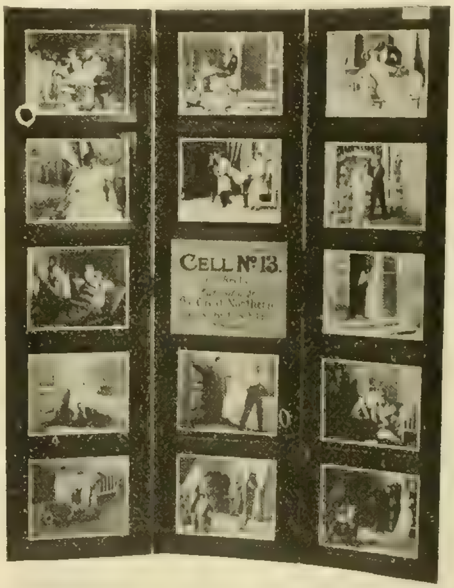
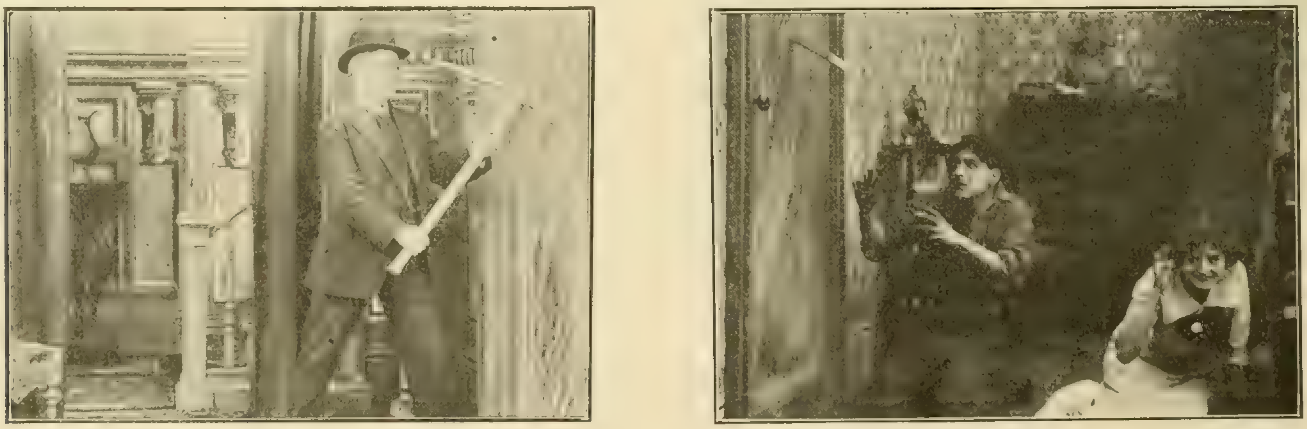
> "We are very much gratified with the picture, "THE DEAD MAN'S CHILD," and can honestly assure you that it is the greatest sensational thriller that we have ever seen projected."—Extract from letter received from Rochester, N. Y., March 29th, 1912.



An innovation in Lobby Frames is introduced by The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, which, in our judgment, is an improvement on anything ever put forth in the way of Lobby Displays.

The accompanying picture will show you the advantages of this Frame, as it can be boxed and shipped or carried by the operator, and when set up in front of the theater makes a very fine display.



Scenes from "His Neighbor's Wife" (Powers).

"SAVED FROM THE TITANIC" (Eclair).

Miss Dorothy Gibson, one of the survivors of the great disaster, as told in a previous issue of the Moving Picture World, has performed a unique piece of acting in the sensational new film-play of the Eclair Company, produced last week and dated for release on May 14. It is the story of the wreck, founded upon Miss Gibson's own experiences, and with a lot of the mechanical and vision pictures which have made fame for Eclair's American directors, the film is creating a great activity in the market, for the universal interest in the catastrophe has made a national demand.

Scene from "Saved from the Titanic" (Eclair).

Miss Dorothy Gibson in "Saved from the Titanic."

Miss Gibson had hardly recovered from her terrible strain in the wreck, when she was called upon to take part in this new piece, which she constructed as well. It was a nerve-racking task, but like actresses before the footlights, this beautiful young cinematic star valiantly conquered her own feelings and went through the work. A surprising and artistically perfect reel has resulted.

"DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND" (Vitagraph).

John Bunny and Flora Finch as man and wife. Surely a great combination. One that bids fair to outrival the well-known "Mr. and Mrs. Jones" series formerly done by the Biograph Company. "Diamond Cut Diamond" is a comedy and affords Mr. Bunny and Miss Finch both equal opportunities as principals, which are handled as only these two artists can handle them, which is too well-known to need description. It is hard to imagine a man of Mr. Bunny's imperturbable appearance as being henpecked, but in the picture he is very much so, despite appearances. His part is that of a gay old boy who is partial to the large cold bottle and the small hot bird, coupled with wee small hours and girlish laughter. The wife suspects all this, but has no goods on the gay deceiver, who uses the telephone as his chief loophole in escaping wifie's vigilance.

After being frustrated numerous times, the old boy's wife decides to do some Sherlock Holmes work on her own account. She disguises herself as an Englishman and presents a letter of introduction to her husband at his office. The foxy old boy gets on to her scheme, however, and gets a couple of his young clerks to make up as young women. They frame up a jolly dinner party to take place after office hours, which comes off according to schedule. At the proper time the indignant wife reveals her identity and makes a declaration of independence. It looks good until the young "women" unmask, and wifie is obliged to make an ignominious retreat, using a table cloth as a skirt.

The picture is funny in the extreme. It will certainly fulfill its mission as a roaring comedy. Now that Mr. Bunny and Miss Finch have begun playing opposite parts of man and wife in comedies, it is to be hoped that they will be allowed to continue in what will surely prove to be a most successful series if they are given a regular name, such as was applied to the fictitious but well-known Mr. and Mrs. Jones of the Biograph Company. Why not call them Mr. and Mrs. Bunnyfinch, or Funnybunch, or Funnyfinch, or Binniefunch, or something equally absurd?

"AMERICAN" INVENTS BURNISHING MACHINE.

Through the unremitting efforts of C. Ziebarth, the American's mechanic and electrician, a new device has been added to the mechanical efficiency of the American Film Mfg. Co.'s new Chicago plant which bids fair to surpass old-fashioned methods in polishing or burnishing films. Mr. Ziebarth has spent a number of months on the new machine, which during the last three or four weeks has taken the place of the girls usually required to do that work.

In passing from the developing tanks film frequently shows water spots in the drying process. The new machine receives positive prints and passes them through without generating friction on the emulsion side.

SOLAX NIGHTS.

Some dozen exhibitors within a short period have featured "Solax nights." Besides the Star Theater, in Easton, Pa., the Colonial, of West Hoboken; the New Star, of Third Ave.; the Clinton Court, of Clinton St.; the Dixie, of 116th St., and the Queens, of Fifty-Ninth St., all of New York, have been and still are featuring "Solax nights" with excellent Solax programs or four and five reels.

So great is the present demand for Solax releases that recently Adam Kessell, of the Empire and other New York exchange interests, said to the Solax representative, "Why in the name of common sense don't you Solax people put out four-a-week. My customers are just going crazy over Solax pictures. They want a Solax every night. Now, you know I can't supply five Solax a week when only two are released?"

The Solax spirit is gaining rapidly. This not only because Solax pictures are remarkable for their diversity of interests but because they are relatively big money-makers wherever they are exhibited.

AMERICAN MAKING PROGRESS.

The new studio and plant of the American Film Manufacturing Company is rapidly nearing completion, and none too soon for their requirements. They are at work on several large productions and already have in hand scenarios and properties for a number of headliners and features. We understand they are prepared to talk business with a director or producer capable of handling high-class subjects only. President Hutchinson was in New York this week and favored the World office with a few minutes of his valuable time. We hope to give our readers a description of their new up-to-date building as soon as completed.

TOO MANY ROSES SPOIL ROMANCE!

A droll comedy entitled "Roses and Thorns" is released by Eclair on Thursday, May 16. A young man essays to meet at the train a beautiful friend of a beautiful friend; she is to wear a white rose when she arrives. It happens that a bunch of school teachers have been picnicking in the woods and, after all of them decorating themselves with white roses, they return on the same train. The result is very funny to an audience, but it was extremely hard on the romantic gentleman, who became as unpopular as the roses were popular that day. He was finally rescued; and that was funnier still!

A NEW STAR WITH ECLAIR.

Miss Barbara Tennant, the beautiful young English actress, who played last season in Charles Frohman's "Seven Sisters" and who toured England in the Ben Greet company of Shakespearean players, is playing leading roles in the newest productions at Eclair's Fort Lee studios. Wm. H. Haddock, formerly a director with the Edison studios, has been appointed to the staff of dramatic directors of the Eclair Co.

THE FEET PHILOSOPHER.

His name was Tommy and he was a poor kid cripple, but that didn't stop him from studying life. Even the underground window of his basement home, through which he got his sole viewpoint on the life aforesaid, didn't dampen his ardor. All it permitted him to see of the busy world outside was—feet, the feet of the passersby. But Tommy was bright and he made a good student; usually he "got" the character of the passing humans by those very feet. The regular passersby he became well acquainted with: there was "Cruel Feet," for instance. Tommy hated him. Then there was "Manly Feet" and "Little Feet," as Tommy called them. He liked them immensely and he made himself of much service to them. Just how is all given in Tommy's film story, "The Little Shut-In," issued by Thanhouser, Friday, May 17th.

ONE THOUSAND THEATERS IN SIX MONTHS.

We are keenly interested in the assertion of Mr. Hunton of the firm of Hunton-Fell-Elliott, Inc., New York, that he expects they will be serving 1000 theaters before the end of the sixth month. They started on January 1st an illustrated news service, issued daily. They have made wonderful progress for a new firm in the field, and are now operating with in the neighborhood of 200 live theaters.

There is one feature that should particularly appeal to the Moving Picture theaters, and that is that this service of news photos cannot run stale subjects, or repeat. This asset has hitherto been enjoyed only by the newspapers, and the theaters seem to appreciate it's up-to-date-ness. It acts as a "booster" as it were to the balance of the show.

DETROIT FEATURE FILM CO. MOVES.

The Feature Film Company of Detroit, Mich., has moved from 2,058 Fort Street to new quarters at 406 Woodward Avenue, where it will build a new theater for pictures on the adjoining premises. This company has $15,000 invested in the new project.

It is also announced that all the feature pictures controlled by the Feature Film Co., have been turned over to the Michigan Feature Photoplay Co., which has been incorporated for the purpose of handling features and has offices at 555 Equity Building, Detroit.

TO REPRESENT GOLD FIBRE SCREEN IN NEW YORK.

H. N. Spitzer, of the Imp Theater, Seattle, Wash., has been appointed representative for the American Theater Curtain & Supply Company in the East, with offices at 105 East 14th Street, New York City. Mr. Spitzer has booked orders for seven screens during the past three weeks. New York exhibitors may see the Radium Gold Fibre Screen at Vilencia's Theater, 12 Bowery, or at the Orpheum Theater, Eighth Street and Second Avenue, New York.

Simplex The Peer of All Moving Picture Machines

NEW YORK MANAGERS SAY:

The machine has given entire satisfaction, and we will soon need more machines for our other theaters.
ARTHUR S. WHITE, Manager Moving Picture Department, Percy G. Williams Circuit of theaters.

I am so pleased with the result that I shall install another Simplex machine in place of one of another make.
WM. J. GANE, Manhattan Theater.

We consider it far ahead of any other machine, and have since put them in our other theaters. WALTER ROSENBERG, Savoy Theater.

So well pleased am I with our "Simplex" that I would not give one screw of it for any other entire machine on the market.
HARRY LEVINE, Manager, Riverside Theater.

Its precision in construction is such that it stands up to the excessive hard work, and we have no more annoying breakdowns.
E. STERN, Proprietor, Bleecker Theater.

The new "Simplex" projector is undoubtedly the best machine we have ever operated.
E. J. CRANE, Eden Musee.

After using the other machines, I cheerfully state that the "Simplex" is decidedly the best.
W. D. KOLLE, Prospect Hall, Brooklyn.

It is the best we have ever used and we have ordered two more for our other theaters.

The Fighting Dervishes of the Desert

Our first spectacular Egyptian production

Every scene photographed by Kalem Co., in the ancient Bible town, Thebes (Luxor) and on the Sahara Desert.

Sheik Hassan Ali meets the Coptic Christian, Zahrah.

The Fighting Dervishes on their way to attack the Copts.

In presenting this, the first of a series of Oriental dramas, the Kalem Company desires to emphasize the fact that each and every scene was made by American actors and natives in ancient Egypt. It must be evident therefore that these pictures are of educational value and merit the closest attention of all your patrons. Behold the real life of the Desert, the ancient water-wheel, a genuine Arab encampment, an Arabian village, the fanatical Dervishes with their fleet-footed camels, a true presentation of a Coptic religious service—one of the earliest and most primitive forms of Christianity—and the ruins of a Pagan temple of unknown antiquity.

Special one, three and six sheet four color litho's for this big feature.

Special piano score 25 cents postage prepaid. Order this music either from your exchange or Kalem Company direct and give the picture an added attraction.

Hassan Ali bargains with the fanatical Dervishes to massacre the Copts.

PHILADELPHIA.

L. BEARD has taken possession of the Lyric Theater at Atlantic City, and will show high-class vaudeville and motion pictures.

William F. Adams, of Philadelphia, purchased from William LeMar the moving picture equipment and the lease of the Carsonia Theater, at Reading, Pa., for a term of years. He will improve the theater and conduct a high-class picture show. During the month of May all the Carsonia amusement devices will be repainted and the park generally put in first-class shape for the opening of the park on May 25.

William H. Kromer will again be assistant manager of the Carsonia, which position he has filled for several years and is a thoroughly experienced park man.

A company producing "Peck's Bad Boy," consisting of nine people, carrying their own scenery and lithographs, are now playing the moving picture houses of Philadelphia, and are making quite a hit.

The Olivet Junior Girls' Club of Reading, Pa., held a moving picture exhibition on Saturday, March 13th, and the large attendance was very gratifying with large receipts.

John Merino, of the Castle Theater, is giving the people of that section a taste of real vaudeville and motion pictures and showing nothing but the best in both lines.

G. M. Buzby delivered an illustrated lecture in which he described the various municipal improvements being carried on by the municipalities of the country, at a special meeting of the Haddington Board of Trade, 60th Street and Girard Avenue, on April 12th.

Caught beneath the fire extinguisher, which fell from its holder in the Lincoln Theater, 49th Street and Woodland Avenue, John Dugan, of 1237 St. Bernard Street, an employee, was cut about the head. He was treated at the University Hospital.

The Tacony Hippodrome opens May 1, and will present pictures and vaudeville.

With a view of securing a reconstruction of the elevated structure of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company on the north side of Market Street, west of 15th Street, by wiping out the unsightly entrances to the buildings and converting the ground floor into moving picture houses and stores, Mayor Blankenburg was called upon at his office in the City Hall by a committee representing the Market Street Merchants' Association. The organization has had the matter of improving this section of Market Street under consideration for a long time, and at their last meeting a committee was appointed for the purpose of consulting with Mayor Blankenburg and James McCrea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and urging upon them the necessity of having a rearrangement made of that portion of the elevated tracks immediately beneath the big train shed, so that the space now occupied by delivery companies be abandoned for these purposes and devoted to stores and other business places. The members of the committee urged the Mayor to use his influence with the officials of the railroad company to have the suggested improvements made.

Chief Dunlap, of the Water Bureau, is now making a series of investigations in theaters, stores, and at public drinking fountains to determine the source and causes of waste, with particular reference to leaking spigots and pipes. Forty men have been at work inspecting spigots. During three days the results shown is that leaks exist in spigots of 12 per cent. of the buildings.

It is expected that by increasing the force of sixty men the entire city can be inspected within two months. Later a report will be submitted showing the waste due to leaking spigots, and through general carelessness.

In all the Keith houses performers are absolutely prohibited from apearing upon the stage wearing dirty garments. No matter how ragged or unkept they may seem to be they are physically clean if shown to a Keith audience. Mr. Keith attributes much of his success to this rule. At Lubin's Palace, week of April 15, a negro appeared on the stage in a canvas suit, patched with awning stuff and the ensemble was so utterly filthy as to offend "regulars." There is no excuse for such an exhibition and the manager who permits it invites failure. Filth is not a form of humor.

Mme. Alla Nazimova, the greatest interpreter of Ibsen's characters, has consented to apear in "A Doll's House," before the moving picture machines of a Philadelphia firm. It is probable that the first film will be made here within a short time.

The trolley company's lease for Adamsdale Park will expire on April 15th. The buildings will be torn down and the material will be used for other purposes. The grounds were a poor investment and consequently the company will not re-lease.

The Operators' Union of Philadelphia held a meeting on April 13th, and a committee was appointed to make arrangements for a ball to be held on May 12th, at the Garrick Hall.

Max Thomashefsky, manager of the Arch Street Theater, is opening a house in Baltimore, showing vaudeville and moving pictures. He will use a Model B Edison machine, furnished by the Calehuff Supply Company.

Quaker Film Exchange lost about ten thousand feet of films that were on board the Titanic.

Charles Becker, manager of the Grace Fairy Palace, is seriously sick at the Hahnemann Hospital.

The Philomusian Club of West Philadelphia, took exception to the ordinance which aims to prevent school children from attending moving picture shows from 9 A. M. to 3 P. M., and adopted a resolution calling for an amendment of the proposed law which will permit the children to visit the moving picture places during those hours on Saturdays, holidays and during the summer vacation.

Members of the club expressed the opinion that as a whole the moving picture shows provided wholesome amusement for children, which often keeps them out of mischief. It was also remarked that tired mothers frequently send the children to these places and keep them entertained while they obtained much needed rest.

The subject was brought up for discussion by Dr. Martha Y. K. Schetky, who presided at the meeting, and who reported that the club had been asked to indorse the moving picture regulation. Mrs. Herman B. Allen finally suggested an amendment which would open the doors of the picture shows to the children on other than school days, and the resolution was unanimously adopted. The club members are satisfied with that portion of the regulation which closes the moving picture places to the children after 9 o'clock at night.

Moving picture interests advocated to-day before the House Patents Committee the compromise amendment to the law offered by Representative Townsend of New Jersey, a Democrat, to impose not to exceed $100 fine on "innocent infringers" of copyrighted works in motion picture, and $50 a day and a fine on those who knowingly infringe. The committee probably will act favorably on the bill.

There is a great demand for pictures of the Titanic, and local film exchange men have a hard time to book the different theater managers and suit them all. One of the pictures shows the different parts of the boat and the berg that the Titanic is supposed to have run into. It also has pictures of the passengers of the Titanic on the rescue ship Carpathia, and is very interesting.

However, some of the managers are faking a picture by using Pathe Freres' well known picture, "Tragedy of the Sea," and some people believe that the picture was taken there while the Titanic was sinking.

Reels depicting local industries and representative American scenes, will be shown in connection with the Twelfth International Congress of Navigation, which will bring to Philadelphia next month hundreds of delegates from every civilized country on the globe. President Taft will welcome the delegates, and the usual crowds at the theaters will be augmented by thousands of visitors. Already a number of the delegates from the more distant countries are on their way to Philadelphia.

C. Fred Ruhlman, owner and manager of the Hightown, N. J., Theater, and the University Theater at Princeton, N. J., was a visitor in Philadelphia this week. Mr. Ruhlman barred the students from the Princeton Theater last year on account of their behavior, and they then made threats against him, but he would not let them in his theater. However, this year, he has had no trouble with them and everything is moving along in a pleasant way.

Moving pictures are part of the equipment of the Young Woman's Christian Association at 4102 Ridge Avenue, which is under the direction of Mrs. McLean and Miss Button.

Harry E. Davis of the Bijou Dream, at Milton, Pa., was in Philadelphia recently, and reports that business up the state is in fine condition. Mr. Davis has one of the finest theaters in that section and is up to date in all his ideas, and spares no expense in giving the people what they want. He also has a fine orchestra

There are a number of Olympic pictures being featured as those of the Titanic.

The Empire second-floor show is about to go out of business at Manayunk, Pa.

Fred McVey is now operating the machine at the theater at 508 South Street.

The theater at 1619 South Street, has reopened, showing pictures and colored vaudeville.

Managers of the picture theaters are determined to break up disorder and hoodlumism, and special police have been engaged by several of the theaters. Almost every week one of the theaters is subjected to a scene of violence of some kind, and the effect on the audiences has been anything but beneficial. One of the theaters on Market Street, above Tenth, promptly settled a disturbance a few days ago which, if it had not been controlled, might have led to a panic. Two men engaged in a fistic battle over a woman. Special Officer Mahon promptly took the three to the police court, and the magistrate sentenced two of the trio to jail. The managers are determined to make examples of persons who start trouble, and will convince the public that the theater is the safest place for entertainment.

Not a week passes but the moving picture becomes more prominent in local educational circles. One of the principal features of the baby saving show to be held at Horticultural Hall May 18 to 26, will be a series of films showing mothers how to take care of the litle ones. Every detail regarding clothing for infants, preparation of food and proper feeding during the summer months, as well as care of infants during sleeping hours, will be shown. One film will instruct mothers in the healthful bathing of babies. Others will teach the parent how to keep the child fresh and cool during the warm weather. Other films will show how the fly is a menace to health and how easily the baby's milk may be contaminated. The work of the New York Mill Commission will also be shown.

Trust companies have benefited considerably by the deposits of local moving picture men, but have not always been able to come out even on small accounts. It has been the practice of some of the manufacturers and theater men to place their main deposit account in a national bank, while using some nearby trust company for small day-to-day cash balances. The trust companies now rule that where such deposit accounts balance less than $100 on the average, a charge of $1 will be made. This is to make the accounts pay their way.

The Lincoln Theater, at 49th and Woodland Avenue, was notified that their moving picture license does not allow them to show stock company and theatricals, and will discontinue after Saturday, April 27th.

CLEMENT H. CONGDON.

LOUISVILLE.

MOVING picture business in Louisville is in good shape, thanks to splendid weather and high-class attractions. For a time, the fear of a spread of meningitis held down attendances at various theaters, but danger of an epidemic has been eliminated and the public has about forgotten its fear. School children, who were given a week's vacation, have returned to their desks, and few new cases of meningitis have been reported.

The management of the Novelty Theater, operated by the Falls Cities Amusement Company, put a plan into effect recently, which, no matter how it is viewed by the public and other exhibitors, certainly has been productive of results. The Novelty has erected a screen on the opposite side of the street and threw about half of a film on the new curtain. An immense crowd gathered to see the "free doings," and evinced more enthusiasm than any audience in recent months. However, the throng was doomed to disappointment, for just as the film reached the interesting stage, the light was switched off and a sign was thrown on the screen reading, "This picture will be continued on the inside of the theater in ten minutes." A good part of the crowd decided to follow the thread of the play on the interior of the Novelty, while those who had not the necessary ten cents or time, wandered on disconsolately. The Falls Cities Amusement Company is among the most conservative of Louisville exhibitors, and the new plan created surprise among motion picture men of Louisville.

Though reports of new theaters to be erected are numerous, confirmation of all the rumors has not yet been secured. Two companies which now operate a chain of theaters in Louisville and elsewhere, are credited with plans for the erection of a new vaudeville and moving picture house and a hippodrome on the order of those in St. Louis and other cities. It is stated that the new amusement places will be located in the heart of Louisville.

The Crystal Theater, operated by the Falls Cities Amusement Company, has erected a new electric sign on the exterior of the house. The new advertisement looms up on Market Street, comparing well with those of other Louisville theaters, which, incidentally, are all more attractive than the average. That of the Crystal stands out strikingly, being electric bulbs in the form of a question mark. Houses operated by the Princess Amusement Company all have the title of the current attraction emblazoned in electric lights. Even that at the Orpheum Theater on Jefferson Street, was used with good effect while that house was closed down, other houses conducted by the Princess were advertised by means of the Orpheum sign.

Greenstein Brothers, who operate the Dream Bijou, have installed a new aluminum curtain in their house. The new screen is the only one of its kind in Louisville and has proven an excellent one, reducing the glitter to a minimum. The Dream Bijou will present three-reel features to its patrons on every Tuesday and Wednesday hereafter.

The new Sun Theater opened at Eighteenth and Gallagher Streets, Sunday, April 14. The new house is conducted by the Pastime Amusement Company, of which H. B. Strube is president. Besides moving pictures, two vaudeville acts are shown, the Sun Vaudeville service being used. The new theater cost about $10,000, and has a seating capacity of 300. Initial business was excellent, indicating that the residents of that neighborhood are glad of the opportunity to get their amusement near home instead of going downtown as heretofore.

The Louisville Photoplay Association, besides deciding to eliminate singers from the theaters which charge but five cents admission, has also reduced the staff of musicians in those houses. The theaters which charge the smaller price will have to get along without the services of a drummer hereafter, the rule applying only to those which are members of the Association, of course.

After a week of "Camille," with Sarah Bernhardt playing the title role in moving pictures, the Masonic Theater, Louisville, has presented the Durbar Kinemacolor pictures, showing the Indian ceremonies in colors. The Louisville Herald, a newspaper, prevailed on the Masonic management to give a special performance for the orphans of the city. The kids were conveyed to and from the theater in donated automobiles, everything being done to make their afternoon a big success.

Bubbling over with indignation, a teacher in a deaf-mutes' school of Louisville, left a moving picture theater, charging that the characters were saying unspeakable things. This is the first instance of lip-reading in Louisville, though reports from other cities have indicated that deaf-mutes there also have objected to the lines spoken by the characters in motion plays. It is evident that producers will have to do a little reforming before the animated pictures will prove popular in audiences composed of deaf-mutes.

Exhibitors of Lexington, Ky., have formed a temporary organization by way of preparation for the state meeting to be held in that city on April 25. J. H. Stamper, Jr., was elected treasurer; D. J. Tracey, secretary, and L. H. Ramsey, chairman. Orine Parker, of Covington, Ky., has been appointed temporary chairman for Kentucky and will preside at the Lexington meeting, at which time permanent officers will be elected. The Lexington men have appointed committees to arrange for the entertainment of the visitors.

The New Orpheum Theater has been opened at Lexington, Ky. It was built at a cost of $18,000. J. H. Stamper, Jr., is manager of the new house, which is located in the Phoenix Hotel Block, at the corner of Main and Limestone Streets. The Orpheum makes Lexington's seventh showhouse, five being for white persons and two for the colored population.

Of 1,000 names suggested, "The Band," was chosen as the style of the new showhouse in Hopkinsville, Ky. The Third Kentucky Band is operating the theater and the name adopted is therefore doubly appropriate. The theater will open late in April.

The Tennessee Film Company, which will make, lease and sell moving pictures, and otherwise transact a moving picture business, has been incorporated in Nashville, Tenn., with $2,000 capital stock. The incorporators are R. W. Olsen, Robert White, Ella Weimer, Will Myers and C. M. Silberman.

The Crystal Theater, one of the local houses of the Falls Cities Amusement Company, recently put across one of the most notable "coups" ever effected in the local moving picture field. Exactly one week after the foundering of the Titanic in mid-ocean off Cape Race, the Crystal featured a Warner reel showing the departure of the world's greatest liner, which met with such disaster, from Liverpool, England. The Titanic was shown clearing her dock at Liverpool, with hundreds of passengers who were destined to meet an untimely end thronging her decks and waving a happy good-bye to the crowds ashore. An individual view of Captain Smith, the ill-fated commander of the liner, was also shown. The setting of the exhibition at the Crystal could not have been more effective. As the majestic liner ploughed her way through the billows, the theater's orchestra softly played "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the air played by the courageous ship's orchestra while the waves washed over her decks. The Warner features proved to be one of the biggest hits ever offered in a local playhouse.

The Kentucky Feature Film Exchange has been organized in Louisville for the purpose of leasing state rights pictures. The Princess Amusement Company and the Broadway Amusement Company, two of Louisville's leading photoplay concerns, have joined to form the feature film exchange, and Irvin Simon, of the Princess Company, will direct its operations at his headquarters in the Hopkins Theater Building. The Exchange will be incorporated later on. It is still in the process of organization. Officers have not yet been selected.

The Avenue Theater has closed a very successful season of melodramatic offerings presented by a stock company, and has commenced its moving picture run for the summer. At present the house is specializing in the latest Bison releases. A head-line attraction during the past week was the portrayal of Press Association photographs showing the wreck of the Titanic and scenes following the deep sea tragedy. The admittance fee at The Avenue has been placed at 5 cents for the summer, and the usual prosperous warm weather career is forecasted. Mort Shaw, who has directed the interests of the well-known local house for several years, is in charge for the photoplay season.

The Princess Victoria proved to be an A-1 attraction for The Novelty, a Falls City Amusement Company house. The Princess is a diminutive bit of femininity, 15 inches tall, 23 years old and weighing 19¾ pounds, billed as the smallest woman in the world. During her act on the Novelty programme she played her own piano accompaniment to several vocal selections, recited a bit of poetry or two and served to boost the drawing power of the Novelty pictures all around. She is under private contract with the Falls Cities Amusement Company for a fortnight's engagement. From Louisville she will go to Chicago.

The Indian Durbar was shown in Kinemacolor Pictures at the Shubert Masonic Theater in Louisville last week, excellent attendance featuring the week's offering. The pictures needed no introduction to Louisville folk, having been shown here earlier in the season, and the public eagerly grasped the opportunity of witnessing the notable royal pogeant, "in its own back yard."

The Pastime Theater, of Winchester, Ky., has secured the services of Professor A. P. De Forest, of Norfolk, Va., and his orchestra, and they will provide the musical program and scenic effects at the Pastime hereafter.

The Lyric Theater, owned by A. J. Wellman, in Catlettsburg, Ky., has been completely remodeled within and without. The throw in the auditorium has been readjusted to afford clearer pictures, and changes in the entrance and exit accommodations have been made so that the Catlettsburg house is now one of the safest and most up to date in that section of the state.

As a token of appreciation of a civic improvement campaign recently instituted in his birthplace, William H. Oliver, a millionaire Chicago tool manufacturer, has tendered a check of $600 to the Young Men's Christian Association of Bowling Green, Ky., to provide a complete moving picture machine and appurtenances for the Y. M. C. A. home in that city. Mr. Oliver was born in Bowling Green, and has never overlooked an opportunity to aid the younger generation in the Southern Bluegrass country.

W. M. Jones, of Barbourville, Ky., has received the award of a contract from the Pineville Amusement Company, of Pineville, Ky., for the erection of a handsome new moving picture theater in that city. The new Pineville house is to cost $23,000, and will be completed as soon as possible. It will be one of the finest theaters in the eastern portion of Kentucky.

The Orpheum Theater, the newest and one of the largest photoplay houses in Lexington, Ky., has just been opened to the public by its owner, J. H. Stamper, Jr. The Orpheum cost $18,000, and promises to become a permanent institution in the Central Kentucky show world.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY, April 14, was a big day for the motion picture in Boston, as the Clarendon Street Baptist church started a moving picture show, with the pastor, Rev. Dr. James A. Francis, as exhibitor. Some weeks ago the building of this notedly conservative church was destroyed by fire, and when the question of where to hold its Sunday evening services came to be settled, the committee accepted the invitation of the management of the Scenic Temple, formerly a church, but now a vaudeville and picture theater. With all the apparatus at hand for running a show, the pastor decided not to neglect the opportunity, and so a new departure for any church in Boston was begun. The reels depicting the life of Moses were shown, and on Sunday, April 21, the last reel was exhibited. This may rightly be called an event of considerable importance to local exhibitors, and now that the start has been made, it would not be at all surprising if other Boston churches followed suit in the near future. The Scenic Temple, one of the Bradstreet string of houses, is to be highly commended for its attitude in co-operating with this church. Rev. Francis promises to give these shows regularly.

The most severe blow that Boston, Mass., exhibitors have sustained from the press in some time, appeared in the Boston Traveler this week. With a double-column head, Mary Boyle O'Reilly wrote a long article entitled, "Fire in the Picture Theaters." The writer states: "Probably no other establishment in the great cities presents such a potential peril. Certainly none other are more successful in concealing incipient blazes that are never reported to the public. If a policy of carelessness or political corruption is allowed to jeopardize the lives of thousands, the outcome will one day be such a fire horror as Boston will never forget." She goes on to state that the "picture houses" are not theaters in any sense, and do not come under the protective provisions of the theater laws, and that most of the houses are run by will-o-the-wisp "managers." The whole article is too long to give space, especially as the whole thing is merely a lot of "rot," overflowing with high-sounding rhetoric and adjectives. At this writing, five days after its publication, the article has caused no trouble; in fact, it did not even raise a ripple. Such nonsense as this falls by its own weight, and amounts to nothing. As an example of filling two columns of space, with only imagination from which to draw, the article is remarkable!

Mr. E. L. Knight, manager of the Bijou Theater, Springfield, Mass., has decided to open an airdome, with a seating capacity of 1,300. Mr. Knight has received permission from the Park Commissioners, and will start work immediately. The theater will be located opposite the entrance to Forest Park, and will be called the Forest Park Theater. It is expected to be ready about May 10. Vaudeville and pictures are scheduled as the policy. The lot of land is 70 feet by 150.

The Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., which changed its policy several times in as many weeks, has a new manager, in the person of James H. Donovan, of Woonsocket, R. I., succeeding F. T. Gunn, who was installed last month, after Colonel Stanton left the house. Mr. Donovan is well and favorably known in New England, and, under his lead the Central Square Theater is presenting a straight show of motion pictures and songs, the vaudeville having been eliminated. A voting popularity contest is the only "added attraction."

The Broadway Theater, Lawrence, Mass., was given over to the Loyal Order of Moose on Wednesday night, April 17, and an unusually large program of vaudeville and pictures was given. Manager W. E. Spragg evidently finds that these special nights are a good business policy, and a number of local organizations have held "times" at the Broadway. The house reports good business, and is the most up-to-date in Lawrence.

New Haven, Conn., has another photoplay theater, since the Crystal opened, on April 13. The house is under the management of Mr. J. Mongillo, and seats almost 400. The house will run Licensed pictures and illustrated songs, and is wel located on State Street. It should do well.

The Star Theater, Lowell, Mass., has closed, and it is doubted whether it will reopen, as business was not very good.

James W. Greely, manager of the New Portland Theater, Portland, Me., intends to have the most up-to-date theater in this city, and alterations are now being made. Decorators and carpenters have the place just now, and improvements are being made generally throughout the house. The shows are going on without interruption.

A new photoplay house for Webster, Mass., is a certainty, as the St. Jean Baptiste Society are about to alter their convention hall into a theater. Plans are now under way and work on the alterations is nearly ready to begin.

Mr. J. L. Donovan reports that he will build a new theater in Bridgeport, Conn., to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures. The new house will be located on Olive Street, near Wood Avenue. Mr. S. Newman is associated with Mr. Donovan in the venture.

B. F. Keith's Bijou Dream Theater, Boston, Mass., playing Licensed pictures, has awarded the prizes in the one-act comedy contest. The Bijou will stage the playlet and offer it in addition to the regular show.

Mr. J. Fred Miller, who has had charge of the publicity for the Academy of Music, Fall River, Mass., has left, and is now in Youngstown, Ohio.

Manager George Morrison of the Scenic Temple, East Boston, Mass., who has gone to Colorado for his health, is missed by his many friends. Mr. Morrison expects to be back at his post before very long.

Mr. S. Z. Poli, owner of a large string of houses in New England, has completed the purchase of the Lincoln Theater site, Worcester, Mass. Mr. Poli will open this house about October 1, as a vaudeville and picture house. Mr. Poli also intends to erect a theater in Hartford, Conn., which is quite unusual, inasmuch as he already operates two houses in that city—the Poli and the Hartford Theaters.

The Park Theater, a "legitimate" house, playing standard attractions, Boston, was transformed into a picture house at 11 P. M., Thursday, April 18, and an exhibition of motion pictures, taken last summer off the East coast of Greenland, was given. The pictures feature the exploits of Fred Stone, of Montgomery & Stone, who are playing in Boston. These pictures were intensely exciting, showing an actual killing of a polar bear on the ice, and a splendid reproduction of the ice-fields. Members of all theatrical companies in the city, the Boston American and New York American Ball teams, members of several shooting clubs, and the Press Club, were invited guests.

Manager J. H. Finn, of the Walnut Theater, Woburn, Mass., doesn't believe in competition, and has just come into control of Lyceum Hall, the opposition theater. Mr. Finn will run both houses, and expects to give even better shows than before.

Messrs. Walker Brothers, owners of the new photoplay theater, Whitinsville, Mass., report a most successful opening. This house seats nearly 1,000, including the balcony, and is fireproof and of modern construction.

The new Palace Theater, Boston, exhibited moving pictures of the Marathon race held in that city on Patriots' Day, April 19. The pictures were taken as a local proposition.

The National Shawmut Bank of Boston has established a department for the collection of deposits of theaters during the evening by automobile. This idea is meeting with favor from some of the local photoplay theaters.

The Hartford, Conn., Lodge No. 64, T. M. A., held its fourth annual ball and entertainment in Foot Guards' Hall, April 10. The affair was voted a huge success.

Keith's Theater, Providence, R. I., has closed its regular season of vaudeville and pictures, and has installed a stock company for the summer season.

Pittsfield, Mass., will soon have another theater, offering vaudeville and photoplays, as Mr. John Cooney has taken title to a lot of land on Union Street. Mr. Cooney was formerly manager of the Academy of Music of Pittsfield, which was destroyed by fire this winter.

It is understood that Manager Cushing, of the Idle Hour Theater, Sandwich, Mass., is doing extremely well with his photoplay programs, and that he intends to build another moving picture house in that town.

The Colonial Theater, Pittsfield, Mass., will be entirely redecorated next month, and Manager Daniels states that the public will not recognize his house after the new "fixings" have been completed.

Souls in the Shadow

This is a gripping and sensational drama dealing with social errors and a sister's sacrifice. A girl of breeding makes a mistake in the choice of an escort for a slumming expedition. She sends her cowardly tormentor to face his Maker, while her sister assumes responsibilities. This is a vivid and human portrayal with striking complications.

In the Year 2000

This is one of the few novelties of the season. The conditions are reversed. Women in this film are supreme, and Man's destiny is presided over by woman. No attempt is made at burlesque—but the very seriousness of the purpose of the theme makes the situations ludicrous. This is one of the funniest comedies released by the Solax Company in some time, and that's saying a whole lot for this picture.

conditions in the moving picture houses of Springfield, Mass., has turned in its final report, which was most favorable. The committee stated that nothing objectionable had been discovered, and the only observation made was that the ventilation in some of the houses might be better. As to the quality of the pictures, from a moral standpoint, nothing but good was found. They also remarked the general management of the houses to be beyond reproach. The best proof that the investigators were well satisfied with what they saw, lies in the fact no local board of censorship was deemed necessary in Springfield. As the chief reason of the investigation was to decide whether a local censorship should be formed or not, this fact proved conclusively that Springfield is fully up to the standard, as regards photoplay houses, at any rate.

After plans had been made to erect an open air theater at Riverside Grove near Springfield, Mass., it was decided not to do anything along these lines, as Mr. E. L. Knight did not think it advisable at this time.

At the last meeting of the Moving Picture Operators' Union Local 182, held in Boston, it was decided to oppose the introduction of motor driven machines in Massachusetts, and a committee was appointed to call upon Chief of Police Whitney to record the protest, and to supply him with information received from New York, and other unions on the matter. It was stated that the evidence received from New York showed that the motors were installed there, and that innumerable fires and other troubles resulted, including the great one at Coney Island; and that now the law prevented the use of any but hand operated machines in that state. This was the first meeting held by this union at its new headquarters, 113 Eliot Street.

Pittsfield, Mass., has the promise of a new theater, to be devoted to vaudeville and photoplays. The theater is to be built by the Masons of that city, and will no doubt be operated by the lodge.

The Lynn Theater, Lynn, Mass., was a very lively theater recently, when the Lynn Baseball Club was invited by Manager Jeff Callan to attend the show of vaudeville and pictures. The house was packed full, and the club proved itself a good business puller.

The new theater which was being constructed at New Bedford, Mass., opened to the public on Monday, April 15. The new theater has been named the Orpheum, and it is not too much to state that the house is one of the best in the state. It is brand new from cellar to ceiling, and fireproof throughout. Mr. H. A. Chenoweth, well known to New Bedford as the manager of the Comique Theater, is also managing the Orpheum. Three shows daily of vaudeville and photoplays have packed the Orpheum daily.

The Theatrical Mechanics' Association held a benefit concert at New Haven, Conn., on Sunday, April 21. The affair was reported to be very successful.

Mr. G. W. Coleman, president of the A. A. C. A., believes in advertising religious shows, as well as the brand of shoes for which he is advertising manager. As was told in these columns, the Scenic Temple, Boston, was used as a place of worship by a church whose building was destroyed by fire. Mr. Coleman became interested in this, when he learned that the motion pictures of the "Life of Moses" were being exhibited by the pastor, and wrote and paid for an advertisement which he had printed in the newspapers. It certainly was the kind of an "ad" that a person would read, if his eye was once arrested. The writer prints the major portion of it, and commends the same for the consideration of the "live wires." It might be well to remark that Mr. Coleman is considered one of the very best advertising men in the country.

To my mind it is the most interesting thing going on in the South End just now. You never saw anything like it before.

LISTEN! A half hour of moving picture such as would do your soul good to see! A bright, snappy chorus of young people who sing for the love of it. Good instrumental music too.

A straight-from-the-shoulders talk on the subject you have been thinking about by a man who knows how to talk as well as any man you ever heard. And, by no means least, a fine crowd of people that you needn't be ashamed of. And still more, the audience has a chance to ask questions after the talk from the platform the way they do at Ford Hall.

Begins at 7:30 o'clock.

Come next Sunday night if you haven't any better place to go. Get the girl and bring her along. I am doing you a good turn in this thing Put it to the test.

The new theater, the Ideal, at Milford, Mass., opened its doors on April 18.

Mr. Rodger Perham is managing the Ideal, which gives a straight show of motion pictures and illustrated songs. The reels are changed tri-weekly.

The Comique Theater, Boston, advertised that they were showing moving pictures of the Titanic, and scenes on the Carpathia. These pictures were run during the week of April 22, and the house stated that, "owing to the overwhelming public demand for these pictures, we find it necessary to limit our show to this magnificent, thrilling film. Admission, ten cents." It must be a quality show, because the quantity is very small!

A creditors' petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Charles H. Bartlett, Russell C. Watson, and W. A. Swazey, of Newburyport, Mass., copartners in the management of the new Orpheum Theater, of this city. They were petitioned into bankruptcy by three creditors, whose claims aggregate only $789.53. It is said that the three men made an assignment April 11, to F. H. Hyde. The Orpheum has been credited with doing quite a good business, and it is not believed that the house has been operated at a loss.

The new Olympia Theater, Washington Street, Boston, will open May 6, provided nothing comes up to hinder the final work. The Olympia is a Motiograph favorite, and two No. 1 A 1912 machines have been installed under the personal direction of Mr. F. A. Clark, Eastern representative of the Motiograph machines. The distance of the throw is 120 feet, with an angle of 35 degrees. The size of the picture is 14 by 16 feet. As this is a most difficult angle from which to project a good picture, Mr. Clark's efficiency is worthy of comment. At one of the trial exhibitions, to test the projection, a remarkably steady picture was thrown on the screen. Mr. Clark's skill in handling this situation has added to the prestige of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company.

The theatrical situation in Fitchburg, Mass., is undergoing some rather important changes, which are expected to have an important bearing on the vaudeville and photoplay houses. The Cummings Theater has just been leased by Mr. Harry Katz, of Lynn, Mass. During the past season, this theater had been operated by the Bijou Amusement Company. It is stated that the new lessee will install a stock company in the Cummings. While it is not yet possible to confirm the rumor, it is understood that the Whitney interests, who own the Bijou of Fitchburg, are seriously considering the erection of another up-to-date theater, so that a show devoted to vaudeville and pictures could be given. The Bijou offers stock shows. The Bijou and Cummings' interests seem lined up for a fight, and, in the meantime, the new Rome Theater is doing exceptionally well with photoplays and pictures. Mr. John Moran is about to build a new house on Blossom Street, but if the Bijou people decide to build, the Moran house will not materialize. Fitchburg must be a regular town!

Austin & Holt are giving the people of Franklin, Mass., mighty good shows of vaudeville and pictures, at the Morse Opera House. Business is reported very satisfactory.

Mr. Earle Ovington, the well-known aviator, has been giving very interesting and instructive lectures on the art of flying, at Tremont Temple, Boston.

Mr. V. Boehlein, who has held an important position with Poli's Theater, Hartford, Conn., for over 8 years, has left to connect himself with the Lyric Theater, Rome, N. Y.

Mr. John Silvia, manager of the Idle Hour Theater, New Bedford, Mass., has eliminated the vaudeville from his show. Independent pictures and illustrated songs form the bills. Mr. Silvia has other changes in mind for his house.

The Colonial Theater, Lawrence, Mass., is no longer running vaudeville and photoplays, and has installed a stock company. The Broadway theater is to play vaudeville and pictures next season.

Work has begun on the building of the new Scenic Temple, Willimantic, Conn. The house hopes to open by mid-summer.

Poli's Theater, Worcester, Mass., had an accident lately, when a boiler exploded near the theater, and water flowed into the house. There was much confusion and terror among the audience, but no serious trouble arose

The Poli theaters are at the tag end of their regular seasons, and the vaudeville and picture programs will not be resumed until late in August.

It is rumored that Mr. George E. Lothrop, owner of several Boston theaters, has an eye on a theater site in Providence, R. I. The proposed location is Westminster Street and a large theater, new from top to bottom, is promised, although no official confirmation is forthcoming as yet.

The employees of B. F. Keith's Theater, Boston, held their annual dancing party on Tuesday, April 23, and it was reported a great success. This is the third annual affair held.

The Empire Theater, Pittsfield, Mass., was closed for a week, but is open again, as usual.

The Majestic Theater of Pittsfield, Mass., has been converted into a moving picture house by Manager Sullivan. The theater is called the Photoplay, and is doing very nicely.

The writer understands that the exclusive Steinert Hall, Boston, has been secured for the exhibition of the Sarah Bernhardt and Madame Rejane pictures. Motion pictures have never been shown in Steinert Hall, which is used for exhibitions by world-famous musicians. Some trouble was found in procuring the license, the authorities claiming that the hall was below the level of the street, and therefore dangerous. License was granted, nevertheless. It is obvious that a strong bid is to be made for "blue-blood" patronage, and the Steinert Hall was chosen with this policy in view. The exact date of this engagement is not known as yet.

About a dozen operators of Waterbury, Conn., held a meeting at Garden Hall, in the rooms of the I. A. T. S. E., and decided to organize themselves into a branch of that union. The men elected the following officers: President, S. Whitkowsky; treasurer and financial secretary, Ralph Stanco; vice-president, Frank Healey; recording-secretary, H. Streeter. It is understood that nearly every house in Waterbury is using the union operators.

The pictures of the Odyssey are still at the Tremont Temple, Boston, and the audiences are both large and enthusiastic. Prices are from twenty-five to seventy-five cents, and the outlook is for an indefinite run for these reels.

HENRY.

OREGON.

SEASIDE, Oregon's greatest bathing resort, is to have a photoplay house this season. Two propositions were offered the People's Amusement Co., and one has been accepted. Work will commence immediately and chances are that it will be the finest theater in any Coast city resort.

The Odéon Theater, running an Independent service, has changed hands. Henry C. Wirpel, of Cleveland, Ohio, is the new lessee of the place.

I. Leeser Cohen, who has bought the state rights of Homer's "Odyssey" for Oregon, has sent out an agent to book every little town and hamlet in the state to show this great masterpiece.

The Arcade Theater at Portland is being remodeled at a cost of $30,000, and is being rushed to completion by working three shifts of men night and day. The contract calls to have the building ready within one month, and promises to be another high-class ten-cent house that will meet the demand of the public.

What promises to be the most unique lighting system ever carried out in an exclusive photoplay house will be installed in this theater. One side of the building will contain amber glass that will give a lighting effect similar to that of the setting of the sun. No wiring is to be done on the ceiling and all lights hidden from view will be radiated from the side walls.

Two box offices will be installed, as entrance will be had from two streets. A concrete flooring is being put in, thereby making the house fireproof throughout. Both of the lobbies will be built of mirrors cut in different designs that will designate new ideas in photoplays.

Patents have been granted to two Portland men on inventions for a moving picture machine that will operate the film without the aid of sprocket holes.

Miss Florence E. Turner, the "Vitagraph Girl," did not leave direct for the Vitagraph Studio, as first announced. Miss Turner left for Santa Monica, Cal., where she intends to stay for a few weeks longer. While in Portland, Miss Turner, in acknowledgement and as a means of showing her gratitude for the reception accorded her by the people of this city, suggested a method of raising funds for a deserving charity, had at her own expense two thousand photographs of herself made, each of which contained her autograph, and sold them amongst the audience, for the Prisoners' Aid Society. While here, Miss Turner visited the theaters at The Dalles and Astoria, Oregon, and was received with great ovation On her farewell appearance at the People's Theater, she was presented by the management of the People's Amusement Company with a handsome bracelet. Her farewell resulted in the greatest public ovation ever accorded an actress in this city.

The Arcade, Portland, opened recently. The great $10,000 organ was one of the features

The Passion Play was shown at the People's Theater during Easter week A lecturer defined the reel interpretation and a choir of twenty furnished the music for the occasion.

A sort of midnight matinee was tendered the Ad, Press and Rotary Clubs of Portland, at the Peoples Theater on March 23, at which a private exhibition of the "Oregon First" pictures was given through the courtesy of the People's Amusement Company's management. This picture was taken while the Oregon delegation was on its way to Frisco to select the site of the Oregon Building.

Ralph R. Earle, of the Pathe firm, one of the most prominent camera men of the world, for the next three months will make this city his headquarters for the Pacific Northwest. He will make headquarters with the People's Amusement Company's office, and will be busy securing material in Portland and the Pacific Northwest territory for the Pathe Weekly. Mr. Earle is the operator who took the now famous moving pictures of the Equitable fire in New York, the great Austin flood, and other important events that have happened in different parts of the United States during the past few months. Mr. Earle will leave Portland after the Elks' Convention, which is scheduled to take place in July. He has decided to take a number of pictures for the Weekly that will be reproduced in a very short time, entitled "The Making of a City." The coming of the Pathe service is due to the efforts of Mr Melvin G. Winstock, of the People's Amusement Company.

The New Grand of Portland is now running an Independent service.

Eugene Levy, of Seattle, Wash., who was called the Moving Picture King of the West, has had his license revoked and is now running an Independent service in his numerous houses.

The State of Oregon has installed a moving picture machine in each one of the State's insane and feeble-mind asylums. The penitentiary has also a machine which shows pictures for the convicts.

The New Star Theater at Medford, Ore., will be improved at a cost of $5,000.

Mr. Manning, of the Mirror Screen Company, of Shelbyville, Ind., was a visitor in Portland, and while here, booked an order from the People's Amusement Company, for a mirror screen of the latest type to be placed in one of their principal theaters.

Fred T. Langley, the famous Kalem Indian character man, is in Portland, and an effort is being made to get him to sign a contract to appear on the circuit of the People's Amusement Company.

Rumor has it in Portland that John Bunny, the "Funny Vitagraph" man, is to be here in Portland soon.

"The Convict's Parole," written by Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the People's Amusement Company, is to appear at the People's Theater in the latter part of May.

Albert Krause, former head usher at the People's Theater, is now house manager of the Star. It is likely that a large sum will soon be expended to improve this theater to a greater extent.

The Pacific Coast Stereopticon Company, manufacturers of slides, have opened headquarters in the Rothchild Building, with Albert Krause as head of the firm.

Ralph R. Earle, the Pathe camera man, has taken pictures of the opening game of the Pacific Coast League at Portland with Governor West pitching the first ball, Mayor Rushlight catching, and Councilman Baker at first base. Mr Earle has also taken pictures of the Celilo Canal that is being built; the construction of the $2,000,000 Harriman Bridge, the clearing of the Portland Harbor and the activities on the large fruit ranches near Portland.

ESSANAY.

THE EYE THAT NEVER SLEEPS (May 14).—At his wits' end to discover and track down a clever counterfeiting gang who are flooding the city with "phoney" money, Chief Burrows, of the Secret Service Bureau, calls in Howard Mayne, the greatest sleuth in his department, and who is enjoying a well-earned vacation. Burrows shows Mayne samples of the counterfeit money and begs him to take the case. Mayne finally consents and takes Mason, a clean-cut young assistant, to aid him. Returning to the National Club Mayne introduces Mason to a gentleman he has been playing billiards with, and all repair to the billiard room. Mayne and the stranger finish their game and Mayne wins. The stranger settles their wager and hands Mayne a five-dollar bill. Mayne is about to pocket the bill when he is amazed to discover it is a counterfeit. He and Mason now watch the stranger depart, and see a supposed peddler of pencils accost him and quietly give him a package of spurious money. Mason is now sent to trail the counterfeiter and watches him enter a rough shack on the river-front. Returning, he informs Mayne, who hits upon a scheme to get in with the gang. Disguising himself as a common thug, Mayne finds refuge in the gang's rendezvous by cleverly being pursued by a policeman. The counterfeiters take him in and make him one of their number. Mason now trails the chief distributor to the rendezvous, is set upon by a watcher and is made a prisoner. Feeling their rendezvous is unsafe after this, the gang prepare to move and the chief tells Mayne to keep watch over Mason. A moment later Mason is amazed to see the supposed thug hold a knife-blade conveniently for the cutting of his bonds, secures a brace of guns from his pocket and the startled gang are suddenly trapped nicely. Quickly Mayne handcuffs them, then astonishes the chief by pulling off his rough cap and revealing his identity as the greatest sleuth of two continents.

A SOUL RECLAIMED (May 16).—Mary Turner, a poor, drink-sodden woman of the tenements, but beautiful of face and form, meets Don Parker, a noted artist, who is walking the streets seeking an inspiration. Don instantly introduces himself and begs her to pose for him. At first Mary refuses, but he insists and she finally consents. In his luxurious studio, Don poses Mary in the robes of the Madonna, and is about to start on the canvas when a poor woman enters with a baby and asks for charity. A happy thought strikes Don, he places the babe in Mary's arms and starts to work out his masterpiece of the Madonna and child. Some months later the picture is finished and Mary leaves. A number of art critics are called in and pronounce Don's canvas a masterpiece. Mr. Knighton, a financier, is so impressed with the work that he purchases and presents it to the cathedral of Saint Hillaire. Many weeks later Don is walking to his studio when he again meets Mary on the street. She is ragged and tries to pass him unobserved, but he stops her and askes why she has sunk to such depths of misery. With tears in her eyes Mary tells him she fears she is lost, but Don points to the distant cathedral, tells her of the wondrous painting within its portals and leads her there. Kneeling before the painting of herself in the robes of the Madonna, Mary pours out the bitterness of her heart while the bishop and Don watch. But the light of salvation has come to the poor girl and, in the weeks that follow, she becomes a nun and prepares to devote her life to the glorious Kingdom that has led her to the light.

AFTER THE REWARD (May 17).—Walter Smithers and his wife prepared to visit her parents in the country. They write the old people a letter that they would like to see them, then start to pack. A girl friend of Mrs. Smithers drops in and agrees to feed the Smithers' dog while they are away. On the way to the train Smithers stops at the butcher shop and asks Schultz, the proprietor, to take a little meat up to the dog every day. The Smithers arrive at the country place and learn that the old folks have gone to the city to see them. They start back. Meanwhile, the girl friend comes to the Smithers' house to feed the dog, and Schultz, the butcher, does likewise. Owing to a newspaper notice of a strange couple breaking into houses to rob, each thinks the other a thief. The girl manages to chase out, hails a friend and sends her for a policeman. The cop arrives, arrests Schultz and hauls him off to the station. Another cop, seeing the girl trying to leave the back way, grabs her and takes her to the station. Meanwhile, the old folks are entering the Smithers' home when a policeman, mistaking them for the mysterious pair of thieves, hauls them to the station. Smithers and his wife, returning home, are amazed to see their dog in the company of a man and little girl on the street. Smithers has the man arrested for stealing the dog and all land at the station. Here a beautiful row ensues, all the prisoners clamoring for their release and trying to explain. Schultz recognizes Smithers, the girl friend sees Mrs. Smithers and the mystery of feeding the dog is explained. Then the old folks are brought in, recognized, and the desk sergeant scratches the blotter again. The man arrested for stealing the dog proves to be a friend of the sergeant and is liberated after telling his story. Consequently the $50 reward for the capture of the real thieves is still being offered.

THE SHERIFF AND HIS MAN (May 18).—The Arizona Kid, a notorious outlaw, makes his escape from jail by sawing the bars from the cell window. Next morning this is discovered and reward notices are scattered broadcast offering $1,000 reward for his apprehension and giving his picture for identification. Todd, sheriff of Coyote county, reads one of the notices and locates Arizona in the town saloon. He captures him, then notifies Matthews, sheriff of Gulch county, to come and get his man. Matthews rides across the desert, takes the outlaw, handcuffs him, puts him on a horse and starts back with him to jail. Out in the desert two villainous Mexicans see the sheriff and the prisoner and decide to secure the horses. Stopping Matthews they beg for a drink of water. Matthews hands over his canteen and is murderously struck down with a knife in the hand of one of the rascals. Arizona pleads with the men to leave him some water, but they mount their horses and leave him stranded and afot with the wounded sheriff on his hands. Securing the key from thh sheriff's pocket Arizona unlocks the handcuffs, gets Matthews on his back and staggers toward town. After a terrible day's travel he arrives at a prospector's shanty, leaves Matthews, takes his star, borrows a gun and sets out after the Mexicans. He runs them down, manacles them and rides back. A week has elapsed and Matthews is on the road to recovery from his wound when Arizona enters with his prisoners. He is about to surrender the star and submit to arrest, when Matthews tells him he is going to make him a deputy, wrings his hand, and hustles the Mexicans out, leaving Arizona to proudly polish the star.

MELIES.

ALL IS FAIR (May 23).—Dick Cartwright, a man of wealth, goes West after being rejected by his fiancée. Upon his arrival he is approached by a stranger, who begs him to go to her house, as a band of horse thieves have invaded her home. Dick being a man of nerve, jumps on a horse, rides to the scene and rescues the mother from the thieves. He falls in love at first sight, and learning that the stranger is the country school ma'am, seeks admission to the night school in order that he may win her affections. Dick pretends to be a stupid country boy; the teacher, being a woman of patience, tries hard to have him learn, but his object was love, not study. One day while riding, the teacher stopped at his residence for a rest, where, much to her surprise, she learns that he is a Harvard graduate, and a man of wealth. She askes for an explanation of his actions. Dick begs forgiveness, explaining that all is fair in love, and finally wins her hand.

LUBIN.

THE WOODEN BOWL (May 13).—Peter and Mary Dawson, together with their son, age six, and Peter's aged father, live on a few acres of poor land and are only able to keep the wolf from the door by hard work. Peter's father is a querulous old man, almost helpless and a great care to them. His infirmity causes him to break several china bowls in which his food is served. Mary and Peter are so provoked, that Peter fashioned a rough, homemade wooden bowl from which the old man is obliged to eat. The boy overhears their talk regarding the wooden bowl and a few days later he is missing. After searching the house, Mary and Peter find him in the attic. He has just finished making two rough wooden bowls. Upon being questioned he explains that they are to be used to hold Mary's and Peter's food when he (the boy) is a man and they have grown old. For the first time Mary and Peter realize the example they have set their son. They hasten to treat the old man with greater consideration, giving him a new china bowl and his almost childish delight is only equaled by the boy's happiness.

A MEXICAN ROMANCE (May 15).—Pepita and Don Jose are betrothed, and the engagement is sealed by the ring being placed upon her finger under the giant cactus in "The Grape Vine," a Spanish cantina, just as Delores, the dancer appears. Don Jose becomes infatuated with the dancer, and, calling her to him, gives her money. Dolores takes the money and departs. Pepita feigns illness and asks to be taken home. Half reluctantly the don accedes. Arriving at her home, Pepita's "illness" is found to be only a ruse on her part, for after bidding the don a hasty good-bye, she determines to follow and shadow him. Returning to "The Grape Vine," heavily veiled, she discovers Don Jose and Delores making love under the giant cactus. Suddenly crazed at the apparent perfidy of the man, she is about to stab him, but the timely arrival of Don Juan, to whom Delores is engage, prevents the act. Overhearing Delores consent to elope with Don Jose, Don Juan arranges for Pepita to disguise herself as the famous dancer. Don Juan escorts her to the home of Delores, where, after a duel of wits between the two women, Delores finally confesses and in conscientious endeavor towards making amends, agrees to help her win back the man she loves. This, however, was not altogether necessary, since we see Don Jose awakening to the fact that his infatuation for the dancer was only momentary, and that he in reality loves Pepita the best after all. Don Jose, in order to prevent his elopement with Delores, decides to disguise himself as an Indian and frighten her. Attired in an Indian costume, Don Jose creeps upon, not Delores, as he thinks, but Pepita, attired in Delores' dancing costume, who is waiting at the appointed spot. Seeing, as she thinks, the "Big Indian," Pepita becomes very much frightened and runs away, followed by the don. Fully determined to give Delores, as he thinks, a fright from which she will never forgive him, Don Jose chases her over hill and dale until they sudenly come upon a band of real Indians. Pepita and Don Jose are in turn chased by the real Indians back to Delores' home, where the don arrives in time to witness Don Juan and Delores, the latter in Pepita's dress, "spooning" near the door. Mistaking Delores for Pepita, Don Jose becomes enraged and snatches her from Don Juan's embrace, only to find out that he had not been chasing Dolores after all. Seeing Delores in Pepita's dress, the truth dawns quickly upon him, and just as he is about to conclude that possibly he had chased Pepita instead of Dolores, his convictions are affirmed by the appearance of Pepita in the costume of the dancer. Lengthy explanations are unnecessary, since Pepita has learned that he really cared for her.

ALL IN THE WASH (May 16).—Mr. Jones receives two tickets for the theater, much to the delight of his wife, and they start to dress for the occasion. Mrs. Jones leaves the house to go to the hair-dresser's, while Mr. Jones prepares to shave and dress. Looking for clean linen, he finds he has no clean shirts. He immediately telephones to the laundry to hurry up with his linen. While the messenger is leaving the laundry office with Jones' laundry he is also asked to deliver a package for an actress. The boy, in his hurry, delivers the actress' laundry to Mr. Jones. Mrs. Jones finds laundry in Mr. Jones' room that certainly does not belong to Jones or herself. She also finds the picture of the actress with "To my dear boy," written on the back. Mrs Jones grows furiously jealous. In the meantime the actress has received Jones' laundry, and finding a slip with Jones' address, she hurries to make an exchange. She meets Mr. Jones in front of his house and is explaining about the exchanging of the laundry when Mrs. Jones comes from the house and recognizes her husband talking with the girl whose picture she found in Jones' room. Mrs. Jones gets the actress' laundry, tears same in ribbons and the actress likewise tears up Jones' shirts. A policeman interferes and Mr. and Mrs. Jones decide they will not go to the theater that night.

JUST MARRIED (May 16).—Lord and Lady Algy have just been married and are spending their honeymoon by making a tour of the States. Their periods of happiness are interrupted by marked and frequent outbursts of temper on the part of Lady Algy, so much so that on the morning of their arrival at the "Imperial Hotel," she throws his clothes out of the window; he in retaliation throws hers out. Two actors who are out of engagements and funds, and passing under the window at that moment, were the recipients of the aforesaid clothes, and the lord's card case. Being versatile in their act, they decide to assume the characters of Lord and Lady Algy on their honeymoon. They were a great success in their roles until they meet the landlady to whom they owe a large board bill. They hand the landlady one of the lord's cards and make a hasty exit. The story takes up with the various adventures where they endeavor to escape in a cab with a not very fast horse, and are at last captured by the police, put on their trail by Lord and Lady Algy, who discover someone has been using their cards to their disadvantage.

HONOR AND THE SWORD (May 18).—Tom Sage, son of a millionaire, is honorably courting Judith Dexter, a clever actress. One day, waiting for her at the stage door after rehearsal, he hears a commotion inside and forcing his way in finds that Leon Martel, the fencing master, has insulted his sweetheart, upon which he promptly knocks the offender down and takes Judith away. He then proposes that they get married and that she shall quit the stage. The actress consents and they forthwith go to a minister. Randolph Sage, Tom's father being informed, is furious; he throws his son adrift and tells him to go out and make a living for his fortune hunting wife. Tom secures a position with a jewelry firm as bookkeeper at a moderate salary, and is well liked by his employers. Figuring up expenses they find that the salary is hardly sufficient, and after a while Judith induces her husband to permit her to open a school for fencing, an art at which she is an expert. Tom unwillingly consents. One day the firm has a call to send some valuable jewelry to a customer and Tom is intrusted with the errand. At the depot he meets a friend and introduces his wife. For a moment he forgets the bag which is on a seat. Martel is there and sees them. With the desire to get square for the blow struck, and seeing the bag, opens it, abstracts the diamonds and the letter of introduction. Tom reports the loss to the firm and they give him five hours to recover or be arrested. Martel visits the house and offers to give up the

ECLIPSE.

UNDER THE SWAY (May 15).—Philip is in love with Maud, a charming girl, but she is under the hypnotic influence of Count Donati. One day, the latter, using his wonderful power, orders her to bring to him a valuable necklace belonging to her aunt.

While in the act of taking the jewels, Philip happens to come upon the pair, and, witnessing their evil purpose, seizes a revolver and wounds Donati as he makes his escape. The latter attempts to reach the sea, but his exertions prove too great, and he expires from his wound.

Just before his death, he confides the jewels to a fisherman, and instructs him to return them to the rightful owner.

In the meantime, Maud confesses the crime, and is only saved from the most dire consequences by the arrival of the faithful fisherman with the necklace, who clears up the mystery. Maud then resumes her former position of love and trust, and soon is engaged to marry Philip.

SCENES IN KENT, ENGLAND (May 15).—Kent contains many of the most picturesque spots in all England. In the film we see several beautiful scenes in and about the quaint towns of Canterbury, Maidstone and Yarling.

KALEM.

"FIGHTING DAN" McCOOL (May 13).—"Fighting Dan" McCool of the Confederate army, is detailed to visit Reidville as a private citizen and look out for spies who may be enlisting. There he meets Edith, a charming Southern girl, and he immediately becomes suspicious of Bert, who is paying ardent court to the young woman. There is a call for troops and men from every walk of life abandon their labors and take up the cause of the South. Bert swaggers about in his new uniform and for the first time it is noticed that Dan has not declared himself as a volunteer. He is branded as a coward and is shunned by Edith and her friends.

Within a few days Dan secures positive evidence of Bert's treachery, which is to give the Confederate battery to the Federals. A fierce engagement takes place in the village street and Bert displays his cowardice. Terror reigns and the Southerners flee before the fierce and unexpected assault of the enemy. Dan now sees that it is time for him to act. He picks up Bert's discarded sword, rallies the troops and leads them to victory. Once again he is "Fighting Dan" McCool and the day is saved. As the evening falls Dan again visits Edith's house, where news of his valor has preceded him. He is now seen in his true light and when Edith promises him her hand, the hero declares that the day has brought him a double victory.

RANCH GIRLS ON A RAMPAGE (May 15).—A party of girls from a southern California ranch arrive at Venice, the Coney Island of the West, for a day's sport. They overlook nothing and find a great deal of amusement on the merry-go-round. The Grand Canyon Roller Coaster next receives their attention and they dash around the curves at break-neck speed. The miniature railroad is held up and when they have eluded the officers, the girls visit the dancing pavilion. Finally the vigilant police overtake the party of merrymakers, who have a difficult time in making their getaway.

EGYPT, THE MYSTERIOUS (May 15).—As the tourists visit the native quarter of Cairo a page of the Arabian Nights is presented. They wind their way through the constant procession of merchants and camels and visit an Egyptian hardware store. They patronize an old lemonade vendor and stop at the shop of a wood-turner. A Mohammedan funeral passes and the paid mourners present an odd sight. Departing from this city the tourists come to the famous pyramid, Cheops, built 2,000 years before Christ's birth. From thence they proceed to the Sphinx in its silent grandeur. A magnificent view of this celebrated figure—66 feet high and 172 feet long—is presented.

THE PILGRIMAGE (May 17).—In a picturesque German village William meets Gretchen and when he returns home he tells his mother of the beautiful face which he has seen. As the days pass the acquaintanceship ripens into love and the sweethearts become downcast when it is found that William must leave for the city to enter his apprenticeship. The young couple visit the Shrine of the Virgin Mary, where they plight their troth and exchange many promises of constancy.

Two years elapse and William returns home. He greets his mother and hastens to Gretchen's house, only to find that the girl has been unable to withstand the sorrow of separation and has passed away.

William is almost distracted and his mother endeavors to console him. A party of pilgrims pass the house on their way to the shrine and the good mother suggests that they, too, visit the sacred spot. Through an old tradition the pilgrims prepare a wax symbol of their afflictions, which they present to the Mother of God with their prayers and William, therefore, molds a waxen heart which he places before the shrine, promising to honor the Holy Mother all the days of his life.

When William and his mother return home the young man falls asleep. A vision of the Virgin appears to him, touches his heart and tells him he is soon to be reunited with his loved one. The mother turns to her son and finding his life has departed, she realizes that Providence has offered this deliverance from his grief, and the good woman kneels to offer a prayer.

SELIG.

THE COMING OF COLUMBUS (May 6—First Reel).—Christopher Columbus and his young son leave the quaint old votive shrine in Portugal and after many hardships, they find their way into Spain. Here Columbus is successful in interesting Fra Antonio, the Queen's confessor, in his maps and theories. Other ecclesiastics refuse to believe in his ideas, but finally, through the good offices and trust of Antonio, the ambitious mariner is granted an interview with Queen Isabella. This takes place upon the battlefield of Granada. Columbus has been no more than presented to the Queen, when the news of the surrender of the Moorish Army, unfortunately interrupts the interview, and in the time given over to rejoicing, Columbus is forced to shoulder another disappointment. He is now tried for his sanity by the wise men of Salamanca. They only marvel at his wild theories. Antonio once more visits the Queen in the interests of Columbus and this time she is so impressed with his theories that she orders her jewels to be sold, that she alone may personally finance the great undertaking. She, however, is spared the sacrifice through the generosity of Fernandez, the Court Physician, and thus is calendared a great day in the world's history. Columbus is made an admiral, outfitted with three ships, and departs in quest of the new world, which he believes to exist.

Reel No. 2—The three ships of Palos, the Santa Maria, the Pinta, and the Nina, with Columbus in charge, set sail, as tradition tells us, to "God knew where." As day after day passed by, the boats ever headed westward, a feeling of unrest surges in the breasts of the crew who have sworn their allegiance to the flag of Castile, and they demand a return to the mother country. But Columbus proves his superiority by facing the mutiny and ordering the men back to their posts. The mighty influence of this great mariner sways the discontent of his followers and in the tiny cabins a prayer is offered, mass is read, and with bowed heads all renew their vows of allegiance to their superior. Columbus in addressing says, "Men! We have set sail for the Indies across the Western Seas, and with God's help and blessing, to the Indies we are going. Look you to it that we have no more of this, for, grumbling or no grumbling, we are going to find the land which we have come so far to seek." On the dawn of October 12th, 1492, Columbus assures his followers that he had seen lights to the westward, during the night. A few hours later a dove alights on the mast watch of the Santa Maria. This alone means to Columbus the realization of all his hopes and ambitions. Land is now sighted and the little fleet comes to anchor and Columbus plants the flag of Spain on the New World.

Reel No. 3—Columbus remains in the New World until the middle of November and, having persuaded several of the natives of both sexes to go with him, he sets sail for Spain. On a bright morning in April, Columbus enters Barcelona and is received by a great procession composed of priests, nobles and military men. He is then led to a vast hall, where seated on their thrones Ferdinand and Isabella wait to receive them.

Columbus enters, dressed as an admiral, the cynosure of all eyes; following him are the dusky natives. The latter carry birds of strange and brilliant plumage from the tropical lands. Fruits, living alligators, and many other strange objects from the far off New World. The sovereigns rise to receive him, and as a murmur of applause breaks from the lips of the haughty grandes, the King, moved by the simplicity of the man, knights him.

Columbus attends a feast given in his honor by the Grand Cardinal. A courier, moved by a narrow feeling of personal jealousy, asks the admiral whether or not in his opinion, any man given the same opportunities, could not have discovered the Indies, which he thought he had found.

In answer to this, Columbus took an egg that was before him and invited the courier to make it stand on one of its ends. He could not do it. Then several others tried to do the trick, but failed.

Then the admiral struck the egg upon the table with such force as to flatten the end by fracture, and left it standing.

"Any one can do that," exclaimed the courier. "After I have shown the way," replied Columbus. "After I have shown the way to the Indies it is easy to follow. The courier was answered. Columbus returns to the New World at the close of May, 1498. Here he finds everything in confusion. His enemies have determined to ruin him, and false charges are preferred against him at the Court of Spain. The great discoverer is taken back to Spain in irons and dies before he is released. Thus closes the story of "The Coming of Columbus."

BIOGRAPH.

WHEN THE FIRE-BELLS RANG (May 13).—They are brothers, one is a member of the village fire department, the other the property man at the "Opry House." A traveling dramatic company arrives, and, in putting on a Roman tragedy, needs twenty "supers" to play "Roman soldiers." "Props" engages the members of the fire company, who are rehearsed and dressed in Roman costumes. Everything goes fine until the fire-bells ring out an alarm, then—well—

THE FURS (May 13).—Her mother-in-law strenuously objects to her extravagance, and so wifey has to resort to subtle means to get a set of furs that strikes her fancy. She gets the furs all right, but in scheming to get them home, plays her game right into mamma-in-law's hand. To tell more of the story would spoil the surprises pulled off in the comedy.

HIS LESSON (May 16).—He had no thought, but to work and save money. His poor wife did nothing but drudge, with no return other than an existence. This cannot last; it poisons one's spirit in time. Day after day it was work, without an affectionate word or glance from her husband, who always met her plea for a new hat or dress with the expression. "We cannot afford it, we must save our money; besides, your hat and dress are good enough." One day, a young man stops at the farm-house to get a drink of water. He imagines from her sad face that all is not as it should be, and tells her that her eyes are too beautiful for tears and her hands too delicate to carry the burdens set for her. The husband sees and hears and is at last made to realize that her life, without the sunshine of love, is but a little better than death, and so he makes a change for the better.

CINES.

TWO WEARY WILLIES (May 14).—Jack and Jake, two hungry tramps, devise a plan to provide themselves with a free meal. Jack dresses himself in a policeman's uniform and remains outside, while Jake enters a fashionable restaurant and orders a sumptuous feast. Of course, he cannot settle the bill, and the irate proprietor rushes out to find a policeman. He returns with Jack, who appears to angrily arrest the offender.

When they get outside the jovial fellows exchange clothes, and attempt to play the game again. This time, however, the proprietor happens to find a real policeman, who carries poor Jack off to prison, thus proving that a scheme which will work once will not always bear repeating.

THE SUBSTITUTE (May 14).—Mr. Stout, a reporter, is ordered to attend an official dinner in honor of the State secretary, but, on account of severe illness, is forced to send a substitute.

The latter appears, but is not able to meet requirements as to etiquette and table manners, and after creating considerable disturbance is unceremoniously thrown out. Returing home he boasts of his journalistic ability, having managed to chronicle the fact of the State official's big appetite, but failed to secure a word of his speech.

FAMILY JARS (May 18).—William and Edith, newly married, are spending their honeymoon in a delightful country village, when, sudenly they receive a telegram from Edith's parents, quickly followed by one from William's parents stating that they would pay them a visit.

All four duly arive, and enjoy a happy reunion for a short while, but soon a warm political discussion develops, with the result that the two families part in anger, taking their respective children with them.

Both parties make their way to the station, where they find that the London train is two hours late. The old people philosophically settle down to wait in the rest room, and are soon fast asleep, while William and Edith patch up their differences and decide to go to Brighton to finish the honeymoon, leaving a note to that effect.

When the London train is due, the old people awaken, and, reading the note, realize the ridiculous aspect of the whole affair, and decide to let bygones be bygones.

VITAGRAPH.

LOVE IN THE GHETTO (May 13).—Everybody's ordered out on a strike when Benjamin Cohen, proprietor of a sweat-shop, reduces the employees' wages ten per cent. Rebecca Barish, a young Jewess, and her father, reluctantly go out with the rest. Unable to find other work, their circumstances become so reduced that Rebecca is obliged to go to the pawnshop with some of their belongings, and while there, Jacob Stattler, the pawnbroker, takes a fancy to her, and offers her father, through a schatchen, five hundred dollars to give her to him in mariage. Rebecca is almost heartbroken when she hears the proposition and that her father has accepted it. Sammy Bertram, her sweetheart, calls to see her and when she imparts the news to him, he is almost beside himself.

Sammy lives with his uncle, an invalid of considerable means, who loves his nephew because of his kindness and the solicitude he has for him at all times. He tells his uncle of his trouble and he at once becomes interested and tells Sammy to wheel him in his invalid chair to Mr. Barish's house. They arrive there just as Stattler and Rebecca are about to be made man and wife. Sammy's uncle intercedes for his nephew and offers to give him sufficient dowry and to make him his heir at his death. Rebecca refuses to marry the older man, preferring to marry for love, and the gift of his uncle to Sammy makes them wealthy enough to gain the consent of her father.

THE SPIDER'S WEB (May 14).—Graham Lawlor, a banker and financier, is persuaded to invest in the Silver Shield Mines and become president of the company. Harris, Brennen & Lester, the promoters, are frauds. Lawlor sends word to his son, who is practicing law in a small town, and tells him to give up his practice and take the secretaryship of the company. Trevor, the son, comes to look things over. He is convinced there is something wrong, refuses the secretaryship and warns his father. His father and he quarrel. Trevor goes back to his practice.

Lester, the junior partner in the mine, makes love to his stenographer, Brenda Wray, and then casts her off. Ugly rumors get about regarding the stability of the Silver Shield Mine. The others try to throw all the blame for the failure on Lawlor. He declares, however, that he has papers in his possession which will exonerate him. They determine to get these incriminating papers. They brige Lawlor's servant to steal them. The plot is overheard by Brenda, who has visited Lester's rooms to demand justice. Trevor comes to town to defend his father. Brenda calls on him and tells him who the thief is. Thompson, the servant, is arrested and turns State's evidence. On his evidence Lawlor is exonerated, and Brennen, Harris and Lester are arrested.

LEAP YEAR PROPOSALS (May 15).—John Bunnybunch is desperately in love with Lilly Walkerin. He has proposed to her and while she hesitates, John feels that all hope is not lost. Miss Bulfinch, a susceptible old maid, has been casting longing glances at John and she is to him a perfect nightmare. While meditating, he falls asleep and dreams that he is pursued by the spinster, who takes every possible means of appearing before him and pressing her leap year proposals wherever he goes, bobbing out of a trunk, gaining access to his room, disguised as a man, hiding under the bed and pursuing him in most absurd and irrepressible fashion. Lastly, he dreams that he is just about to kiss Lilly, when his persistent pursuer butts her caricature of a face between theirs. At this point he wakes up. His joy is unconfined when he finds it is only a dream.

A PAGE IN CANADIAN HISTORY (May 15).—The Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, in motion pictures introduces us to a distinguished character. The Duchess of Connaught, as she exhibits her grace and beauty, gliding across the ice of the royal skating rink, gives us a convincing evidence of her democratic spirit, which has made her a popular favorite. We are accorded an intimate view of Princess Patricia, a most affable and charming personage of royalty. During our visit to Montreal we are taken into the Privy Council of the House of Parliament and are made acquainted with the dignitaries of the Canadian Government. In addition we are escorted through the National Library and get a sight of many of the historic antiquities, which had much to do with the establishment of British possession in America.

THE GREATER LOVE (May 17).—By some chance of fortune, or misfortune, Jack Manton, the young sheriff, finds upon the plains a young fellow suffering from a serious wound. He brings him into the home of Nell Bannister, Jack's sweetheart, and she cares for the stranger until he recovers. The sufferer is won by Nell's kindness and before he leaves her home, is unable to hide his love for her, which is unexpectedly displayed in Jack's presence. This arouses the sheriff's jealousy and he cannot resist snatching a flower from his supposed rival, given him by Nell in a moment of unrestrained kindness and a spirit of pleasantry. Determined to settle the question of Nell's choice, Jack bids her choose between him and the man whom he has befriended. Nell, while not inclined to encourage Jack's jealousy, does not hesitate to convince him of her love for him. The stranger goes into the parlor and writes a note, telling Jack that he is the "Kansas Kid," on whose head there is a reward, and twits him for losing a chance to capture his man. Then he rides away. When the note is found, Jack starts in pursuit. Before going, Nell gives him a photograph of herself, which he places in his pocket.

"The Kid" leads his man a lively chase and on his way posts a warning to the sheriff that it means sure death to follow him. This does not alarm Jack, but, nevertheless, he is reminded of the truth of it when he is shot by the desperado and unhorsed. "The Kid" searches Jack's clothes and takes the photograph of Nell. Before he has proceeded very far, he repents of his deed and returns to the sheriff. Placing him upon his horse, he takes Jack back to Nell's house, where he is surrounded by a posse of vigilants and captured. Before being taken to jail, he receives an acknowledgment from the sheriff for the mercy which he showed him when he had had him at a disadvantage.

THE MAN UNDER THE BED (May 18).—We all remember the boy who cried wolf so often that when the wolf really did come the people did not believe it. Little Billy had evidently forgotten, or never heard this. Martha and Jane, two little girls, are very fearful of burglars entering their room. Their brother Billy thinks he will play a joke on them, and stuffs a pair of trousers, to which he attaches a pair of boots, and places them under the bed, the feet protruding. When the girls enter their room they see what appears to be a man's foot sticking out from underneath the bed. The girls are almost frightened to death, very much to the amusement of Billy.

A few days later the children's parents are called away for the night and a real burglar enters the house. The girls have retired. Martha sees the man, hidden under the bed, and while very much frightened, she does not lose her presence of mind. She pretends she has a toothache and says she will have to get up and go into the front room to get some medicine to relieve it. She tells Billy of the presence of the burglar and he goes out to notify the neighbors, while the girl returns to the room. Jane reading and Martha listening and nursing her toothache. Some of the neighbors surround the house and others enter. The burglar, hearing their approach, climbs from the window and down the porch, where he is quickly captured by those waiting outside. Just as this happens, the children's parents return and are very much surprised to learn what has taken place. They don't forget to tell Billy that his joke on his sisters has come true and in the future not to joke about matters of so serious a nature, which might come true and prove disastrous.

EDISON.

THE BANK PRESIDENT'S SON (May 14).—Jack is paying teller in his father's bank, and becomes engaged to Edith. Ralph, the cashier of the bank, also in love with Edith, proposes to her and feels very bitter toward Jack when he finds that he is the prospective groom. Jack, brought up in luxury, spends money far beyond his allowance, and has a violent quarrel with his father over the accumulation of his debts and particularly when he learns that Jack has given Edith a trotting horse as an engagement present. Ralph overhears their quarrel and thinking to discredit Jack in Edith's eyes, takes money from Jack's cash box and fixes his accounts so that the cash will not be immediately missed.

The bank examiner, making his rounds, finds the shortage and questions Jack. Jack, of course, professes ignorance and the examiner takes the matter up to the president, Jack's father, who, still angry at Jack's disobedience, thinks Jack really has taken the money and refuses to protect him. The examiner insists upon Jack's arrest and in spite of his appeal to his father Jack is led to prison. He writes Edith of his predicament and Edith at once interviews his father, but the old man refuses to relent and insists that Jack take his medicine. Edith thereupon goes to engage a lawyer to undertake Jack's defense, but finds that his retaining fee is large. Not having enough money she hits upon the plan to enter the horse Jack has given her in the races to be held at the ice track on the river. She enters the race and, driving the horse herself, is a winner by several lengths. Amid the congratulations of her friends she is awarded the substantial purse, which she at once turns over to the lawyer, who accepts Jack's case.

Strolling about the track the lawyer sees Ralph throw away a racing ticket showing the loss of a bet of five hundred dollars on the last race. Knowing the cashier's salary does not warrant such frenzied finance, he becomes suspicious and confides his suspicions to Edith. Edith, knowing Ralph's hatred for Jack, brings the matter to the notice of Jack's father, who questions Ralph. Ralph at first denies his guilt, but when confronted with the tell-tale racing ticket finally confesses that he and not Jack, is the real thief. Edith leads the now conscience-stricken father to the court house where Jack is at once released on bail.

Through Edith's efforts, father and son make up their quarrel and they leave the court house a happy trio.

A PERSONAL AFFAIR (May 15).—Bob and two friends were ridiculing the personals in a daily paper one day when Bob conceives the idea of inserting a "personal" just for a lark, representing himself as a young girl, heiress to eighty thousand dollars, desiring the acquaintance of a sincere gentleman. The following day the ad is published and read by Ann, who, in the spirit of a joke, urged on by two girls, answers it, representing herself as a sincere, lonely gentleman. Several letters pass between Ann and Bob without either of them suspecting the other's true identity. Finally, a place of meeting face to face is agreed upon and the day and hour is set, the gentleman to wear a white carnation in his coat lapel as a mark of identification. Ann is the first to arrive at the appointed place. She stations a boy with a large box of white carnations not far away, instructing him to present each man who passes with a carnation, beginning promptly at four o'clock.

Bob, dressed in female attire, arrives a few minutes ahead of time and anxiously awaits the gentleman with the carnation, while his companions stand outside to see the fun. They don't have to wait long for Bob accosts several men wearing carnations who in turn are shocked, surprised, indignant, etc. One man of pugilistic tendencies is exceedingly angry, when he discovers after a short flirtation that Bob is not a girl but a man masquerading. A fight ensues which brings the police and a crowd to the spot. Ann and the girls, who have been watching the result of their joke from a distance, now come forward, whereupon Bob and Ann recognize each other as having met before and after explaining their practical joke to the policeman, who in turn pacifies the pugilistic gentleman. Bob and Ann renew their acquaintance, and thus a romance of love begins.

JIM'S ATONEMENT (May 13).—Jim and Frank were friends as well as brother surveyors. Jim was happily married to Mollie, who one day finding an old photograph of her hubby planned to have it enlarged as a pleasant surprise for him. Now Frank was an amateur photographer and Mollie consulted him on the subject. Unfortunately their consultations were rather frequent and apparently secretive, and Jim getting wise to this rushed to the false conclusion and allowed jealousy to get possession of his mind.

The two men met on a lonely path in the course of their surveying work, on top of a big rock. There was a quarrel. Frank accidentally falls off the cliff. The infuriated Jim went home to Mollie and demanded the photograph which he thought he saw his rival, Frank, give her, and which the girl now gives him, disclosing to her husband the fact that the photograph was that of himself. Of course the foolish fellow was instantly repentant. Hastening back to the cliff with help, he lowered himself by means of a rope and personally rescued Frank from his dangerous position. Explanations made the two men firmer friends than ever.

LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET (May 16).—Sir Robert Audley, while a good and honorable man, has no social ambitions, and after a time Lady Audley's life becomes monotonous, so she devises a scheme which she believes will be of advantage to her. While her husband is away from home on a long trip, she plans to become suddenly ill and die; this is successful, and enables her to appear under another name. She next ensnares a wealthy nobleman, Sir Michael, and at last sees her dream about to be realized. When Sir Robert returns he penetrates her disguise and threatens to expose the ruse. She, failing to persuade him to keep silent, determines to put him out of the way forever. For this purpose an old well in the Abbey Court grounds is used: there Sir Robert is supposed to have fallen to his death.

Her secret, however, is whispered about by a villager. Sir Michael's son denounces her, but his father is completely infatuated, and therefore gives no credence to the rumor and orders his son from his home. Through a chain of circumstances Lady Audley succeeds in getting her enemies under one roof—a quaint old English Inn. Here the desperate creature plans to destroy them all. The dread cry of fire rings out on the still village air—and heroic rescues alone save her victims from a horrible death. Confronted by them on the threshold of the castle, just as she fancied all evidence against her had been consigned to the flames, Lady Audley collapses and insanity mercifully closes the portals of her distorted mind.

HENPECKED IKE (May 18).—Ike Slocum was much given to loafing it is true, but his misfortune in this respect was due to a congenital laziness of disposition which kept him perennially averse to labor of any kind. He would not work at his job, which was that of nothing in particular out of doors, and he evinced a strong disinclination when indoors to do anything but hang around. Mrs. Slocum kept a boarding house and, growing tired of seeing her spouse playing the gentleman, took things into her own hands at last, and gave him the alternative of helping her in the house, or quitting. Ike chose the former course. He started in by waiting on the table, washing dishes, chopping wood, etc. It was a hard enough job, but the worst was yet to come. Mrs. Slocum set him to scrubbing the kitchen floor. This was too much for Ike, so he packed the "burro," Dolly, and left home with him in search of adventure. He met with so many adventures that he soon got tired of them. Dolly deserted him; he lost his way and became hungry and footsore. In desperation, he decided there was nothing for him to do but to make tracks for home.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Slocum mourned him as dead. Idle though he was, she loved him in her own way, being of the opinion that it was homely-like to see a man around the house. So when Ike returned plus Dolly, he received a warmer welcome than he anticipated. Matters between husband and wife were patched up and there was nothing further for Dolly to do but to put on a sympathetic demeanor at the reconciliation.

ENGLISH HUNTING SCENES (May 18).—One of the most admired phases of English life is hunting. It is not generally known that the government officially countenances stag hunting, a royal pack of dogs, royal huntsmen and a master of hounds being paid for out of the country's revenue. Hunting indeed enters into the life of the English people. Aristocrats and plebeians take part in the various kinds of sport on a common basis.

In this film there is shown a series of views of the hunting of the stag in rural England. All classes of society are represented; well mounted huntsmen and well trained dogs lead the field in pursuit of the stag. The quarry is ultimately run to earth in water, let it be said, and is secured for being hunted on another occasion. The film includes some characteristic views of English country landscape, and shows the gentle sport in a very engaging aspect. The humanitarians protest against hunting in England, but the love of sport is so deeply ingrained in English people that it will never be eradicated.

AMERICAN.

THE MYTH OF JAMASHA PASS (May 9).—Three miners, one an old veteran who had hunted the veins of a dozen bonanzas, and two younger men, camped one night in the Pass of Jamasha. When the supper had been cleared away, pipes were drawn and the old miner told the time-honored tale of the Mystical Maid of Jamasha. The young men laughed. The old miner rolled up his blanket, shaking his hoary head and refusing to spend the night in the haunted pass.

Dick Whiting was awakened by a falling stone. Gazing up the mountain side he beheld a beautiful girl, arrayed in tattered garments, waving her arms to him from a lofty rocky pinnacle. With eyes fastened on the phantom, he rose and followed her up the path, she preceding, mocking, beckoning. He met her at a tree, reached out his arms for her when suddenly to his terror, she vanished into the air.

Jim Billings was awakened by a soft pressure on his arm. Suddenly aroused, he stared with mingled awe and fear at the spectacle of a beautiful woman close beside him. She rose and he followed her rapidly up the mountain. Here they met Dick gazing blankly about him, but the phantom had disappeared. The men parted, saying to each other that they would no longer seek this elusive shadow. But hardly had they parted when both retraced their steps, hoping once more to see the vision. Dick found her, sat beside her on a great rock looking into her eyes. Jim saw him there and they grappled, Dick falling down the mountain side to destruction. Appalled, with a nameless fear in his heart, Jim looked about him. There she stood, beckoning, waving him to her. He followed, hurried after her over mountain and ravine until he had fallen, dying by a silver stream that trickled through the rock. Looking up he saw her, this elusive shadow, smiling at him, beckoning, nodding welcome, waving him to her, until his face fell forward on the rock.

THE OTHER WISE MAN (May 13).—Jim Bangs, slick of manner and dainty of dress,made a sensation in La Mesa when he arrived and placed a sign in front of his new offices advertising stock for sale in his fire insurance venture. But he was wiser than most promoters and took care to take into partnership an old wag about town noted for the money he had accumulated and the confidence of the town in his business ability.

Stock sold rapidly through the workings of this combination. Pretty Miss Blackwell, who kept the only boarding house in town, was interested and was frequently visited by Jim Bangs and his accomplice, old man Skathaway.

One day the local accommodation stopped at the little station and a handsome, debonair young man alighted. Grip in hand he strolled down the main street, finally arriving before the office of Jim Bangs. He read with a derisive smile, the placard which adorned the front door, when his face lighted with sudden inspiration. Why this was surely his old pal Jim Bangs of New York, with whom he had operated many a confidence game in the past before the reformation which made of him a traveling salesman.

Smiling reminiscently, he made his way to Miss Blackwell's boarding house, where he was electrified to see Jim Bangs and Miss Blackwell earnestly engaged in conversation over the proposed stock sale. The old pals exchanged a glance, but did not speak.

Two weeks later the traveling salesman found himself deeply in love with Miss Blackwell. He advised her against the stock deal and told her of his past. Jim Bangs was also busy. Finding his field invaded, he promptly notified old Skathaway, who stirred up the populace against him. Then the traveling man spoke. The crowd, led by him, raided the office of Jim Bangs and rode Jim and his accomplice out of town on a rail. The traveling man and Miss Blackwell watched the proceedings from the office porch. Then, taking up his suit-case, the ex-confidence man bade her a sorrowful farewell despite her entreaties and left town by the next train, confident that for once in his misspent life he had done the community a good turn.

RELIANCE.

THE RECOIL (May 8).—Giovanni is the leader of discontented laborers. Simpson, the young superintendent, is in love with Giovanni's daughter, but Giovanni doesn't know it because of the sure opposition he would create if it came to his knowledge. Simpson does evrything he can to prevent his employers from getting after Giovanni, but he fails and is instructed to have Giovanni sent up. He tells Giovanni's daughter about his predicament, but she tells him to do his duty, that she is not in favor of his anarchistic ideas. He is so impressed by the girl's courage that he asks her to marry him at once and she agrees. Giovanni is sent up for disorderly conduct, and he gets the limit. The newly married couple settle down and the only blight on their happiness is the girl's grief over her father. Simpson sympathizes with her and she realizes that it cannot be helped. Giovanni is released and his first thought is to make good his threat—to "get" Simpson when he got out.

Knowing it is the hour when Simpson will be practically alone at the works, he takes his time clock bomb and hides in one of the old shacks. Simpson comes in and is overcome and tied tightly in a chair. The bomb is placed in front of him. Giovanni leaves, locking the door after him. He goes to his old home and finds it deserted. Flashes go back all the time to Simpson and each time the clock facing him shows another minute gone. He meets a friend and is told that his daughter married Simpson. His anger well nigh becomes insanity and he vows to kill her too. He gets his stiletto and starts for the Simpson home. He finds the door open and enters. Upstairs his daughter is sewing on baby clothes. He steps into the room bent on murder, then sees her kiss the little clothes. His hand lowers and he slowly goes over to her. She rises and with a glad cry runs to him. He holds her from him and tries to hide his knife. He then gets the whole story and again his anger flares forth until she picks up the baby clothes and tells him of the future. Then the horrible thought bursts upon him that the father of his daughter's child will be murdered by him if he can't reach him in time. He tells her, begs forgiveness and rushes from the room as she drops to her knees. Over hill, down streets, over fences, exhausted and hardly able to stagger, he fights his way on, while all the time we see Simpson facing the clock with its hands steadily reaching the hour. On the minute before, he smashes through the door and grasping the bomb throws it beyond the shack, where it explodes. The girl, as the clock reaches the hour, faints. Untying Simpson the Italian breaks down and falls on his knees beside him sobbing. Simpson helps him to his feet and they leave. The father, daughter and husband are reconciled at the finish.

THE MISER'S DAUGHTER (May 11).—Gertrude, the pretty daughter of a miserly farmer, receives an invitation to attend a party at the parsonage. Her one frock is shabby and well worn, but her mother persuades her to go, despite this. At the parsonage she meets a city chap. A few weeks later Gertrude receives a note from the city folks, asking her to come to town and spend a few weeks with them. This letter makes her very happy, until she remembers her shabby clothes. She asks her mother to try and get some money out of her miserly father. The mother asks, but is refused. The next day, while the farmer is out of town, the mother finds an amount of money in his desk. Reasoning that half is her's, she divides the money and takes her share. With this she fits out Gertrude for her visit and the girl departs. Later the farmer returns and, missing his money, he accuses his wife. She admits her guilt. He bids her leave his home, and she goes to the parsonage, where they receive her kindly. A few days later the lonely man begins to want his wife. He realizes his fault and goes after her. She had been lonely too, and so is glad to return to her own home. The next day, Gertrude comes back to them still believing that it was her father who gave her the money. The city chap is with her, and she proudly displays a wedding ring.

THANHOUSER.

JILTED (May 14).—When the beautiful heroine and the gallant hero are wrecked, or drift to a desert island, or are marooned, or are left behind when the others sail away, they ALWAYS get married—in story books.

Of course, it is all right in make-believe-land, but in real life such a course would be inconvenient, and so a certain young woman found.

She was pretty enough to be a heroine and the man who saved her life was brave enough to be a hero, but she was very mournful when she reached her friends, and thought of the rules laid down by our most popular authors.

The young woman was a college graduate, wealthy in her own right, and a painter from choice. The hero was a common sailor, brave enough, yet not the kind of a man she would pick out for a life partner.

Then there was another reason. This "reason" was a wealthy, well bred young man, who adored her, and whom she deeply loved. They were engaged, both were perfectly happy, but the romantic young woman believed that it could never be. By all the laws of literature, her life belonged to the man who had saved it; so when they were rescued, she wrote two notes, one to the preserver of her life, informing him that she would marry him, and the other to her fiance, tearfully informing him that all was over between them.

Real life differs decidedly from fiction. Men do not always wed the women whose lives they save. If they did so, a hero would go on the retired list after one act of bravery and only be eligible again when he became a widower or was freed by the divorce courts. So, for reasons that satisfied at least four persons, this adventure did not end in the story book way, and everybody was happy.

NIAGARA THE BEAUTIFUL (May 14).—A beautiful motographic study of the Falls, full of effects that will startle and thrill.

THE LITTLE SHUT IN (May 17).—His home was a dreary room in a basement; he was hopelessly crippled; his widowed mother was just able to keep their home together by steady work as a washerwoman, and he had no toys or other boys to play with.

Despite his sickness and poverty the little shut in was a cheery chap, and invented games of his own. His favorite one was weaving romances about the persons who passed his window. The window was below the level of the sidewalk, and all he could see of them was their feet.

There were three pair of feet that stood out from the others. First, there were "the little feet." The boy liked to see them when they passed, for they were pretty and dainty, and he knew their owner must be a charming girl. Next appeared "the manly feet," which seemed to be irresistibly attracted to "the little feet." They soon were traveling side by side, day after day. It pleased the child, for he liked both of the friends he had never seen.

Of a different calibre were "the cruel feet," well cared for, prosperous and arrogant. From the first the child did not like them. Then when he saw them kick an inoffensive dog, he gave them the name that he never forgot.

One day, however, the child found that the romance of the "little feet" and the "manly feet" had been blighted. They went by the window as usual, but separately, and each seemed unhappy. The ordinary observer would hardly be able to learn how expressive feet are, but the child had nothing else to do, and he could tell.

It made him very, very unhappy, but he was helpless and could do nothing. Then a new sorrow came into his life, for "little feet" passed one day, and "cruel feet" was with her. The child decided that helpless or not he must interfere, and he planned a way himself.

"Little feet" passed the next morning, all alone. She found an obstruction in her way, and looked down. There she saw a crutch, with a note pinned on it. She read the note, addressed to "dear lady with the little feet," and learned that a "little shut in" wanted to see her. Peering in the window she perceived the boy, and good naturedly went into the house to talk to him.

She gave him a rose, and read to him, but didn't know of his plan to bring "manly feet" back. The child was too shrewd for that He waited with the rose in his hand, until "manly feet" came wearily by. Then he tossed the flower out into the street. Naturally it surprised "manly feet." He located the place from which it came, bent over, looked in, and saw the girl of his dreams. Also a crippled boy, a stranger who mysteriously beckoned him to enter.

When his two friends confronted each other, the boy told them all about it, and begged the girl to keep away from "cruel feet." The child's story touched her, and anyway the quarrel with "manly feet" was a silly affair. The result was that they made up, to the joy of the little cripple.

From his window now the child can often see "little feet" and "manly feet" as happy as he would wish them. There is one difference now. Formerly they would pass the house, now they enter it, for the child has a warm place in their hearts.

REX.

FATE'S WARNING (May 2).—The woman was a countess, and just because all the countesses you've known were "proud and haughty" you must not think she was that kind of a lady. On the contrary, in spite of all fate did to prevent it, she was a human being—a sweet, sympathetic, pulsating heart-woman. She loved the world and the things and the beings thereof; she was five feet five of humanity and humility.

So naturally she loved music. Often she went to a little gypsy music garden—this happened in Europe—to see and hear life as it pushed by with its songs and throngs, to drink wine and in the red forgetfulness still remember that she was lonesome, to listen to the haunting, seductive gypsy music that interprets life as a rushing, roaring sea, with the sweet low murmur of a lazy brook thrilling its way throughout. Those nights her soul was swept away with the exotic, ecstatic songs of the sentimental gypsy maids and the strong, bold gypsy men.

And there her soul began to hunger for the arms and lips of the gypsy. Often she met him, and in his kisses was the strife of senses, and in his arms her troubled heart found peace. Then he urged her to fly with him.

With a suggestion that could not be stifled, with a premonition of impending and imminent disaster, she went to a gypsy fortune teller to gaze into the vale of veiled years. And she looked into the crystal ball—and she saw.

She saw her womanhood dragged down to the level of the lost, saw herself wending the streets with her gypsy, singing his songs for a coin and a laugh. She saw his love change into the realization of possession, into despotic mastery, into brute tyranny. She saw tears and sneers, pain and stain, hunger and hate. That night when he came she told him that which avoided the future and averted its sorrows.

THE THORN IN VENGEANCE (May 5).—When he met the other woman, and the lies he told were on record in the heart of the first, he followed the law of least resistance, as most men do under similar circumstances, and retreated. He wrote the first woman a note, telling her he desired never to see her again, and became engaged to the innocent young thing whose charms had captivated him.

The first woman was not so very helpless. She had spoken to the world, and she had heard its answer. She may not even have loved him enough to excuse her act, but her piqued vanity, if you want to call it that, impelled her to go to him and conquer his impulse. If only to have the right to acknowledge to herself that she had vanquished his love for the other woman, if only for the sweet right to possess the victory, she would make him admit his love for her, for her only, and always.

She played with him. She made him hate and love, detest and respect her. But the love and respect were stronger and longer. So he wrote the second woman what before he had written the first.

The girl and the father called for an explanation. In the manner of men, the father denounced and renounced him; but the girl was only silent, yet her silence was a greater reproof than her father's boisterous reprimand. So they left. And the other woman heard the call of the sex, and fought the battle of her sister.

DRAWING THE LINE (May 9).—She had money, and the vain ambition that money inherits. Her one object in life, outside of just living, was to marry her son to an heiress and her daughter to an earl. In face, she had the heiress and earl selected, and all ready to be wrapped up and sent home. But the son had the rebellious notion that money deserved more respect than selling yourself for or with it.

Phil was the son and Cleo was the daughter. Phil went to the city on a business trip, and, on the train returning home, he was seated next a girl who was rather interesting. Somehow or other, they began to talk and—altogether the ride wasn't so tedious

They both got off at the same station, said good-bye, and the incident was quite forgotten. Phil went home, and the girl went—well, we don't know where she stayed. At any rate, at home, Phil met the earl. Now, in justice to all the poor earls in captivity, let it be said that all earls are not cads and scoundrels and fortune-hunters, but—this one was.

A day or so later Phil walked into the little theater in the town. "Romeo and Juliet" was being played, and Juliet was—the girl. See? Of course, he met her after the show. Met her again—and word reached his aristocratic mother. After the debate, Phil left the house.

Phil marries the actress, and they were mighty happy; let us tell you. Cleo married the earl—poor, little, pretty Cleo. The "nobleman" was a brutal, despicable drunkard, and he saw that she had a lot of time to herself to think bitter things and cry. At last her patience and health were exhausted, and, her heart bruised and broken, she returned home, as a silly, reckless young bird who would fly to dangerous heights, returns with a broken wing to the home-nest. In sorrow and repentance the mother saw the truth, and thought—just what you're thinking now.

THE ETERNAL CONFLICT (May 12).—The City Editor of the "Daily Leader" knew that the city's government was not ruled on a very straight line. He assigned a few reporters to get the evidence of corruption and conspiracy, but after supreme and persevering effort, their only success was failure. The city editor swore when the reporters admitted their defeat—proving thereby his right to be city editor—and assigned the girl reporter, Miss Leonard, to the task.

Ability was not the greatest newspaper asset Miss Leonard possessed, though that was more than considerable. It was her charm, the sweet, appealing charm of a "feminine" girl, that cannot be analyzed or denoted, but that just, merely, simply, creeps into you and influences you with a dominant impulse to confide in her. That was the reason Miss Leonard was being talked about in newspaper circles—that, and of course, her intrinsic, native ability.

Before very long she got a clue. The clue was a card inviting the politicians at City Hall to attend a meeting "At the Sign of the Thumb-print," with a thumb-print the only signature. The idea was to discover whose particular thumb-print it was. Small thing, when you have the detective genius every trained reporter possesses. She prepared several copies of a bogus bill, and paraded around the political circle asking each one of the poor suspects whether he knew anything about it. As each read it, he impressed his thumb-print. The thumb-print of the boss coincided with the card, and she had his number She also had his house number, and forthwith went there.

How she obtained access to the house, how she pretended to the butler that she was a book-agent, how she suddenly became faint and asked for a glass of water, and how she dashed into the clothes closet when the butler went to get it; how he returns dumb-founded at her absence, how she obtained the story of the illegal plot of the politicians, and attained her triumph, all succeed each other in rapid and thrilling sequence.

Then the blow! The editor-in-chief destroyed the story, for the reason that only editors-in-chief and corrupt politicians know, and a little of her faith in truth and right. The girl's heart broke a little, and ever after the word "man" lost a great deal of its importance.

THE TEN OF DIAMONDS (May 6).—Robert Millard, a young man, has a penchant for clubs and cards, which fact causes his adoring mother no end of anxiety. Willard, the father, is also apprehensive and keeps a close watch upon the boy.

One evening, Robert goes out after promising his parents that he would return by ten o'clock. He faithfully meant to keep his word, but at the club he plunges deeply into a game of cards and does not reach home until two A. M. His father, leisurely smoking a cigar, meets him. A card, the ten of diamonds, drops out of Robert's pocket, giving Willard the chance of reading a sermon to his offspring. He gently and graphically unfolds the story of his own life:

Twenty years before, the passion for cards had almost caused a tragedy in the then humble home of Willard Millard. He associated with never-do-wells and gamblers of the lowest type. He sank so low that his young wife had to work night and day to support herself and child and furnish him with money to gamble away. It was only when his brutality had come near killing the woman he had sworn to protect that Willard's manhood asserted itself and from that day he and cards became strangers. Gradually he worked his way into the world and finally acquired a place of standing in the community.

Willard's story makes a profound impression upon Robert, who tears up the pack of cards in his possession and tearfully swears to profit by the experience of his father. The promise is kept and three people are made happy.

THE THESPIAN BANDIT (May 8).—Three actors, Tom, Dick and Harry, have had a tough season, but the landlady needs the money just the same and comes to their door. Tom and Dick instantly hide, leaving Harry to pacify her as best he can. A little later, when they see the following headlines in a newspaper: "Good actors are in great demand in California for moving pictures. Fourteen companies operating in and about Los Angeles," Tom and Dick conceive the brilliant idea of going out West. Harry objects that they have no money for food on the way, let alone railroad fare, but Tom quietly helps himself to Harry's pin, watch and ring, which he pawns to get their food and declares they will ride in a box car.

That night, they put one over on the landlady by slipping out without paying and hurry to the train yards, where they conceal themselves in an empty car and are soon on their way West. Early the next morning, the brakeman appears and tells them unless they "come across" with a little coin, he will put them off. As usual, Harry is the Patsy, handing over all the money he has left.

They arrive in the glorious West and the Yardmaster gives them a true Western welcome by seeing how near he can shoot without hitting them. As they sit down beside the road to rest, they see a reward sign for the bandit "Black Bill" and, upon studying it more closely, Tom and Dick decide that with a beard they can make Harry a bandit and claim the reward, and this decision is further strengthened by getting a look at the real bandit as he rides past, cleverly eluding the sheriff and his posse. Harry strenuously objects but to no avail, and they instantly start to make him up for the bandit. As they are doing this, "Black Bill" returns unobserved by the boys and, thinking the resemblance good enough, decides to use the idea himself. He chases Tom and Dick away and then marches Harry to his shack, where he quickly shaves off his beard, takes the actor's clothes and hurries Harry to the sheriff's office. Here, Harry takes Bill unawares, snatches the sheriff's revolver, commands the bandit to hold up his hands, and then explains the situation to the sheriff. When the deputy enters, he recognizes Bill as the real bandit and Bill is quickly locked up. Harry receives not only his clothes, but the reward and hurries to the station, where he boards the train for the East. Just as it moves out, Tom and Dick, weary and foot-sore, arrive. They attempt to catch the train upon seeing Harry, but he waves them good-bye and the boys are forced to strike out for home by walking the railroad ties, having had quite enough of the West to last them for a while.

A GAME OF BLUFF (May 11).—Young Jack Russell goes to spend his two-weeks' vacation at the seashore, where he meets a pretty girl chaperoned by an elderly man. He falls desperately in love with the girl but, in picking up the old fellow's card, he realizes that the daughter of "Willis Smithson, retired capitalist," is too far above his station. Love, however, sharpens his wits and going to a printer, has some cards made reading: "Jack Russell, Capitalist." At the hotel, the two men exchange cards and Jack soon finds himself engaged to charming Grace Smithson.

Jack's little bluff grows, for circumstances call for more bluffing. Going to town, he rents a flat; puts furniture in it at one dollar down and one dollar a week; hires servants; and returns to the seashore. Father and daughter are leaving the next day and Jack, anxious to make a tenstrike, invites them to spend the night at his modest little apartment. So impressed is the old man with the beautiful home that he actually tells Jack to marry tonight, rather than wait six months, and before the young fellow knows what's doing, a minister has been called and the nuptial knot is tied.

When alone, Grace breaks down and tells hubby that father is but a poor bookkeeper in a furniture store. Jack laughingly replies that he, too, is far from being a capitalist.

The next day, while at work on the books in the furniture store, Smithson comes across the entry of his son-in-law for furniture taken on the installment plan and the sad blow almost overpowers him. He dashes out of the office and, arriving at the grand home, finds a "TO LET" sign with a note appended thereon, stating that Jack Russell had removed to the Cupid Apartments.

The newlyweds are in the midst of their first meal when papa puts in an appearance. Jack admits that he has indulged in a little game of bluff and that the old man was party to the game. When shown his own misleading card, Smithson relents and the "dear children" are blessed in true parental style.

CHAMPION.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN (May 13).—Miss Celia Rill, a woman of thirty-five, after having congratulated a young girl friend upon her approaching marriage, realizes for the first time that she is growing old. Seating herself by the fireplace, she brings out her treasure box, and taking out a bundle of old love letters from former admirers, all of whom she has jilted, she begins to read them over.

As she reads the one from Albert, who had been a rich young man, offering her his hand and fortune, we see Albert as he is to-day, with a large family and in poverty. Another written by Howard reads how he swears to be kind and true, only to see him in actuality as a tyrant. Opening one signed by Will, it tells of his love and what a kind husband he would make, but in a scene of the present, he is shown as a drunken brute.

Selecting still another love missive, Celia kisses it tenderly, and fondly holds it to her breast, as she thinks of the writer. It is from Jack, the one man she ever cared for, but with whom she played as with all the others, until a trick of fate parted them forever. As she recalls, and as the scenes show, she answered Jack's final demand with a hurried "Yes," and the maid had lost the letter. Jack, receiving no reply, leaves for the gold fields of Alaska.

Tears of sorrow swell from her eyes, and her proud spirit is broken because she realizes that she is growing old, unmated. As she weeps by the fireplace Jack, alive and well, unable to stay from the woman he loved, enters the room, tiptoes to her side and takes her into his arms. Looking up, Celia sees Jack, not in her dream, but the real lovable Jack in flesh and blood, holding her in his arms.

THE DUCK HUNT (May 15).—The duck hunting expedition on the marshes surrounding the Great Salt Lake of Utah, is one of the most remarkable picture presentations that may be well imagined. The picture is educational in the sense that it depicts in detail the methods employed in this sporting industry. We see the cutting and arranging of the material used in making the fluid. The making of the fluid is itself a most interesting proceeding, but to the sportsman there's a feature which this picture portrays that is peculiarly fascinating, and that is the remarkable bagging that comes to the party working in this expedition.

One of these gentlemen is Mr Vincent Davis, a world's expert, who holds the much envied record. A world beater of 142 birds for a half hour's shooting.

REPUBLIC.

PRESIDENT INCOG (May 14).—The Republican Club of Rocky Gulch, Colorado, read in a Denver newspaper that President Wm. H Taft is to make a trip from Washington to the Pacific Coast, and that he will travel incog. The Acorn Republican Club call a meeting and decide to wire President Taft at Washington, D. C., to ask him if he will do the club a big favor by stopping off at Rocky Gulch and delivering a short political speech. The President appreciates the honor, and in a wire to the club sends regrets that he is unable to comply with their request.

There is a remarkable likeness between President Taft and Jasper Jones, who has mining interests around Rocky Gulch, in fact, Jasper has often been taken for the President. While at the station, one of the members of the Acorn Republican Club sees Jasper and mistaking him for President Taft, passes the word about, and soon there is a crowd of natives fighting to shake hands with the supposed President. The train starts to go out, Jasper tries to make it, but the Republican Club is too strong for him and hang on to him while the train disappears in the distance. He is forced to go with them to a schoolhouse to deliver a speech. Seeing no way out of it, he determines to make a speech and it was one that they will long remember—a good solid democratic speech.

Of course there were many Democrats in the room. Can you picture the result? It is now the Democrats' turn to laud Jasper, which they do in real Western fashion: not only that, but they go as a body to Goldnob and clean out the claim jumpers, send for Jasper's wife, present them with the best house in town, nominate him for Congressman in the coming Fall election—the betting is now ten to seven that Jasper will be elected.

TRIFLE NOT WITH FIRE (May 18).—An Indian, while attending college, meets and falls in love with Ruth Howard. He proposes to her and Ruth, although she loves him, rejects him on account of his race. The Indian, realizing the pain that the loss of Ruth has caused him, goes away to forget her and, incidentally renounces civilization. Two years elapse and Ruth marries a wealthy man.

Ruth receives a letter from her chum to visit their ranch out West and accepts the invitation. Ruth away from the city becomes like a young colt, and goes roaming about the wild country. The Indian who has given up civilization on account of love for her, has become a nomad and has wandered around the country, seeking consolation in solitude. Ruth's face is always before him and in one of his moments of melancholy, he falls asleep and dreams of his love, and upon awakening, sees Ruth upon an unmanageable horse. He springs forward and is just in time to catch her in his arms. The love flame which has remained dormant the past years is awakened—Ruth forgets all else, except her love for the Indian.

She is brought to her right senses when she sees an old Indian and his squaw which causes her to realize what her future might be with the Indian. The Indian becomes ferocious at the thought of losing Ruth the second time. Ruth frightened, tries to force herself from his embrace and in the struggle, the bank upon which they are standing gives way, and both are hurled to the rocks at the bottom of the cliff united at last in death.

ECLAIR.

HER WEEK OF ANGUISH (May 9).—The housewife who becomes temporarily embarrassed in her domestic banking, gives a lot of entertainment by her subterfuges and efforts to escape from her troubles. How she finally does it and her bitter, yet comical adventures and predicaments, will make the exhibition theaters ring with laughter.

ARABIAN CUSTOMS (May 12).—Portraying the quaint and curious manners prevalent in the Old World even today. Dancers, fortune tellers, wedding parties, Moslem and Jewish funerals are a few of the picturesque features.

SAVED FROM THE TITANIC (May 14).—Miss Dorothy, who, on her return home, is to be betrothed to Ensign Jack, U. S. N., has written to her parents that she'll embark on the Titanic from Cherbourg. They and Dorothy's girl friends are impatiently awaiting her return. She had promised in the letter to send a wireless Sunday night, so that they could know the time of her arrival. Jack, naturally, is impatient to have news of his dear one His friend, Ensign Williams, who has a friend, Bill Jenkins, in charge of a wireless post, proposes to take him there, so that he can communicate with the ship direct or learn if any news comes from her. While they are telling Jenkins the object of their visit, he receives the C. Q. D. from the Titanic, telling of the disaster. No pen can depict the anguish of the young man and the scene the ensuing day when he calls upon Dorothy's father and mother. But the Americans on board the ill-fated ship did their duty—lived up to their "motto," always women and children saved first. No doubt they were put into the lifeboats. Some lives must have been saved, why not Dorothy? True, Dorothy was among the saved. Later on we find the oblivious sweethearts at table with Dorothy's mother and father. She is requested to tell the story of the shipwreck to Jack—she does so—so vividly that one can almost imagine that the catastrophe is being enacted there—more especially as a vivid vision of the fatal collision is portrayed by the camera. But the strain of recalling the distressful event is too much for Dorothy and she faints as she finishes the story. The next day, so impressed was her mother, at seeing this, she calls on Jack and explains that if he wishes to become her son-in-law, he must resign from the navy, as his calling on the sea is too full of perils and she fears that Dorothy, whose emotions have been stirred by her terrible experiences, could not stand the strain of her constant anxiety on his account. Jack hesitates—she gives him all night to think it over He tells his captain and friend of his dilemma, his conflict between love and duty. The bluff old commander argues in favor of the service, clinching the argument by telling him that the first consideration of a naval officer is due to his country's flag, at the same time pointing to "Old Glory" floating in the breeze. Jack understands, decides in favor of the service. When Dorothy's father calls for Jack's answer, he replies: "A sailor's first duty is to his flag and country." The father (impressed and happy to find such lofty and patriotic sentiments in the young man), declares that he could expect no other reply from an officer of the U. S N. The father shows his own true loyalty as a citizen and calls Dorothy in, saying: "My daughter, there's your husband." He gives her hand over to Jack, who is overcome with surprise.

GREAT NORTHERN.

UNCLE AND NEPHEW (May 11).—Professor Steinfeldt, a scientist, is engrossed in his work and spends the greater portion of his time in his laboratory conducting experiments He is well along in years and has a young and handsome wife, who resents his neglect. Carl, a nephew of the professor, returns from college to stay with his relative, and spends many hours in company with the wife.

Thrown together so constantly they learn to love one another and, while the professor is pouring over chemicals, they indulge in love making in the parlor. Steinfeldt returns to the room in time to see his wife in the arms of his nephew, and he is astonished and shocked. He withdraws quietly and returns to his workroom in despair. He is soon joined by Carl, and the elder man plans to cure his wife of her mad infatuation. He shows Carl a phial, which he tells him contains a deadly poison, and leaves a glass of water standing on a table from which he has drank Once alone Carl resolves to put the uncle out of his way and pours a quantity of the poison into the glass in desperation. He is soon joined by his uncle and the wife. The professor manages to pour out the poison and substitute pure water. He drinks of the contents and Carl is stricken with remorse He is about to confess when his uncle offers the glass to his wife. She is about to drink, when the thoroughly frightened young man strikes the glass to the floor and attracts the suspicions of the wife

The professor sternly bids Carl rid the house of his presence and the wife awakens to the nature of her perfidy and confesses her duplicity. The husband is a philosopher and of a forgiving nature. He knows from the graphic lesson that his wife is cured of all affection for the unprincipled nephew, and he takes her in his arms

SOLAX.

SOULS IN THE SHADOW (May 15).—Alice Penryhn, the younger of two orphaned sisters, is engaged to Harry Mayne, but in a moment of girlish folly, accompanies Will Mortimer, a member of the "fast set," to a somewhat rapid "Bohemian" restaurant, and promptly regrets it, being fearful that Mayne will discover her imprudence. Her elder sister, Christine, has discovered that Alice has an organic heart affection, and that she is in a dangerous condition. Christine is herself in love with Mayne, but conceals it for her sister's sake. Mortimer forces Alice to see him at midnight, and in a drunken humor, tries to embrace her. In her terror and frenzy she strikes him with a heavy ornament and kills him. Christine discovers the accident, and, taking the burden on herself, is arrested for the crime. She is placed on trial, and, just as the jury is bringing in a verdict of guilty,

Daylight Pictures

The "EYE COMFORT System" of Indirect Illumination makes Daylight Pictures possible for YOU. It does NOT hurt the pictures' clearness.

Think what it means to have your Theatre Indirectly lighted all the time:

No stumbling over folks in the dark.
No glaring, exposed lights.
Saves ushers' salaries.
Banishes the "roughneck" element.
Lights your theatre beautifully.

Over 1,500 Motion Picture Theatres are lighted by the EYE COMFORT System today.

Do this before it slips your mind

Fill in the blank below—get more particulars—our expert Engineering Staff will furnish installation plan and report free—no obligation to buy either—tear out this corner of the page—mail it to:

CARNEGIE MUSEUM EXPEDITION!

Naturalists, teachers and the press endorse the Alaska-Siberian Motion Pictures as the scientific sensation of the hour

BETTER than any posed pictures ever made, for in these films comedy, pathos and tragedy delightfully blend in nature's vast everlasting drama.

A huge bear spanking her unruly cub and later fighting like a demon to rescue it from its captors.

Seal bulls disciplining their harems.

Hordes of moose and caribou trooping quietly down to the water hole.

Penguin and gulls gossiping on their rockbound island rookeries.

Giant walrus basking on the ice floes and battling to death with the Eskimos.

These are only a few of the countless human interest subjects.

All clear, clean cut, showy action pictures taken at thirty paces on the average—many as close as ten feet.

State Right Buyers don't miss this feature de luxe, sure fire success— 2 Great Shows in 1

Complete line of attractive pictorial lithographing including twenty-four sheets, twenties, eights, threes, one and half sheets and magnificently illustrated booklets by the Courier Co. of Buffalo, handsome large photographs for lobby display, wide publicity.

As the Operator Looks at it

As the Operator Looks at It

Just notice how easy this operator takes it. He doesn't have to work over a dangerous juice consuming rheostat at furnace heat any-more since the was installed.

He can control the machine perfectly now with one hand--gets a clearer, whiter, steadier light and can adjust it to any of the three intensities without even the faintest flicker.

When we sold this machine we guaranteed it would absolutely

Cut 2-3 from the Monthly Lighting Bill

That sounded almost too good to be true, but they put one in on our 30 day free trial plan.

Did the machine "make good?" Well, the first month it reduced the bill from $22.70 to $9.24 and they operated more hours and got better light than ever before.

We can do just as well for you regardless of what voltage you are using and if you will send for our little free booklet, we'll explain how we do it.

Remember you are paying the Lighting Company 66 2-3 per cent more than you need to every day you wait.

Talent Wanted

Wanted at once, an orchestra of four pieces, or if really clever, a larger one might be accepted. One first-class moving picture pianoist, experienced organist, high-class and meritorious singing acts wanted at all times. After you have read this adv. and before you answer it, stop and consider real carefully whether or not you can make good in the finest moving picture theaters in America, before the most critical audience that you have ever seen congregated in a moving picture theatre. If you don't think you can do this, don't take up my time with idle correspondence. I am not a hard man to work for if you are capable, but you must be clever if you wish to remain long in my employ. I have men with me now who have been in my employment from three to six years, and you can rest assured they are right up to the minute or they would not be with me. Hundreds of autos unload passengers every night in front of my theatres. Can you please that class of show goers? If so, a letter with full details will be appreciated by me. State when you will be at liberty, send reference if possible, and name your salary. Address Montgomery, the moving picture man, The Montgomery Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

WHAT IS A REAL FEATURE?

A feature is a feature because unlike the ordinary film it is unusually artistic, interesting, instructive, and, above all, its production necessarily requires extraordinary effort, best of talent and large expense, to make it stand out in full contrast to the common-over-night-slapped-together-inartistic-meaningless-production, whether consisting of one or more reels. We Handle Real Features Only.

"Land of Darkness"

first and greatest mine disaster feature in the market.

Do You Wear Tailor-Made Clothes

made to conform to your particular shape and requirements? If so, why?

DO YOU USE A HAND-ME-DOWN SCREEN

marked for a picture about your size, but would be just as good for any other house throwing a picture something near the same size? Again we ask WHY? when it is possible to have a

"PERFECTION CONCAVE SCREEN"

made to your order with more care and precision—more scientific and reliable measurements than was ever taken by the best tailor in making the finest suit of clothes on earth.

Every one of the eighty pieces that enter into the skeleton work of the smallest or largest screen carefully figured and formed with the one idea to produce the correct concave surface to fit the requirements of your stage with the length of your throw and the elevation of your lens above the center of your picture all carefully calculated and executed for your screen.

You will notice more difference between a screen made for you in this manner and a "Hand me down" than you will between your tailor-made and ready-made clothes in everything but the price, which, in proportion to the results you receive, is the lowest of anything on the market.

Specify your requirements, and let us quote you.

MARION DEMANDS AN EXPLANATION

ALL IS FAIR

Dick Cartwright, a wealthy land owner, rejected by Ruth, a millionaire's daughter, goes West to forget. He falls in love with an unknown girl, who calls at his ranch for help to rescue her mother from a band of horse thieves. Learning that she is the country school ma'am, he attends her night school pretending that he lacks education. Accidentally learning that Dick is a college graduate, she upbraids him for his deception. He begs for forgiveness, pleads his love, and finally wins her hand.

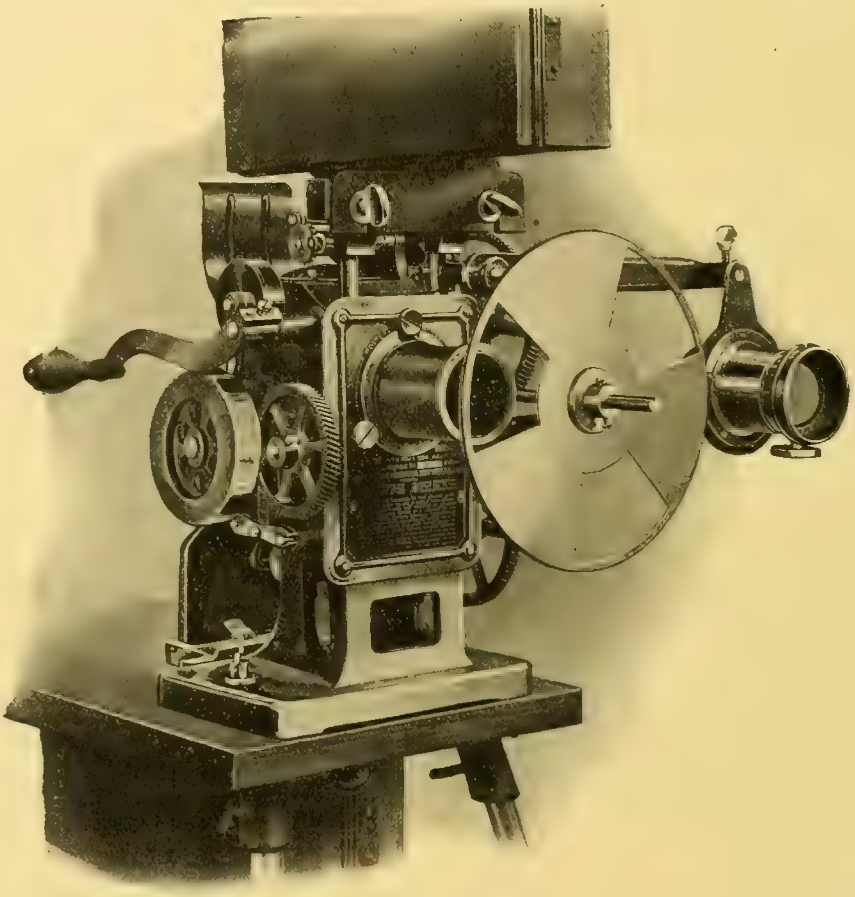
Does Your Machine Wear Well?

Power's Cameragraph No. 6 always does



We do not claim that a Power's will not wear out, for you cannot eliminate friction; and that means wear and tear. But we do say that we have eliminated friction to the very last degree of scientific possibility.

Power's Cameragraph No. 6 has fourteen years' experience behind it, and is made by the highest priced skilled mechanics in this country in the largest factory of its kind in the world; also we state further that money cannot purchase better quality than is used in every part of our machine.

You want a machine that will stand the daily grind, that will wear well.

Power's No. 6 will outwear any machine on the market. That's one of the many reasons why we do over 60 per cent of all the moving picture machine business in the world.

Power's Adjustable Inductor is the economizer for you to use on alternating current.

Let us send you catalogue G with full details.

THE STORY OF A DREAM

"The Ring of a Spanish Grandee"

is the center of a thrilling dream that we invite you "in" on. You'll like the dream but you'll scoff at the ring. The first exploits and "explodes" a theory about the latter. A romantic girl is courted by two men, one worthy and one unworthy. Mr. Unworthy tries to win out by flashing a ring at Miss Romantic and telling a fancy tale about it. She learns the real history of the ring in a dream—and Mr. Worthy wins.

"The Peril"

Have you arranged with your exchange for a quick booking of the Imp's totally different Decoration Day release "The Peril?" (Copyright 1912.) If not, do it this very day. It is a thousand-foot feature Imp—one that will thrill you and your patrons from head to foot. It is not like any Decoration Day release ever made by anybody. In "The Peril" King Baggot and a fine supporting company give you a real gem. Full particulars in "The Implet."

A 2000-FOOT "IMP" FEATURE! "LADY AUDLEY'S SECRET"

(Copyright 1912).

For Thursday, May 16th, the Imp has filmed one of the most popular stories ever written—a story that millions have read and millions have loved. The mere name "Lady Audley's Secret" will pack your house when coupled with the name "Imp."

HERE'S A PIPPIN IMP!

The release of Monday, May 20th, "A CAVE MAN WOOING" (Copyright 1912), will give you the best laugh you ever got out of your system. It's another Baggot-Imp. Watch Baggot change from a simpering boob to a meat-eating scrapper!

"THE CLOWN'S TRIUMPH" (Copyright 1912)

Released Thursday, May 23. Another Imp drama that is clear out of the beaten path. Have you been noticing what a corking good variety the Imp has been giving you?

THE SATURDAY SPLIT IMP

Released Saturday, May 25th. One of the best "splits" the Imp ever produced. Including "VIEWS OF LOS ANGELES" and "THE MAID'S STRATAGEM." Both copyright 1912.

His sweetheart is willing, but her father gives him the boot, because the "old man" has other plans for his heiress. The bold suitor is persistent, and so with the aid of a suit of armor upsets a peaceful household. The severe old man's sense of humor is touched when he finds his would-be son-in-law inside of the recalcitrant armor, masquerading as an animated knight.

VITAGRAPH

"LOVE IN THE GHETTO"

Monday, May 13th

Love is no respector of localities. It is just as sacred in the ghetto as it is in the more aristocratic circles of society. The environments, as depicted in this Vitagraph Life Portrayal of a very pretty romance and the manners and customs of a peculiar people are very new and interesting to most people.

"THE SPIDER'S WEB"

Tuesday, May 14th

Wild-cat brokers and sharpers are the spiders in the business world who are spreading their webs in their greed to catch the unsuspecting and eager investor. This sort of picture "catches" the crowd; it is so true to life.

"LEAP YEAR PROPOSALS"
"A PAGE FROM CANADIAN HISTORY"

Split Reel

Wednesday, May 15th

The first is a big chunk of comedy, alive with laughs. An old maid tries to get a man. She takes a chance, knowing she will not have another in four years. The second picture on this reel is a view of the Canadian seat of Government, Montreal. The Duke of Connaught and the Duchess almost shake hands with us and we get very close to the old landmarks and official leaders.

"THE GREATER LOVE"

Friday, May 17th

Love is aroused in return for kindness extended by a young Western girl to a wounded desperado. He keeps his identity unknown. The young sheriff who is engaged to the girl goes in pursuit of the outlaw, who saves the sheriff's life and sacrifices his own.

"THE MAN UNDER THE BED"

Saturday, May 18th

Many a jest is played in truth. A little boy fools and frightens his sisters by putting a dummy of a man under their bed. Later a real man gets under the bed and it comes near being a serious matter. It's a good lesson to practical jokers.

Facts and Comments

AN exhibitor in Kingsville, Tex., writes to complain of a certain picture, which he says "made women turn their heads from the screen." The kind of pictures which make patrons turn their heads away are the worst possible, because people come to the show to look at the screen and to turn their thoughts away from daily cares and worries. That kind of picture is very bad too for the exhibitor, who has his money invested in his theater and must live on the returns of his investment. He has a right, a moral and we believe a legal right too, to expect that no such pictures will be given him in return for his money. It is giving him a stone when he is paying for bread, a serpent instead of a fish. Our correspondent uses some very strong language. He calls the picture "diabolical, downright disgusting and horrifying" and says the "manufacturer who would make such a picture ought to have his plant burned up." Our sympathy is entirely with the exhibitor. The company which turned out this highly objectionable reel has on the whole done good work and has especially of late evinced a desire to give the best. This, of course, is no justification for the bad pictures, but it is a mitigating circumstance and would seem to entitle the company to a little forbearance. We have sent the letter of our angry correspondent to the offending company, hoping in this way to warn them and have them exercise all the greater care in the future.

Angry letters of this sort are by no means uncommon and in almost all cases there is at least some ground for complaint. It shows how necessary is the function of criticism in the world of moving pictures. It is a thankless and dangerous task at best, but the interests of the readers demand it absolutely. The reviews of The Moving Picture World are fair, accurate and comprehensive. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they furnish a good guide for the exhibitor who takes pains with his program and who is anxious to avoid anything that is in the least offensive. The intelligent and progressive manufacturer does not fear criticism, but welcomes it. It is the vain and incompetent man, whom criticism of any kind offends. Good honest criticism offered in a helpful spirit is the best kind of co-operation. No man, not even a manufacturer of moving pictures, can sit in judgment on his own work. Whatever is offered to the public for approval and payment is eminently subject to criticism. The right to hiss is just as old as the right to applaud. We intend to continue calling attention to films of objectionable nature.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD in its last issue published in full the tribute Mayor Gaynor has again publicly paid to the motion picture. We would like to see exhibitors put some of his sentences on their slides and display them in their lobbies. The Mayor has summed up the situation in that plain but masterly fashion which made him such a favorite with juries when he was still on the bench of Kings County. It is well to add that the Mayor voices the public sentiment, not merely his own views. He is one of the keenest judges of public feeling.

IT is a common complaint that children attending school are getting more nervous every year. No one who has watched the boys and girls in the early grammar grades can have failed to notice this. The fault lies in our educational system, which "rushes" the pupils in the elementary departments. Before their reflective faculties are half developed they are called upon to study history, literature, civics, etc. The result is a severe mental strain, which leads to nervousness and has often led to total breakdowns and even suicide. The motion picture will revolutionize elementary education; when the pupils come into the higher grades, their minds are fresh, receptive, and reflection will be no strain on them, because all their previous education has been acquired through the senses in an easy and pleasing way. The mind will then be not only ready but even eager for the play of the reflective faculties.

NOT the least gratifying indication of the educational progress of the motion picture is the growing demand for competent lecturers. Five or six years ago "lecturing pictures," as the phrase went, was entirely in the hands of "barkers" and their kind. To-day in almost every large city there is at least one house, often the best house in the place, which has its lecturer. In nine cases out of ten he is a man of some education and some gift of speaking and thoroughly alive to the obligations and the possibilities of his task. The half dozen big feature shows now playing in big theatres in different parts of the country owe not a little of their success to competent lecturers. The public as well as the exhibitors are quite aware of this fact, and the compensation now offered to competent lecturers is large enough to attract a very good class of men. A lecture on a subject illustrated by motion pictures is far more interesting and far more difficult than the talks on still slides, which are going out of fashion as an independent form of amusement. Strange to relate there is among educated speakers a suspicion abroad that a loss of "class" may attend their work in connection with the motion picture. Nothing could be further from the fact. There is waiting for them both the honor and the emolument, which has always been the just reward of the pioneer.

FROM a valued correspondent we have received a complaint, which has been echoed by more than one exhibitor and which deserves to be aired here at some length. Our correspondent writes: "Why is it, that many good, excellent industrials or travelogues are tacked on to such nonsensical, untrue and useless attempts at comedy?" He then goes on to mention several particularly bad instances of this evil and foolish practice and says that "we now cut off the comedy in many cases using but 500 feet of the 1,000. That seems hardly fair." We thoroughly agree with our correspondent. The manufacturers often have to meet situations where they are sorely tempted to do just the thing of which our correspondent complains. It is not always feasible to have a whole reel devoted to the same subject, but it seems to us an effort ought to be made to put scenic or industrial pictures on one reel and not make them travel in the company of cheap comedies. When an exhibitor is compelled to pay for five hundred feet of film, which he cannot use without shocking or offending his patrons, he has a just grievance. The manufacturers ought to be willing to go to some little trouble to stop this practice hereafter. It makes the educational picture, which is becoming more popular and valuable all the time, appear needlessly ridiculous.

EVERY exhibitor is a patron and, to a greater or lesser extent, a victim of the express companies. Every exhibitor therefore will be interested in the fate of the Parcels Post Bill, which promises relief from the extortions and tyranny of these arrogant corporations. Congress, we are sorry to say, has emasculated the Parcels Post Bill and has so pared and trimmed it, that it is of practically no value to the exhibitor. It will be some time before the express monopolies are reduced to governmental subjection and regulation, but a beginning has now been made. The Parcels Post Bill will be an issue in the presidential campaign and exhibitors everywhere ought to give it their support.

The rates for expressage in this country are exorbitant as compared with the charges in Europe. In almost every country on the European continent an equivalent of ten cents will carry a can of films from the great distributing centers to the smaller cities. An equivalent of fifty cents will pay for a consignment of three reels of film from Sweden into Spain or Italy. The parcel post abroad is a governmental institution, thoroughly efficient, highly organized and based on an equitable system of charges. In this respect they again differ from our express companies. There is not an exhibitor but knows by bitter experience that the least rush of business cripples delivery. Around Christmas time, for instance, the whole express system becomes a farce. How utterly inefficient and absurdly expensive our system here is may be gathered from the fact, that in many parts of the country exhibitors dispense with the service of express companies entirely and find it more satisfactory and profitable to employ their own private messengers to carry films. As the two express companies have no competition to fear, they do not care the least about the protests of the public. It is a disgraceful state of affairs, from which exhibitors of motion pictures have been suffering for years and years.

Lights and Shadows.

By Wray Bartlett Physioc.

ALTHOUGH persons ignorant of artistic effect may find fault with the most effectively disposed lights and shadows, it is necessary for the producer of good films to give his productions the highest possible artistic value. This he should do not alone for his own reputation, but for the honor of his art and its professors.

If insensible to these motives, he may well doubt his possession of the qualities indispensable to his profession. At all events a skilful, delicate use of lights and shadows is essential to the production of those films truthfully lighted up, which can win for their producer the proud title of an artist.

Architects while arranging the structure of their buildings study how the shadows fall, for effect.

This seems necessary that even in the structure of wood or stone care should be used that the shadows should be cast so as to secure an aspect of appropriateness and beauty; and without such care all labors else are comparatively futile.

There are many noble specimens of architecture, effectively photographed in the motion pictures that we frequently see, effectively taken by experienced and genuine artists.

If, then, light and shadow be essential to the artistic excellence of a building, how much more so to the motion photography?

Wherever there is bright light, shadows are of extraordinary prominence and importance—and this alike to the perfect image of the human face and figure. Commonly, indeed, shadows are more conspicuous than the objects that produce them. For, while equally large with these objects, they are darker than their darkest parts, since the aspect of the objects is modified both by direct and reflected lights. Their broad, equable spaces, therefore, strongly impress the eye; especially as their outlines are defined by lines sharper than nature ever uses in defining objects themselves.

Hold some small object above a piece of white paper in bright sunshine, and you may note two things—first, that the object shows a soft outline, while the shadow exhibits a sharp, decisive edge—and second, that the shadow is of a very much darker hue than the object. An eminent art-critic affirms that such a shadow will be threefold darker than a piece of black cloth laid in the light.

In the photographing of any scene, then, the shadows are actually the most conspicuous things next to the strongest lights. In fact, it is chiefly by them that what forms, and especially the peculiarities of form, are, is perceived. For instance, the roughness of the bark of a tree can be seen neither in light nor in shade, but is defined by the shadows of its ridges. To represent vivid light, therefore, we must first get sharp, visible shadows.

In nature, the intense lights and darkest shadows are always sparingly employed; and this invariably in points, and never in masses. If the light be in a large mass, it is subdued; and the shadow, if broad, is feeble. The interval between such contrasted light and shadow is occupied by middle tints and pale grays. Into this scene nature introduces here and there a spot of high light, and here and there one of intense gloom; the effect of which is to vivify the whole. Her invariable rule, then, would seem to furnish the same amount of deepest shadow as of intensest light, and neither more nor less—points of each answering to those of the other, and both showing vividly out from the rest of the picture. Such is nature's method of managing light and shadow; and herein the moving picture cameraman has a model which he should strive, to the extent of his ability, to copy. Masses of diffused, soft light, balanced by masses of expanded, mild shadow; the space betwixt the two filled by carefully graduated middle tints; while here and there, a keen, bright spot of light is set off by equivalent spots of deep shadows—here is the program which the wielders of the brush and the camera should alike endeavor to conform to; and the nigher they approach it, the more do they exhibit the genius and executive skill of the artist.

It is impossible, here, to explain to the camera-man how he can make his little crank execute a work so complex and delicate. But if he have the eye of genius, there need but industry and perseverance in observing to discover the modus operandi—besides that, he may be essentially aided by an accomplished director who has artistic ideas together with his dramatic knowledge.

What we call "relief" is the apparent standing out of the object from its ground. This is effected by the contrasting of light and shadow. So, would you produce breadth and splendor of effect, join together masses of light objects and corresponding masses of dark objects. Again to get harmony and softness, sink some objects wholly and partially in shadow, and let their outlines be insensibly lost in the ground. Finally, to create vivacity and spirit, make in some parts of the picture abrupt breaks and sharp transitions.

EXHIBITORS TO BE ENTERTAINED.

Kalem Company Will Give Private Exhibition of Its Spectacular Egyptian Features.

The Kalem Company has issued invitations to all exhibitors of Greater New York and nearby towns to be present at a private exhibition of "The Fighting Dervishes of the Desert" and "Missionaries in Darkest Africa" (the first Kalem dramatic productions made in Egypt), to be given at the Auditorium Theater, 23rd Street near Seventh Avenue, on Thursday morning, May 16th, at 11 o'clock.

Special piano music for "The Fighting Dervishes of the Desert" will be played by the composer, Walter C. Simon, and, in addition, William Wright, of the Kalem Company, will suggest a few ideas for the advertising of these feature films.

This exhibition is out of the ordinary and every exhibitor should take advantage of the invitation sent and be present. The films to be shown are decided novelties and the up-to-date exhibitor will readily recognize the opportunity to advertise these productions extensively and attract to his theater the class of people who have not been numbered among his patrons.

Camille.

FAMOUS PLAY PRODUCED IN TWO REELS BY THE CHAMPION FILM COMPANY—A NOTABLE MOTION PICTURE, EXCELLENTLY STAGED AND PHOTOGRAPHED.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS play, adapted from Dame aux Camelias by Alexandre Dumas fils, has been the subject of an enormous amount of criticism in the stage version, but, for all that, I have yet to see a discussion of its merits that was fair or even keenly discriminating. The English version sub-titles it "The Fate of a Coquette." This absurd name was given it in the interest of hypocritical morality. In London all performances of the original play were forbidden on the ground that the central figure was nothing more nor less than a high-class courtesan, though Traviata by Verdi, whose book was simply an Italian version of Camille, was performed in London by special permission of the Lord-Chamberlain.

One would think that such a play by the son of Alexandre Dumas would find an immediate market in Paris, but the young author saw it rejected for a period of more than three years before any manager would undertake to produce it. After it had been kicked out of nearly every stage door in Paris it was finally taken up by the Vaudeville, only to be turned down by the censors. Once suppressed by government edict it came near being a stillborn child, but finally came to life, and was an instantaneous success. It has succeeded at a hundred revivals. Why? A courtesan's love may be poetic, but it is a degrading subject if treated realistically. In spite of this, people like the play, and its constant revival makes it rank with great masterpieces in popularity. Why?

A peculiar quality of the ordinary, non-critical, good-natured audience is ordinary, plain common sense. We do not attach any moral character to actions performed under dominating influences, though we may recognize and uphold the value of morality in the abstract and insist upon social observances in the interest of social advancement. That the woman who traffics herself in marriage is actuated by the same motives as the one who omits the ceremony is too self-evident for discussion among common people—the people who patronize the theaters and make great playwrights possible. There might have been nothing objectionable in the action if it had been given in historical guise, but young Dumas scorned subterfuge—he was absolutely sincere—and those who went to see the play by thousands and tens of thousands liked him the better for it.

After attending a performance of the drama in Paris I read a few shallow comments on it, and, since then, I have come across more carefully worded criticisms published in books, only to recognize that the audience looks deeper than the censorious critic. The author had no intention of setting up Camille and Armand as standards of right conduct—the very tragedy of the story reveals this—but he had a good object even if it was too profound for the mental grasp of any but those who have struggled hard and suffered deeply. His object shows him to have been a man of comprehensive view and broad sympathies.

Rebel forces struggle in the souls of every one of us, the extent of the battle ground depending largely upon the breadth of our experience. We fail and falter in misfortune, we yield to impulses with regretful consequences, after moments of anger we cherish useless enmities, we, in fact, do the very things we preach against and advise others not to do. Most of us are human. Secretly recognizing our many weaknesses, we are of the opinion that we might have done better under circumstances other than those which led us into error, and we know that there is good in every woman born, no matter how badly the world has treated her.

This idea of the author is exquisitely set forth in the photodrama "Camille" as produced by the Champion Film Company with all the force that a talented director and an accomplished actress could give it. The character of Camille is really powerful in contrasts it presents, which people, just ordinary people, ever fail to recognize. It is that of a woman who has yielded to the vanities of life and is engaged in the heartless game of making fools of those who are trying to make a fool of her, who is surrounded completely by an environment of flattering attentions, who sees how ridiculously false are the protestations of men who imagine that love is purchaseable. She laughs at them. They amuse her. She may be as mercenary as Becky Sharp, but she is not as cold-blooded as Thackeray's heroine. She is simply unaware that there is any such thing in the world as true love.

As portrayed by Miss Gertrude Shipman this character is elegant, joyous and charming during the early scenes. No intimation is given that Camille is capable of any depth of sentiment, though she is kind-hearted and generous to all members of her little coterie. The portrayal is that of a refined woman in matters of taste—the gowns she wears are "creations"—and her conduct is little removed from that of butterflies in the best of society. There is nothing of the show-girl in movements, nothing that could offend the most exacting of those who think that the stage should preach its sermons as unentertainingly as the pulpit.

There is a curious inconsistency in man's view of woman which becomes amusing when closely scrutinized. We are always asserting that we possess superior self-control, yet we exact that she shall demonstrate to our entire satisfaction her own superiority in that respect; while proclaiming that she is weaker than man, we expect her to be stronger. The Keen-Kutter truth is that we do the perverting and blame her for it. Whenever I hear a man claim that he was ruined by a designing woman, I know that he is only half-baked.

Many women are childish. They are made that way so that they may have quick sympathies for the little creatures they bring into the world. From the mother-heart flows an unfailing stream of the purest love known in human experience, and it is up to us to guard that source. Most women love beauty and long to express it in themselves, but they lack the means to gratify this very natural desire and so they "ruin" us, though the principal object men have in making money is to be ruined in that way. When we haven't got it we eloquently promise it. That woman's love is a priceless possession is proven beyond the shadow of a doubt by the tremendous struggle a man will make to obtain it, and there is no age limit to his effort either.

Men sought Camille's love in vain. She had good reason to place small faith in their protestations. We see her assailed on every side, but her heart was really virgin when Armand came to whisper the words that should make every nerve in her body thrill with impassioned response. Fate had sent her among those she would not have chosen, but she was waiting at a crossing in her career and gave Armand her full faith with the simplicity of an unsullied girl. She did not have to be told that he was the predestined one; he was the beginning and end of all things for her, and her devotion became as true as his own from that moment. This was all made plain by the accomplished actress who assumed the title role of the Champion photodrama, though her sentiments were manifested by tiny gestures, smiles or tears.

The audience watches the awakening of love almost as keenly as a mother does the unfolding of character in her children, and the audience watches this story sympathetically because of the tragic element. Ordinarily we like to see that they marry and live (presumably) happy ever afterwards, but it was the tragedy in the forbidden passion of Romeo and Juliet that made their story immortal. We realize from the outset that trouble is coming—it is against the rules for Camilles to have happy endings—but the assured disaster only serves to stimulate interest and is made pitiful by the sincerity and intensity of the social outcast's passion.

Can such women truly love? We are not so sharply divided into classes as theorists and moralists seem to think. Those in prison and those out seem to afford the only guide we have, and even that is unstable. Any deep student of our kind knows that the differences in human nature are not half so remarkable as the resemblances. Much as we fondle the egotistical idea of individuality, we are dreadfully alike after all. Any of us can love if we are healthy and the right one comes along, and we are apt to do so regardless of social regulations. People go to see Camille because of its boundless charity for all humanity.

The drama as produced by the Champion Film Company is very humanizing, especially in the second part. It is when Camille's better nature is awakened by Armand's love that we realize how near she is to the common pattern, and Miss Shipman proves strongest in this sudden revelation of life as it should be, with a pitiful submission to the inevitable. The finer powers of her soul have scarcely been set free before they are suppressed by harsh necessity. She is asked by Armand's father to renounce him in the interest of his young sister's marriage.

It has been no trial for Camille to love; it was in her to do so, and all the radiance of her spirit that was repressed by her unfavorable environment bursts forth at Nature's call. She idolizes the man of her natural choice and gives him the perfect companionship for which he has longed. They are as mutually absorbed as Romeo and Juliet, drawn together by the secret and mysterious laws of sympathy, happy as two children of hearts unspoiled, their chains forged and tempered for life, when the blow falls that is to send each into the barren desert of eternal solitude. Why should she sacrifice all that she holds dear for the happiness of another? Because of the nobility that is within her that has been stirred to its profoundest depths. She knows that her love is not without fault, that it even fails to meet her own ideals.

"There is love that stirs the heart, and love that gives it rest,
But the love that leads upward is the noblest and the best."

Armand, being a man and unaccustomed to self-denial, can not be depended upon to break off the relation, so the creature who has been enslaved by circumstances and has risen above them for one fond glimpse of liberty, consents to present the appearance of sinking back again into servitude rather than destroy the happiness of a pure young girl who is Armand's sister. She consents to meet a former admirer, De Varville, a man detested by Armand, but we miss a great deal in her last words to her lover.

Scene from "Camille" (Champion).

"Since the day I first met you," she tells Armand, "I welcomed your love in my heart of hearts, believing it a sign from heaven that the past had been forgiven. If I have ever caused your heart a pang, you will forgive me—will you not? And when, one day, you recall the little proofs of love I have given you, you will not despise me or curse my memory?"

She makes an effort to be worldly, tries to smile through her tears, she who would give a whole eternity of happiness just to be allowed to love him, but consequences are unpitying and she seems to feel intuitively that she is entering the death of her new life before it has fully expanded. With only a taste of the unfledged freedom of girls carefully guarded from such servitude or born beyond its reach, she prepares to return to the weary world of purgatorial discipline, a sacrificial victim upon the altar of human betterment.

Her infidelity is only a pretense. The crown that had glorified one brief moment of her life was that of her uplifting and she cannot return to her shame. She makes the separation a sure one—she has so promised to Armand's father, this woman of more passion and heart than head—but her love will only die with her and she loses all hope in the sad cadence of her misery. She sinks rapidly under the pressure of her silent grief, becoming a beneficient angel to others in her last moments and is finally visited by Armand in full possession of the truth regarding her strange conduct. With a touch of unselfish joy in the happiness she has at last been able to confer upon others, she dies, and Dumas could not let her story be written on the sands of oblivion.

In presenting this great story of erring human nature, Lawrence McGill was fortunate in bringing Miss Gertrude Shipman into moving pictures. Only an accomplished actress could make the dual nature of Camille so visible as to reach the emotions. This pivotal character, around which others group themselves, is one which requires great delicacy in handling, not only because it is that of a woman who has fallen from grace, but because interest depends largely on the ability of the actress to enforce contrasts of two natures in one being. Vivacity of movement during the earlier scenes is intensified by the comedy relief offered by minor parts, and the support of Irving Cummings, in the rôle of Armand, is without flaw. He looks as well as acts the part, making it that of a manly, if infatuated, young man, leading up to the center rather than trying to make it revolve around him. Even his grief partakes of the delicacy which pervades the entire production.

I believe in all plays that the people like so well that they want to see them over and over again, long after the press agent has done his damndest. The play is written for the audience and those who go to the theater are the best judges of quality in existence. I have tried to give a reason for the popularity of this great drama, but, if I have not succeeded in disentangling the real point at issue, it is because I am not applying the right principles of criticism, and I expect those who see the version offered by the Champion Film Company to feel its purpose more powerfully than I can describe it. Perhaps a poetess has best expressed it:

> "'Tis not because of any lack in thee,
> Beloved, that I weep, nor any pain
> The wisest lovers ever could explain
> In terms of human sorrow. But I see
> In Love's immortal garden a dark tree
> Whose name I know not, and the winds complain
> Forever through its leaves in long refrain;
> But I believe if I should ever dare
> To lie beneath that tree a whole night long
> That in the morning I should know the song
> God sang when Eve was tempted, and the prayer
> That made the Galilean pity-strong."

The Moving Picture World desires to add to Mr. Harrison's encomiums something regarding the quality of the photography of this picture. Champion has long been known for its good work in its laboratories and the Camille picture has been given excellent treatment in this respect. It is as about as near perfection in point of photography as anything that has appeared on the screen in some time. Our readers will also be interested in the cast of characters, which is given here in full:

"The Permanent Feature"

By Prof. Preston.

MR. EXHIBITOR, what is your "feature"? Every exhibitor has his feature now and then. He must have it; it is his one bone of contention, trying to find features. Mr. and Mrs. Public stop in front of your lobby and before purchasing tickets say: What is your feature to-day?

Now if a feature is what you are looking for, and you surely are, why don't you have a permanent one, one that Mr. and Mrs. Audience will talk about, favorably, of course.

When Aunt and Uncle Suburb call on Mr. and Mrs. Audience in town, Mrs. A— will say: "Oh! Aunty, I have a treat for you this afternoon, we will go to Mr. Exhibitor's Theater, he has beautiful pictures and you will surely enjoy them."

Mrs. Suburb will say: "Oh, we have pictures in our town, that is no treat." "Oh, but Aunty, there is a lecturer here that explains everything to you; he tells you the story as you watch the silent actors perform." Aunty becomes interested, no matter what her opinion may be; she accompanies Mrs. Audience to Mr. Exhibitor's Theater to see his "Permanent Feature" and you may be sure is greatly pleased.

It does not stop here, however. Mr. and Mrs. Suburb return home and tell Mr. and Mrs. Residents of their town, and they at once become anxious to see that which Mr. and Mrs. S— saw.

There has been so much said in favor of the lecturer as a Permanent Feature, that it is surprising how many exhibitors condemn, and how few are in favor of him.

In the city of Boston proper, there are over twenty picture theaters, not saying how many there are in the suburbs. Only one of these houses feature a lecturer among its regular attractions.

Some of the other houses have used a lecturer for special releases.

If one wishes to hear a lecture they must pay twenty-five cents to two dollars per seat. In the house I refer to, wherein a lecturer is featured regularly, the price of admission does not, as you might suppose, bring a following of rough element, but strange as it may seem, the larger percentage of its patrons are of the nicer class of people, those of the rough element who come in, have proved to be very attentive listeners, and very appreciative of the endeavors of the lecturer.

There is a prominent jeweler living in the city of Lynn, who makes it a practice to come to Boston twice or three times every week to hear this lecturer. Well pleased himself, he has advertised the lecturer among his friends to such an extent that no less than half a hundred new patrons are coming from his neighborhood regularly.

You may argue, "That anything used permanently ceases after a time to be a feature and only does exist as an item of expense." But wait! Do you remember what Mr. Legitimate said, when Mr. Exhibitor opened the doors of his "Little Tiny Show Shop" and showed as his "Feature" moving pictures?

"They won't last, the public will tire." And do you remember what you said in return? Well, then, I but quote your own remarks, in answer to your thoughts, "We've Come to Stay." You also know how little was felt your competition then, and how great that same competition is felt to-day. Then perhaps you will take heed, and be the Mr. Exhibitor to show "The Permanent Feature" before Mr. Competitor does so, and you become a fellow sufferer of Mr. Legitimate.

You may say, "It is impossible to find films serviceable as subjects for a lecture, or enough of them to engage a lecturer permanently, but it is surprising to see the very 'tame' stories that can be used with good effect by a competent man, and made very interesting to your audience.

In the last six months I have used over two hundred films as lecture subjects, and can honestly say ninety per cent. of them were good as lectures.

It is true just at present the supply of lecturers is limited, but it is a new field, although lecturing is as old as the theatrical business. Lecturing on moving pictures is only in its infancy. You will find this one form of amusement highly endorsed by the clergy, and any board of censorship, in fact, by any learned man or body of men. You will find in time to come that the lecturer will be as essential to your business as the films are now. It has been proven beyond a doubt that a lecture adds to a picture a certain amount of interest that could not be had otherwise. It has also been proven that the moving picture adds to the lecturer a certain something he never had heretofore. Then why not take these two that belong together, and keep them so. The best place to do this on your bill as "your permanent feature."

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

FOR some time past, committees appointed by the Chicago Exhibitors' League have been at work outlining preparations for the National Convention, to be held here in August next. The National Convention committee is composed of William J. Sweeney, chairman; Robert R. Levy, Julius Alcock, Chas A. Anderson, A. J. Hill, L. Schindler, S. J. Levine, M. Hyman, John Miller, Chas. Abrams, Fred W. Schaefer, A. Balabin, Crawford L. Hull, C. C. Whalen, L. H. Frank and I. Natkin. From this committee of the whole the following members have been chosen to serve on the committee on finance: Robert R. Levy, chairman; Crawford L. Hull, L. Schindler, I. Natkin, S. J. Levine and John Miller. The following were also selected to act on the committee of publicity and program: L. H. Frank, chairman; Julius Alcock, A. J. Hill, M. Hyman and Fred W. Schaefer.

Through the courtesy of the owners of the Orpheum Theater, on State Street, these committees will hold their regular and special meetings on the third floor of the Orpheum building, 110 S. State Street, without cost to the local league. Henceforth the latter will hold its regular meetings on the first and third Mondays of every month, in Schiller Hall, on the twelfth floor of the Schiller building.

It has already been arranged that the National Convention will be held in the Banquet Hall and Rose Room of the La Salle Hotel. These magnificent rooms occupy the entire space of the nineteenth floor of this high-class hostelry, which is centrally located in the loop district. There will be ample seating facilities for 1,700 people, and a suite of rooms on the same floor, for the national president and secretary.

The entire eighteenth floor of the La Salle will be devoted to exhibition purposes, for the use of the representatives of manufacturing and supply firms, etc. Very reasonable rentals will be charged for the various rooms, and reservations will be made on written application to the chairman of the National Convention Committee, at 110 S. State Street. All communications will be turned over by him to the committee in charge of this work.

The Chicago Association of Commerce will co-operate with the members of the National Convention Committee in promoting the comfort and pleasure of visitors. The Association, it is said, will assist in securing some large, downtown theater for the exhibition of films, probably the Auditorium or Orchestra Hall.

It is too early to dwell on the efforts that will be put forth by the film manufacturers of Chicago to entertain visitors; but it is known that the Selig, Essanay and American plants will be down on the program for entertaining numbers that alone will be well worth crossing the continent to see.

The National Convention in Chicago will be managed and controlled by the Chicago local organization. It will be typically Chicagoan. It will be conducted on a scale worthy of Chicago enterprise, and in a manner that will reflect the Chicago spirit and thoroughness of doing things. The members of the various committees are already working zealously and with an enthusiasm that means great success. New stationery has been already printed and letters were sent out on May 9th and 10th to manufacturing firms and supply houses in the trade. A follow-up system of correspondence has been adopted to keep members of the various local and state organizations throughout the country in close touch, from the present time until the Convention is held. Work on the souvenir program of the Convention has begun, and it is the purpose to have it prepared and printed without delay, and copies mailed broadcast to exhibitors in the United States and Canada.

The Chicago local is to be congratulated on the selection of Wm. J. Sweeney for chairman of the National Convention Committee. Mr. Sweeney is conservative, thorough and able. Allied with sound business ability, he has a personality that inspires confidence and that wins a following. With the able lieutenants at his command, there will be no fear that the approaching convention in Chicago will be a credit to Chicago exhibitors and an uplift to the business generally.

Coming Essanay Special Features.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company, was visited one day last week at the plant, on Argyle Street, and revealed some of his plans for the near future that will be read with interest.

Beginning with July, the Essanay Company will release a big feature, three-reel, special drama every month, in addition to the regular releases. For nearly a year preparations have been under way for the production of "The Conquest of Mexico," which will be released some time in July. This great dramatic spectacle is in the hands of three producers, the scenario having been written by Thomas Stevens and Kenneth Sawyer Goodwin. Concerted production will begin the first week in June, and it is said that over 500 people—actors and supernumeraries—will be used.

"The Marriage Mill," a two-reel subject, arraigning the lax marriage laws of the United States, will probably be the special feature following "The Conquest of Mexico." Both the scenario and production are by Archer McMackin. Among the special feature, three-reel subjects scheduled to follow are: "The Masked Wrestler," "The Ring of Romanis" (a psychological romance), "The Vampires of Civilization," "The Links of Destiny," "The White Indian Princess," and "The Palace of Chance."

A July release promised by Mr. Spoor is "A Journey to the Castle of Fame." This is a one-reel subject, on the order of the old morality play, and nothing like it has ever been filmed before.

Eastern and Western comedies and dramas will be continued as usual for the regular releases.

Special printing and a comprehensive list of advertising aids will be gotten out for all the three-reel features.

It will be seen from the foregoing that Essanay has carefully laid plans for an ambitious and unprecedented campaign in the production of high class, special feature films.

Indecent Vaudeville Acts in St. Louis Picture Theaters.

The St. Louis Star has begun an active campaign against suggestive and indecent vaudeville acts, at present used in that city, in certain moving picture theaters. The following editor's note appears at the head of one of the articles at hand:

"The Star is not opposed to the cheap shows. On the contrary, it approves of popular-priced forms of amusement, recognizing the great potentiality of the picture theaters as educational centers.

"The editor of The Star has been reliably informed that while most of the pictures are unobjectionable, certain vaudeville performers are permitted to inject into their lines and situations suggestive, vulgar and often indecent features."

The editor requests readers of the Star to furnish him with a list of any objectionable things seen or heard at any of the picture theaters, giving the names of the houses and the performers, the dates and a brief statement of what happened, promising not to disclose the names of his informants. Here is an excerpt from the article:

"Although the moving pictures shown are generally of a high class, it has been complained that many of the actors, who appear, have vitiated their acts by adding indecent quips and puns that shock rather than amuse.

"The Star in undertaking a moral house-cleaning of the vaudeville acts does not appear as opposed to the moving picture theaters. These places of amusement, it is generally conceded, will do more good in an educational and moral way for the people of St. Louis than any other form of amusement, if properly conducted.

"While managers have made efforts to purify the entertainment features, the vaudeville actors themselves have sacrificed the moral tone of the theaters in order to get applause.

"Many of them, failing to win applause by time-honored jokes, have descended to a suggestive and indecent display of alleged humor in order to satisfy the theater manager that their act is a 'scream.' The fact that children are the more numerous patrons of the popular-priced theaters and are, therefore, more or less subject to the influences of the actors, as well as the pictures shown, has necessitated a campaign to clear the shows of objectionable influences."

Examples are then given where vaudeville performers have offended refined taste and morality.

There is nothing new in all this. It is as old as the hills. The performer, barren of real humor, has always resorted to vulgarity for a laugh. He did it without restraint in the old variety houses, in "box-rustling" days. He is a thing of the past; and motion pictures, with their clean and enlightened patrons, have long since ousted him from most of our picture theaters. The root of the evil lies in the non-intelligent manager.

Rothapfel Resigns Management of Lyric.

S. L. Rothapfel, the talented presentor of moving pictures, has severed his connection with the Lyric Theater, Minneapolis. His resignation, as manager, took effect Monday, April 29.

Regret over Manager Rothapfel's departure from the scene of his brilliant success in Minneapolis found expression in all the local papers, and in numerous letters from men's and ladies' clubs, the members of which were devoted patrons of the Lyric. This theater was patronized by the most intelligent and influential residents of Minneapolis, who found in Mr. Rothapfel's programs refined and delightful entertainment. The musical scores, arranged by him personally for the moving pictures on the screen, were much appreciated by cultured people, who recognized in them the theme and burden of the pictures themselves.

Mr. Rothapfel has a big future before him in the exhibiting field, and it is hoped that he will soon be able to announce that arrangements have been completed for his permanent location in a metropolitan city, where moving pictures will be presented by him to thousands where there were only hundreds before. Moving pictures have in Mr. Rothapfel an artistic admirer and an unequalled exponent of their merits.

The following letter, dated May 2, was received by Mr. Rothapfel from prominent ladies of Minneapolis, on hearing of his resignation from the Lyric: "A party of about one hundred women, representing several of the women's clubs of the city, attended the matinee at the Lyric Theater this afternoon, as a mark of appreciation of Mr. Rothapfel's efforts to give to the public a good clean show, presenting pictures both entertaining and instructive.

"The music has been furnished by some of the most talented musicians of Minneapolis. Credit is due Mr. Rothapfel for the work he has done in giving to the city a show of this kind, at so moderate a price as to be within the reach of all.

"The clubs represented were the Thursday Study Club, the Authors' Study Club, the Pathfinders, the Prospect Park Study Club, the Utopian Club, and the Shakespeare Club." Signed by Mrs. L. J. Haas, Mrs. V. C. Sherman, Mrs. J. F. Wilson, Mrs. John T. Kean and Mrs. J. L. Erdall.

A banquet was given by the employes of the Lyric, in honor of Mr. Rothapfel, Monday evening, May 6.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Richard Brady, of the Cine Film Department of the Eastman Kodak Company, was in Chicago Saturday, May 4. Mr. Brady made the trip to meet his wife, on her return from Portland, Oregon, where she has been spending the winter. They returned to New York Saturday evening.

The first runs of "The Coming of Columbus" have been shown to tremendous business in Chicago. Crowded houses were the rule everywhere and ten cent prices prevailed. Louis H. Frank, of the Halsted Theater, 6202 S. Halsted street, booked the films for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 6, 7, 8, and reports excellent results.

The Illinois State rights for the Bernhardt and Rejane feature films are owned personally by C. R. Plough, of the Anti-Trust Film Co. The La Salle Theater on Madison street, a legitimate house, was secured for the presentation of "Camille" and the first exhibitions were given Sunday, May 5, at prices ranging from ten to fifty cents. The opening day was most successful. Manager D. J. Chatkins states that he never saw as many people willing to pay fifty cents to see moving pictures. The high-priced seats, as a rule, were always in greatest demand. William Mock, who was with Lyman B. Howe for four years in the operating department, is in the operator's room at the La Salle. When I visited the house, the light was not as good as it might have been and in consequence the picture was indistinct, at times.

The Kedzie Annex, a new theater seating 900 people, adjoining the popular Kedzie vaudeville house on Kedzie avenue in this city, will be opened in the near future with an exclusive picture program. Mr. Malcolm, one of the owners, accompanied by his operator, Mr. Blakely, paid a visit to the Lyric, Minneapolis, last week, in order to familiarize himself with the methods of Manager Rothapfel in presenting pictures. Mr. Malcolm is enthused over the exhibitions at the Lyric, and states that he had no idea, until seeing the Lyric shows, of the possibilities of moving pictures.

The American Song Slide and Poster Company announces that the demand for extra large size lithographs for "The Coming of Columbus" has exceeded all expectations. Mr. Van Ronkel, the manager of the firm, states that his customers are using billboards and following all the methods employed by legitimate theater managers in announcing star attractions.

J. V. Weaver, of Cedar Rapids, has purchased the State rights for Iowa of the Johnson-Flynn bout. Tom Quill is handling the business.

The Western Song Slide Service Company has moved from the offices in the Chicago Opera House, to more commodious quarters in the Oxford Building, 118 N. La Salle street. The new offices and stock room, which occupy suites 805-6-7, are handsomely furnished. A department for furnishing vocal talent has been added.

The Amusement Supply Company has enlarged its offices, which now occupy the entire front of the fourth floor, at 17 N. Dearborn street. Manager Traub states that business is excellent.

* * *

The Northern Feature Film Company has moved from the Grand Opera House building to suite 405 in the Schiller building. It has consolidated with the Pearl Feature Film Company, whose offices were formerly at 219 S. Dearborn street. The company now handles two and three reel features exclusively. "Absalom" and "The Courier of Lyons" are among the prominent subjects soon to be released.

THE KLEINE PROGRAM FOR WEEK OF MAY 18.

The Cines for Tuesday, the 14th, is a split reel about 1,000 feet, containing two of the funniest farces ever put out by this company. The Eclipse for Wednesday, the 15th, is a full reel with a very powerful dramatic story dealing with hypnotic suggestion, completed with a splendid scenic. The Saturday's Cines is a full reel of clean-cut, exceedingly mirthful domestic comedy.

The split reel farces are "Two Weary Willies" and "The Substitute." The first named deals with the adventures of two hungry tramps who fondly imagine they have solved the problem of living for nothing, but to their ultimate sorrow discover that their little game may be played once too often. The incidents relating how they impose upon several cafes and succeed in securing free meals; how they take turns masquerading as policemen and arrest each other to avoid paying their bills; and how they finally are brought to book by a genuine policeman are excruciatingly funny and should afford unbounded amusement to both children and grown-ups. "The Substitute" concludes the reel and in itself is fun enough to stand alone. The ludicrous adventures which befall an amateur reporter who has been requested by his friend, the real reporter who has been taken suddenly ill, to officiate for his paper at an important State dinner where a distinguished politician is expected to make a momentous speech; and the capers he cuts in his zealous endeavors to chronicle the event before he is finally thrown out are little short of side-splitting. The fun is fast and furious.

The Wednesday release, an Eclipse, relates a powerful and thrilling story of the evil sway a wicked count has over a beautiful girl, which gives it the appropriate title of "Under the Sway." It depicts in vivid style the possibilities of hypnotism and the dangerous uses it may be put to where the possessor of the power is an evil person. The parts are excellently played by actors well known in the theatrical world and the setting and handling of the piece is all that could be desired. The story is well carried out by a finished scenario in a very convincing manner. To complete this reel a very beautiful scenic subject has been added, showing many of the most picturesque spots in England. The scenes in Kent include views in and about the quaint towns of Canterbury, Maidstone and Yarling.

The Cines Saturday release, "Family Jars," a very capital comedy of errors, should furnish a multitude of wholesome laughs for the audiences. It deals with the trials and tribulations of a newly-wed couple on their honeymoon, when the parents of both the young people interrupt their celestial heaven by a most inopportune visit. The difficulties of the much-annoyed young couple in endeavoring to escape the inevitable eruptions and quarreling which result from the differences of opinion held by the old people supply considerable comedy.

Lady Audley's Secret.

Imp Company Scores Its Best in Adapting a Well-Known English Novel.

TWO-REEL subjects have become more frequent at the Imp studios. It was not more than six months ago that the Imp Company produced its first two-reel subject. Since that time it has a number to its credit. But chief among them all is its latest effort, "Lady Audley's Secret," a photoplay based upon the well-known English novel of the same name by Miss Mary Ellen Braddon. The book has been popular for a number of years as it contains some extremely accurate delineations of English life. As a photoplay it is a pleasure to note that none of the interest of Miss Braddon's novel has been lost. It is a period story dating back to, about, the early forties, when the wearing apparel of men and women was undergoing the transition from the old to the modern. In the picture, the atmosphere of the story is accurately preserved, and it is well to take the opportunity at this point to congratulate the Imp Company on having produced a period play that is practically perfect in the matter of detail.

"Lady Audley's Secret" is the best photoplay that the Imp Company has ever turned out. That can be said without reserve or qualification. It may have turned out tenser thrillers at one time or another, or it may have turned out sweeter stories, but taking it by and large, in regard to acting, costuming, photography, scenery and general all round consistency, it is the best picture that the Imp Company has ever made. The part of Lady Audley is played by Miss Jane Fernleigh, formerly of the Reliance Company. We have noted Miss Fernleigh's work for quite a few months, but never have we seen her play anything that can equal her work in this production. Perhaps it was that her other parts may not have carried with them the opportunities that Lady Audley affords, but, at any rate, in this instance she has risen to the occasion splendidly and earned for herself recognition that cannot be denied. King Baggot, of course, is always to be relied upon. His work is that of a finished artist, which seems to be improving with time. However, in "Lady Audley's Secret," there is one actor who does not appear, and who is deserving of the lion's share of the credit. He is Mr. Otis Turner, the producer. Mr. Turner is entitled to all praise, and to the satisfaction of having turned out one of the most artistic and consistent photoplays in a month of Sundays.

The part of Lady Audley is a difficult one. It calls for the portrayal of a creature who though fair of face is fickle at heart, and at times treacherous and murderous. It calls for the outward semblance of an angel with the heart of a devil, and is a part that requires the highest ability. The story runs somewhat as follows: George Talboys, a young Englishman, had a wife who was insane on the subject of wealth and power. He could not begin to satisfy her longings in that direction and the result was separation. Talboys went to a foreign land in search of gold, while his wife, Helen, remained in England and shaped her course as she saw fit. She caused to be published a death notice proclaiming her own demise. A copy of the death notice was forwarded to George Talboys. He received the notice and believed his wife had died. Meantime, Helen had left her humble abode and gone to London, where she became, to pervert the Bible, "a fisher of men."

Before long she had old Lord Audley kneeling at her feet. Old, though he was, he was very rich and could give her the things her heart and soul craved for, so she married him. She thereby became a bigamist, and that was her secret. A few years after this event, Talboys returned to England, and one night at a social gathering, he was introduced to his own wife as Lady Audley. She begged him to keep her secret, which he agreed to do, but only on condition that she meet him later and give an explanation. They met by an old well where she proceeded to explain until, by a ruse, she managed to push Talboys into the well and speedily disappear from the scene. This action, however, was observed by the keeper of a disreputable inn, who happened to pass near by while hunting. Thereafter the innkeeper levied blackmail upon Lady Audley. This innkeeper had rescued Talboys from the well and had kept him at the inn for a time. Lady Audley, learning of this, saw an opportunity to rid herself of two enemies at one stroke. Accordingly she set fire to the inn, but both her intended victims were rescued from the flames. When confronted later by the husband whom she had so bitterly wronged, her mind gave way and she became hopelessly insane.

Scene from "Lady Audley's Secret" (Imp).

The picture is strong with interest throughout. The Moving Picture World can faithfully recommend it as a feature for any house that is desirous of presenting thrilling dramatic subjects. H. F. H.

Striking Kalem Subject.

"Missionaries in Darkest Africa" Replete with Interesting Scenes in Egypt.

A strenuous phase of mission life in foreign lands is shown in the Kalem subject soon to be released entitled, "Missionaries in Darkest Africa." There are many interesting features connected with this picture. It was taken amid some of the wildest of African scenes and, with the exception of three persons, all the people in the picture are natives in primitive costume.

The scenario was written by Miss Gauntier, who received valuable assistance from the missionary in charge of one of the missionary stations near Luxor, Egypt. The incidents of the story are wholly within the experience of foreign missionary workers and illustrate an unpleasant phase of missionary life. A brief epitome of the story runs as follows:

The Rev. Elbert Lawrence, feeling his duty lies farther south among the savage tribes of Africa, departs with his daughter from the settlement near Luxor, Egypt, to a new field of labor. Several weeks later the missionaries arrive at their new field. At the first religious service, the natives show considerable interest and the chief orders all his tribesmen to attend. The chief wins Faith's confidence and begs for private instruction. While Faith is doing her best to teach the dusky African, he, on his part, is falling desperately in love with the white girl and determines that she shall be his wife.

The chief brings presents and gifts and asks the Rev. Lawrence for the hand of his daughter. Upon his gifts being refused and his suit declined, he orders his tribesmen to fall upon the missionary, and they take the girl captive. They arrive at the village of the tribe on the desert and Faith, recognizing her danger, decides to take her own life, thus surrendering her soul to the keeping of her Maker.

The characters are depicted as follows: Rev. Elbert Lawrence, Robert Vignola; his daughter, Faith, Miss Gauntier; the savage chieftain, Jack J. Clark. Excellent photography and realistic scenes combine to make this a most interesting subject, and one worthy of a prominent place on any picture program. Special, one, three and six-sheet lithograph posters have been made for this subject.

MISPLACED CREDIT.

In last week's issue of the Moving Picture World it was recorded that Mr. E. C. Hall was the author of the Kalem pictures, "A Spartan Mother," "War's Havoc" and "Fighting Dan McCool." While Mr. Hall has written many scenarios along similar lines, it happened that he did not write either story mentioned and consequently would not care to take the credit belonging to others. The World hastens to make the correction: Kenean Buel wrote the first two and W. B. Loughead, of Minneapolis, Minn., the latter.

Detective Dorothy.

An Interesting Detective Story Produced by the Eastern Essanay Players.

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

A GOOD average film will be released by the Essanay Company, under the title of "Detective Dorothy," on May 24. This is a well constructed, well acted photoplay, with stirring action and a very pleasing climax at the close. It is away out of the customary atmosphere of detective stories, and shows how a tiny little tot of four years innocently assists in the arrest of a criminal. The story, too, has a pathetic side that cannot fail to work good in the hearts of those who are blessed with a competence, when they contrast their lots with that of the poor woman who is forced to give her only child into the care of another, because she cannot provide food and clothing.

The film has been produced by one of the Eastern companies, Bryant Washburn taking the role of the criminal, and little Sadie Francis Osman the title role.

The opening scene shows us the interior of Dorothy's home. Her mother and the lady who has arranged to adopt Dorothy are present. The poor mother's heart is torn by love and duty. We see her snatch Dorothy from the arms of the good woman, who is about to take her away, and caress her with hysterical vehemence. Then, listening to the counsel of her visitor, she again surrenders the child, only to seize her once more and press her to her heart in frenzy. When the parting finally takes place, the now childless widow can no longer bear the loneliness and she goes into the streets. As she passes along she stops to read a notice, posted on a tree, offering $5,000 for the capture of James Bradley, a murderer, who is believed to be in the vicinity.

The scene changes and we catch sight of Bradley lurking in the shadows of an alley. The police are close on his trail, only a block away. He takes to the roofs, as the officers press him hard. They have not caught sight of him, but follow the marks made by him in his desperate flight. Bradley is almost at his wit's end to escape them, and climbs down a fire escape that leads past the room of Dorothy's mother. The window is open, just as left by the widow, when she took her last look at her child. He enters hastily and pulls down the sash. Then he rushes to a closet and disguises himself by dressing in the widow's clothes. The officers have lost the scent, and are standing in front of the doorway leading to the widow's apartments when a woman comes out. It is Bradley. The officers have no suspicions, and the murderer passes on.

The scene now changes to Dorothy in her new home. It is luxurious, and she is being petted and loaded with toys; but we can see that she pines for her mother. A nurse accompanies Dorothy on a walk and chances to meet a girl friend. While they are absorbed in conversation, Dorothy runs away. On coming to a street crossing, she spies a woman wearing a dress that she recognizes as her mother's. Believing it to be her mother, she runs after her, calling as she runs.

A police officer, who is on Bradley's trail, watches the incident, and, in a moment, Bradley is pounced on by the officer. The bonnet is snatched off, and the face and head of Bradley are clearly revealed. Other officers arrive and the murderer is secured and led off to headquarters. Dorothy is forgotten for the time and stands weeping and bewildered. A big officer is seen returning to the child, and carries her away to the superintendent's office. Dorothy is made the hero of the hour by the big-hearted bluecoats, from the superintendent down to patrolman. She had accomplished what they had failed to do she had led to the arrest of Bradley and was the rightful claimant of the reward of $5,000. The superintendent takes Dorothy in his arms and, accompanied by several of his men, conveys her to her mother. That poor woman is overcome by happiness, as she thanks the officers, and takes her child once more to her heart.

Nat Goodwin in Moving Pictures.

The Well-Known Thespian of the Legitimate Stage Makes His Bow to the Photo Theater-Goers.

RUMOR has connected Nat Goodwin with moving pictures for almost a year past, but we were never able to get the goods on him until the present week. On May 4th Mr. Goodwin terminated a highly successful engagement at the Empire Theater, New York, that began nine weeks before at the New Amsterdam Theater. He was appearing as Fagin in an elaborate revival of "Oliver Twist" supported by a cast of players well reputed as interpreters of Dickens' characters.

Mr. Goodwin set the town agog with his masterful rendition of Fagin. His success was complete, artistically and financially. But when the season ended Mr. Goodwin did not stop playing "Oliver Twist." An enterprising young man by the name of H. A. Spanuth had been dickering for some days with Goodwin, pointing out the manifold advantages of an actor of Mr. Goodwin's calibre appearing in pictures. The day before the closing date Mr. Goodwin began to listen to reason. The show closed Saturday night and on the following Monday morning, May 6th, the principals of the "Oliver Twist" Company appeared at the Crystal Studios, New York City, ready to record the popular Dickens play in which they were all well versed.

To the Crystal Studio in the Bronx the writer journeyed, dodging raindrops that were falling fast. As soon as the studio door was opened there came forth sounds of tragedy. Something terrible was going on. Somebody was in trouble. It sounded like a child being punished by a cruel man. And so it was. A few steps revealed Fagin's den, and there was Goodwin as Fagin terrifying the hapless Oliver. Having seen the play on Broadway but a week before, it was interesting to note whether the play was being changed to suit the pictures. There was not much of a change. It was found that those who are responsible for the production of this picture intend to leave out nothing that has any bearing on the play. To their great credit they have decided to photograph the play in its entirety and later trim out any parts that seem to drag.

As Mr. Spanuth expressed it, "We are not going to try to cram "Oliver Twist" into two reels or three reels. If it takes four reels to do it right then the production will be four reels long. If it requires five reels, five reels it shall be. Or six. Or seven, for that matter. We do not intend to allow this picture to look as though it had come out of a sausage machine as some recent Dickens productions have given one the idea. It has been the fad lately to film the works of Dickens as special releases and jam them into two thousand feet by hydraulic pressure. The results have not been satisfactory. They have not been such as would enhance any great regard for Dickens in people who have never known him, much less with those who do know him. A short production of any of Dickens' plays enables the producer to touch only the high spots. Most of the charm of Dickens is thereby lost and sadly missed by the beholder if he happens to be a lover of Dickens. In producing this drama we not only have a standard work of fiction but we have an artist of great renown in the leading role, surrounded by a well-trained set of principals who have just made it a Broadway success. How stupid, therefore, it would be of us to ruin it by cramping it into the confines of an arbitrary number of feet."

We got in a few words of conversation with Nat at odd moments during the afternoon. "How do you like the moving picture game?" we asked him.

Quick as a flash he answered, "I don't know much about it, but I like it as far as I have gone."

"Had you thought of taking it up as a permanent business?"

"That will depend very much upon how these pictures turn out. If we are successful in this, artistically and financially, there is a chance that we will do a number of the plays in which I have successfully appeared, and perhaps others in which I have not appeared."

"Do you believe that the moving picture drama has come to take its place as the new form of legitimate dramatic art?"

"My dear boy, if I did not believe it, I would not be here."

That's the answer. H. F. H.

Florence Lawrence Joins Independents.

Popular Photoplay Actress Home From Abroad After a Three-Months' Trip Through Foreign Lands.

ON a rainy day in a Broadway photograph gallery Miss Lawrence was found by the party who is writing at you. By appointment. By royal appointment. She's a queen, you know. She was being photoed within an inch of her life for her coming fall campaign against the masculine heart. Not to say the feminine. We got first run on one of the photos. Which is exhibited herewith. After the photographic agony, which is not at all her kind of photography, yours truly piloted her, like a piece of fragile and costly Dresden china, through the rushing Broadway crowd to a seat at the democratic "Kaiserhoff," where people eat.

Miss Lawrence had returned only a few days before from an extensive tour of Europe and other places. Naturally she was full of utterance and we dallied long over the finger bowls as her tale spun merrily on. She left the Lubin Company early in February and sailed away for a long rest. She didn't get the rest Why? Because Europe is a bad place to rest in. That is, if you're an American. She didn't get much bodily rest, but she got mental rest. Which was what she wanted more than the other kind. She went from England to Egypt and back again with side excursions into Palestine, Turkey, Italy, Greece, Germany and La Belle France, not to mention Sweden and Denmark, and not forgetting the Emerald Isle of which country she is not a native.

Miss Florence Lawrence.

Miss Lawrence in her travels dismissed moving pictures from her mind quite completely, that being one of the principal objects of her trip. As a consequence she was not prepared to make any broad sweeping statements as to the past, present or future of moving pictures in the Old World. She did meet the Kalem Company on a steamer coming up the Nile and had a pleasant reminiss with them. She went to some picture shows in Italy where they were showing pictures that would never pass the board of Censorship here in America. In fact, they were of such a kind that she retreated from the places very red with blushes. Contrary to the reports of others visiting Europe, Miss Lawrence says that American pictures are not very much in evidence; but her opinion she insists is no criterion as she was trying to forget that moving pictures ever existed.

The real piece of news concerning the return of Miss Lawrence is that she will become an Independent photoplayer. There had been much speculation during her absence as to her future movements, and there was spirited bidding for her services upon her arrival in America. The successful bidder was Mr. P. A. Powers, who will feature Miss Lawrence as the head of a new stock company that will be formed especially for her particular line of work. Just what the salary offered Miss Lawrence amounts to is not definitely known, but it is conceded to be well up around four figures. To insure the best results from Miss Lawrence's work, Mr. Powers has also secured the services of Mr. Harry Salter, the well-known director, formerly of the Lubin Company, Philadelphia. As Miss Lawrence has formerly worked under Mr. Salter's direction, at the Biograph, Lubin and Imp studios, their joint product will be far from experimental, and with Mr. Salter given carte blanche, the Florence Lawrence pictures will be, no doubt, better than ever.

Anna Shaw and Jane Addams in Pictures

Leading Suffragettes of the United States Assemble at the Reliance Studio to Appear Before Camera.

PICTURES of wild animals in Africa and polar bears in Alaska may be popular, but soon they will have to share the limelight with the female of the species humana. The World representative answered a hurry call this week from the Reliance studios where they had just closed the doors on the largest gathering of prominent suffragettes that ever was assembled in a moving picture studio. Bear in mind, they were not the common or garden variety of suffragette, but the national and state leaders. Women whose names are familiar wherever the advancement of women's rights is heard of. They were there to pose especially for a picture which will be entitled "Votes for Women."

The Reliance people had set before the chief offers of the suffrage movement the benefits to be derived for thir cause through the use of moving pictures. An idea which at first seemed utopian to their dignity and ideals, upon close scrutiny was found to be the most powerful agency obtainable for the furtherance of their cause. The suggestion was made and allowed to stand until it could be thoroughly considered. The longer it stood the stronger it was in effect, until at last the ladies were all of one mind and were eager to begin the picture. A story was written that was satisfactory. Arrangements were made for Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, national president, and Miss Jane Addams, national vice-president, to come on from Chicago. They arrived according to schedule and went through their parts under the direction of Mr. Hal Reid, who, it may be said in passing, made an awful hit with the ladies as master of ceremonies.

Besides the national president and vice-president, some of the prominent ladies who took part were: Mrs. Harriet May Mills, president New York State League; Mrs. Mary Ware Dennett, secretary New York State League; Mrs. Jas. Lees Laidlaw, Mrs. A. C. Hughston, Mrs. Chas. Beard, Miss Eleanor Brynes, Mrs. Raymond Brown, Mrs. Marcia Townsend, Mrs. Frances Maule Bjorkman, Mrs. F. Maule Cooley, Miss Inez Milholland, Miss Anna Maxwell Jones, Miss Ann Forsythe, Miss Mary Keegan, Mrs. L. H. Ozedam.

The picture will be put out as a regular Reliance release in two reels. Besides being shown in the regular picture houses, the various state leagues will use it vigorously in their campaign work, in which no doubt it will be of great service. One of the significant facts in connection with this picture is that some of the ladies who appear in it, at one time were to be classed as antagonistic to the moving picture.

HARRY FURNISS SAILS.

Mr. Harry Furniss, the famous English cartoonist and entertainer, who came to America some six weeks ago to produce a number of photoplays in connection with the Edison Company, sailed on the Lusitania Wednesday morning, May 8th, for London. Mr. Furniss was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Dyer, of the Edison Company. While engaged at the Edison studios, Mr. Furniss became a great favorite with the picture players there employed. His delightful manner endeared him to all with whom he came in contact. Mr. Furniss expressed himself greatly pleased with his first experience as a picture actor, and said that he hoped to appear again in Edison pictures. He was not greatly impressed with the facilities for exhibiting pictures in New York City.

WEST VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of West Virginia, met in Huntington, West Virginia, at the Carnegie Library Hall, at 2 o'clock, May 1, 1912, where they held a convention and transacted a large amount of business.

The meeting was called to order by the State President, M. M. Weir, of the Colonial Hotel, Charleston, W. Va., who introduced the National President, M. A. Neff, who addressed the Convention. Mr. Neff advised the elimination of immoral or suggestive pictures and explained the necessity of more educational pictures and more clean comedy, he dwelt upon the importance of an organization and the co-operation of all Motion Picture Exhibitors. His address was enthusiastically applauded.

In the evening, feature pictures and high-class vaudeville were given to entertain the visiting delegates. On May 2nd, the delegates again met at the Carnegie Library Hall, at eleven o'clock, where they transacted much important business, members were present from all over the State and a large number of new members were taken into the organization. When the Convention met at Huntington, there was only one exhibitor, Mr. E. W. Waugh, who belonged to the League. Now every exhibitor in Huntington is a member of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. They quickly fell in line after meeting the large number of exhibitors present and having the aims and objects of the organization explained to them.

The organization in West Virginia is growing very rapidly. On the evening of May 2nd, the Reliance representative, Mr. Cobb; the Gaumont Company's representative, Mr. Kenny, and Mr. Griffin, who exhibited the Standard machine were present and exhibited a large number of pictures that have not been released as yet.

A large number of letters had been sent out to all the preachers of Huntington, and the teachers, giving them a special invitation to attend the evening entertainment at the Carnegie Hall; the invitation was accepted by many. Mr. Neff addressed the meeting on the future and educational features of Cinematography. It was a splendid entertainment and will have good effect, as many of those who attended the lecture and saw the pictures had never been in a picture show, but became enthusiastic and are now friendly, whereas heretofore they had been doubtful.

Following the entertainment the members of the League and the members of their families met at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where a sumptuous banquet was given. Speeches were made by M. A. Neff, M. M. Weir, L. R. Thomas, E. W. Waugh, A. L. Cottrill, C. A. Johnson, D. B. Hagen, Mr. McCray, and others.

Mr. G. M. Westley was secured to organize the State and he immediately started out, going to Charleston, where he and Mr. Weir secured all the exhibitors in Charleston on Friday.

LEAGUE NOTES.

The State of Ohio is daily taking in new members and in the near future every eligible Motion Picture Exhibitor in the State of Ohio will be in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The next Convention, to be held in Ohio, will be held at Toledo, on the 16th and 17th of July.

A new Local Exhibitors' League was organized at Huntington, W. Va., Monday, May 6th, and the following officers were elected: Messrs. R. H. Karnes, of the Lyric Theater, President; J. A. Burns, Grand Theater, First Vice-President; Mr. Ball, Second Vice-President; C. A. Johnson, "It" Theater, Secretary, and Haskel Atkins, Royal Theater, Treasurer. Mr. A. J. Wellman, of Catlettsburg, Ky., was made an honorary member of the Local. The Local starts out with bright prospects with every exhibitor in Huntington as a member.

The Cincinnati theaters all seem to be doing a good business. M. A. Neff, Chairman of the Committee, elected to write a new code governing picture shows for the City of Cincinnati, reports that the committee will be ready to submit the new code next week.

Orene Parker, of Covington, Ky., will call a meeting of the local exhibitors of Covington and Newport together for the purpose of organizing a local in those two towns.

The report comes from Toledo Local No. 3, that big preparations are being made to entertain the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Ohio, on the 16th and 17th of July, 1912, at their State Convention.

The National Convention, to be held at Chicago, beginning the 13th of next August, will eclipse all previous efforts and it is expected that not less than four or five thousand exhibitors will attend the Convention and preparations are being made accordingly.

Headquarters for the Pennsylvania State Convention, which will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 24th and 25th of June, have been established at the Monongahela House. Mr. T. J. Barbin, Secretary, Millvale, Pa., states that the business men of Pittsburgh are joining in with the Motion Picture Exhibitors to make the Pennsylvania convention a grand success ,and it is claimed that if the Chicago Convention surpasses Pittsburgh in attendance and entertainments, it will have to go some.

WARNING TO THEATER MANAGERS.

Mr. W. J. Gane, manager of Gane's Manhattan Theater, Broadway and Thirty-fifth Street, New York City, wishes to warn all theater managers to look out for a man by the name of Gus Krieger. According to Mr. Gane, he was employed as assistant stage manager and was given a large sum of money on May 1st to deposit in the bank. He left the theater on this errand about 11 o'clock in the morning and has not been seen since. It is believed that he has gone West from New York and may turn up looking for a position. Information regarding him will be appreciated. Mr. Krieger has been in the moving picture business for some time, first with the Cambridge Theater, of Cambridge, Mass., and later as stage manager of the Circle Theater, New York City.

DEFECTIVE CONDENSER ON MARKET.

I am informed that an eastern firm has purchased a large number of condensing lenses from an Ohio manufacturing firm. These lenses—it is stated on good authority—were purchased for the sum of ten cents each and are to be sold for one dollar each. Every exhibitor is notified that these lenses are defective, too much soda having been used in their manufacture. It is claimed that after they have been used a short time, the heat turns them gray, and it is impossible to get a good picture as the light will not go through.

I advise all Motion Picture Exhibitors when buying a lens to secure a guarantee that they will hold their color. This is only one of the many things the exhibitors outside of our organization should know.

should know. M. A. NEFF, Pres.

CINCINNATI DROPS OBNOXIOUS ORDINANCE.

M. A. Neff, President of the Exhibitors' League, writes that through the efforts of the League the law makers of Cincinnati, Ohio, have been induced to drop the proposals of Building Commissioner Rapp to enforce a number of onerous rules upon picture theater managers. One of these required the use of a patented film magazine on all machines. It was demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Common Council that the magazine was not necessary for the safety of patrons of picture theaters and that body decided to drop the entire matter until a proper ordinance could be framed.

FEATURING MISS RUSSELL'S "GLAD RAGS."

Miss Martha Russell, who is once more appearing in Essanay films, is given great opportunity for splendid acting in a new subject just completed entitled "Her Hour of Triumph." The first two films Miss Russell will appear in are booked for early June release and are titled "The Return of William Marr" and "Signal Lights," the latter a thrilling railroad drama. Miss Russell's beautiful and costly wardrobe, one of the finest in the profession, will be greatly in evidence in these productions, and in a number of forthcoming features.

"The Desert Sweetheart," Essanay's splendid Western subject released May 25th, presents G. M. Anderson and Miss Vedah Bertram in the leading roles. The production marks the return of Miss Bertram to pictures after recovering from a serious injury sustained while riding a broncho, and which necessitated several weeks in the hospital.

The Lottery of Love

An Excellent Cin-es Comedy, to be Released May 28, 1912, by George Kleine.

ALL the world loves a lover, but also likes nothing better than to laugh at the misfortunes which befall a bold youth when he attempts to trifle with the usual methods of Dan Cupid.

The story deals with the experiences of Charlie, a supercilious youth, one of those conceited fellows who believes himself to be irresistible among the ladies, and that he has but to express a wish and the fair sex will eagerly obey. Charlie wooes two sisters, Bertha and Florence, but cannot make up his mind which he would prefer to marry. Wishing to gratify his vanity and at the same time break the monotony of life, he decides to trust everything to chance, and utterly careless of consequences, writes a note to each asking her to be his wife.

The girls, who were to be the innocent victims of the scheme, are not long in discovering his duplicity, and cunningly plot to get revenge. They have no difficulty in convincing their maiden aunt Bertha, a frivolous creature, somewhat inexperienced in affairs of the heart, whom they know secretly admires Charlie, that one of the letters is intended for her, and make an appointment for her to meet him in the garden that evening. The clever deceivers then assist Madame Aunty to dress, impressing upon her the necessity of wearing a heavy veil for the occasion.

At the appointed hour the proud lover appears, exulting in the success of his scheme, and eagerly rushes to his supposed sweetheart, whom he sees anxiously awaiting his coming in a secluded arbor in the garden. In the midst of his caresses, he is suddenly astounded by the appearance of the two sisters, followed by the rest of the family, who have been let into the secret, and have come to find out how the courtship is progressing.

The startled swain, hardly believing his eyes, quickly raises his lady's veil, and, horrified at the sight of the "vision" who has been blissfully receiving his embraces, frantically attempts to escape, but, before he has gone far, is seized by a stalwart relative, who insists upon holding him to his promises. Charlie protests at first, but finding that there is no way out of the predicament, meekly submits to the inevitable.

Everything is present which goes to make up a successful comedy production. The humorous situations are admirably handled; the five leading parts being taken by talented actors, who are experienced in comedy, and well know the requirements. Hardly a detail is lacking in bringing the story to a fitting climax, and the fun which is prevalent at all times waxes fast and furious toward the end of the story.

A Visitor from the Orient.

Present Conditions of Moving Picture Industry in China Undergoing Many Changes for the Better —First-Hand Information.

INTERESTING men are usually quiet men. Some interesting men are so quiet that it is necessary to drag the facts out of them, which of course, makes them all the more interesting. We met by chance last week in New York a dark-eyed, medium sized young man whose name is Brodsky—Mr. B. Brodsky. He was buying film in wholesale lots at the time, and attention was attracted first by his card, which read, "Variety Film Exchange Company, Honolulu." As a rule, a visitor from foreign shores is always good for a story of some kind, and Mr. Brodsky proved to be no exception to the rule. Perhaps a long residence among Orientals has had the effect of making him reticent and reserved, in the Oriental way. At any rate, the following facts were elicited from him in a method somewhat resembling cross-examination.

Although only thirty-two years of age, Mr. Brodsky has been around the world several times. He has been wealthy at times, and stranded in foreign lands at other times. He speaks eleven languages, including English, Chinese, Japanese, Russian, Corean, Hebrew, Arabic and Malayan. All of which, in our opinion, is considerable knowledge and experience for a man of his age. For the past ten years Mr. Brodsky has been residing principally in China and Japan. He knows the status of the moving picture business in those countries as well, perhaps, as any man there is, and therefore he became the subject of this article the moment we found him out.

Mr. B. Brodsky—Film Mogul in the Orient.

Live dope on the Chinese situation is always interesting to American moving picture men, and Mr. Brodsky certainly has plenty of it, which he hands out freely for the asking, but for the asking only. He thinks that when the present political disturbances in China finally subside and that great nation has become a well-established republic that China will be a land of great fortune for moving picture men. The Chinese are just beginning to be interested in moving pictures. Of course, the seaport towns in China have been accustomed to moving pictures for some years past, but the vast majority of Chinese people are still in ignorance of the moving picture as we know it in America. In the interior of China the cinematograph is looked upon as an infernal machine. The pictures on the screen to the heathen Chinee are nothing more or less than "spooks," brought there by "devils." All foreigners are "devils" to the Chinaman of the interior. Their ignorance of Occidental customs is beyond belief.

There is coming a great change in the very near future. The Chinese who have been to America and learned its ways and ideas are the men who are putting new life into the Celestial Empire. America to the progressive Chinaman is an ideal. According to Mr. Brodsky, the progressive Chinese admire America above all other lands. The new republic will be patterned as closely as possible after America. Even now, in the seaport towns, an American is more welcome and receives more attention than does any other kind of foreigner. The present president of China is a former American college student and is a great admirer of our land. He is the man who will do much in the next few years toward the enlightenment of China. At present, affairs are rather too unsettled, owing to the revolution, to make it wise for an American to consider entering the moving picture field in China. But when the present disturbances are over, and the republic becomes a well-established institution, there will be fortunes waiting for many Americans in the flowery kingdom. The Chinee, according to Mr. Brodsky and many other travelers is really a big man. Bret Harte has said that "for ways that are dark and for tricks that are vain, there is none that can compare with the Heathen Chinee." But from developments of recent years we fear that Bret Harte must have mistaken the Chinee for a Jap, because most information concerning the Orient points to the fact that the Chinee is absolutely reliable, while the Japanese is a very unsatisfactory person to have business dealings with. Conditions are far from being satisfactory to foreigners desiring to do business in Japan. Already the country is flooded with moving picture shows, but these are operated mostly by natives. The laws of Japan do not allow any foreigners to engage in business in the kingdom in their own right. The business must be owned or controlled by a Jap; or the foreigner must marry a Japanese woman. This, of course, imposes obstacles which business men do not consider justifiable, and therefore they have not been investing. The Japanese idea seems to be to keep all businesses as much as possible under the direct control of the natives; hence it is that other parts of the Orient offer more alluring openings than Japan.

Mr. Brodsky represents the Variety Film Exchange, of San Francisco. The company has offices only in the California city and operates actively in the Orient. At present they have well-established exchanges in Honolulu, Yokohama, Tokio, Vladivostock, Harbin, Shanghai and Hongkong. Shortly after we met him, Mr. Brodsky departed by way of San Francisco for the Orient. After a visit to each of the Variety Film Exchanges, it is his particular object to proceed at once to Manila, Singapore, Java and Calcutta, in which cities he will open branches of the Variety Film Exchange Company.

These Oriental film exchanges are based upon experience of a very novel and sometimes dangerous character, undergone for the most part by Mr. Brodsky himself, who is a native of Odessa, Russia. His first experiences in the Orient were during the Japanese-Russian war as official interpreter for the Russian government. In this connection he learned much of Chinese ways and methods. At the close of the war he went to San Francisco with his savings and was doing a good real estate business when the earthquake put a temporary end to his financial affairs. Out of the chaos of the San Francisco earthquake he emerged with an old Edison Universal moving picture machine and forty or fifty reels of junk film. With these he sailed for the Orient and arrived in the city of Tien Tsin. The moving picture was practically unknown there at that time, and he soon found that in the estimation of the natives he was surely a foreign devil. He tried to give a show, but the natives would not go to it; they were afraid of his machine and his pictures, which to them were ghosts. To give a show he was obliged to actually hire an audience. He employed a couple of hundred natives at the rate of twenty cents per day to act as audience. This audience was to be used as a decoy to bring in others. To allay the general fear and establish confidence he had to explain the entire outfit to his hired audience. He let them examine the machine and the film and the gas outfit, and after much diplomatic perseverance, convinced them that there was no harm about him or his outfit.

He started the show with a Wild West film, which went very smoothly until some cowboys came tearing down the road, shooting pistols. The audience rose en masse and fled for safety, both the paying patrons and the hired ones, who were so afraid that they never came back for their money.

It appears that the Chinese are dreadfully afraid of firearms in the hands of a foreigner. They shoot and kill among themselves, but a foreigner with a pistol in sight is absolutely safe in the face of a thousand hostile Chinamen, in certain parts of China. Their fear of a foreign devil is much the same as the fear of women for rats or mice. In the heathen districts their religion teaches them that to cut off the head of a foreign devil insures an entrance into Heaven. They fear to molest a foreigner while he is awake; but should he fall asleep and the heathen know of it, he would be quickly decapitated. For that reason it is necessary for foreigners who travel inland to go in parties and for some one of the party to be awake and on watch throughout the day or night.

At present in the interior there are no established picture theaters. Exhibitions are given in tents by means of gas, while the natives squat upon the ground. In the coast cities there are separate theaters for the natives and for the whites. The film exchanges are obliged to import a number of educational and high-class reels for the sake of the Occidental residents, but for the most part pictures of rough and strenuous life are the kind of pictures that are in demand in China. Rough-house comedy with plenty of crockery smashed, or physical violence of different kinds are held to be diverting by the Celestials. Cowboy and Indian pictures are in great demand. They are fairly crazy for them, particularly the Essanay and Selig Western pictures; all but those with shooting in them, for, as stated previously, they are dreadfully afraid of firearms even in pictures.

One fallacy concerning the Orient has been settled definitely by the Variety Film Exchange people. They have found out that junk film does not get the money in the Orient. At first they were of the opinion that the Chinese would stand for anything that came along. They bought all the junk that nobody wanted in America and shipped it to China. Readers of the Moving Picture World will recall having read in these columns letters from China complaining of the poor quality of pictures that were sent there. Nobody ever dreamed of sending a new reel to China. It seemed much in the nature of casting pearls before swine. As a consequence the moving picture business in the Orient declined and reached the lowest ebb possible before it was discovered that junk film was the cause of it. The Variety Film Exchange Company then saw the error of its ways and began to buy new film. The wisdom of this movement became apparent at once. Their business took on a new life and began to flourish. They found out that by giving the people the best in the market, China and the Orient could be made to respond as well as any other part of the world. Now the Variety Exchange is buying twenty-eight prints per week, Licensed and Independent. From Honolulu they supply eleven theaters on the island. When the reels have been rented to all houses supplied from one exchange, they are sent to the other branches in exchange for an equal amount in return.

The Variety Film Exchange also supplies the American government with pictures to entertain the men on the battleships between large ports. For instance, a battleship will take on forty or fifty reels at Yokohama and they will be delivered at another port where the company has a branch. In this way they get free transportation for reels, and rental at the same time.

While in New York Mr. Brodsky placed many orders for film and machinery. One of his biggest orders was the placing of a contract for twelve 8-horsepower electric light plants with the Detroit Engine Works, all to be shipped to cities in China where there is no electric light. He also bought many feature films, among which were "The Odyssey," "Life of Buffalo Bill," Dante's "Inferno," etc. H. F. H.

ANOTHER MONTGOMERY HOUSE.

Mr. F. T. Montgomery writes that his company is preparing to open a new house in Columbia, S. C., where it already has a very successful theater. The Montgomery Amusement Company now has nine picture theaters and three billiard parlors, the latter being a sort of "filler" to enable the company to utilize vacant space in buildings leased by it which would otherwise be a total loss. Mr. Montgomery adds that he is on the lookout for good talent in the line of singers and musicians. Exceptionally clever people will get a hearing.

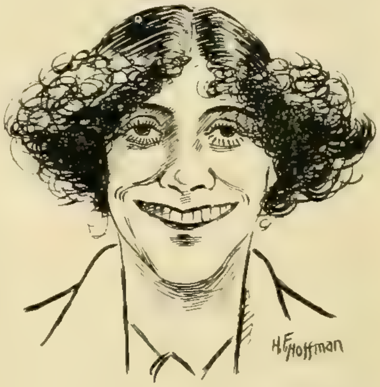
Florence Turner Comes Back.

The Vitagraph Girl, after a seven-months' rest, reports for duty—Ready, willing and able.

WELL—she's back on the job. "Flo" Turner, at the Vitagraph Studio. We "seen" her there ourself, only the other day. She looks like the Florence Turner of old. Which is very different from the way she looked when last seen hereabouts in autumn past. At that last appearance she was sitting in an automobile in the Vitagraph yard. The car was surrounded by seventy-five or a hundred big, husky men. They were cheering and making a lot of noise about her, much in the same manner that soldiers sometimes hail their queen. Those men were the Boston exhibitors who were visiting the plant. They would have been very much disappointed if they had not seen her. But Miss Turner was a sick girl that day. When she spoke to the men with her little weak voice, they had to strain to catch her words. Rather than disappoint them she had risen from a sick-bed. That incident showed what a game one she is, and the exhibitors realized and appreciated it.

For four years, steadily, she had shouldered the burden of artistic work in a business that was growing by leaps and bounds. In the first years she responded to every call for a picture like a fireman going to a fire. She worked like a horse, to put it forcibly though inelegantly. Days, nights, Sundays, holidays and all. There was no part too low nor any part too high for her to tackle. Like a prize-ring champion, she met all comers and scored a knock-out every time. Everybody who has been in the moving picture business for any length of time, knows her great value to the Vitagraph Company, and to moving pictures. Five years ago she applied at the Flatbush picture factory as a rank outsider, looking for an engagement. She was taken on, and rose to the top by her own merits. She worked very hard. Too hard. Even a steam engine will wear out in four years, and that's made of iron and steel. What a wonder it is then that a small half-girl, half-woman, could keep up such a gait as long as four years before something gave way.



Miss Turner insisted on having her smile sketched.

Miss Turner has been recuperating out in California. For seven months she hasn't done a tap. Taking the "rest cure," as it were. Since last fall she has been living on McAllister's ranch, situated in Topanga Cañon. Two miles to the nearest house, and twenty miles to the nearest town. All this time she has been on the Vitagraph pay-roll. The Vitagraph people are very fond of Florence Turner, and she is very grateful to them. In fact it seems to be a great big case of mutual admiration all around. With such a chance to get well, and such a place to get well in, our readers will not be greatly surprised to learn that Miss Turner has returned in apple pie condition.

Truly a remarkable creature, this Turner girl. She is a lawless individual, so far as the laws of stagecraft are concerned. Hers is the natural school that meets emergencies on the spot. The kind that does things first and thinks about them afterward. Any system is O.K. if it works out all right. The reader will understand then, when it is said that she is very much the same out of a picture as she is in one. There isn't a trace of affectation about her, nor the slightest indication of a "swelled head." To give an example of her lack of conceit, she insisted on having her smile sketched with her features exaggerated. The sketch was made, and in publishing it we are violating one of the unwritten laws of journalism, which says, "never caricature a woman." But, as stated before, Miss Turner is lawless, so far as the laws of arts or crafts are concerned. And when she insists—reader, try and remember her in some picture, "insisting," without the aid of spoken words, and then figure how long you could resist, if she should insist—with words.

No. She isn't a bit haughty. She is just as willing to play a slavey as she would be to portray a queen. If you want to know how much it is possible for a woman's nose to warp, just ask the average "leading lady" to play a slavey. But with "Flo" Turner it's different. She's a real film actor. And such a slavey she makes! Such a homely face on a pretty girl you would hardly think possible. The greater part of her work has been purely dramatic, often the heaviest kind, but she is at heart a comedienne and would rather do comedy any time than drama.

She said the other day: "Make a funny picture of me. Make me just as homely as you can. I've often wanted photographers to take me smiling, but they take so long to get ready that the smile comes off. You know I love caricature. The distortion of the human face is one of the most interesting studies to me. Whenever I sit for a photo they make me look so serious—as though I had lost my last friend."

In conclusion, take it from your Uncle Dudley that any photographer or caricaturist who can successfully put on paper the thousand fleeting expressions on Miss Turner's face is surely a "pippin." In fact, his fortune is made.

H. F. HOFFMAN.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

YOU AND COLUMBUS.

SEVERAL exhibitors have asked how to put on the Selig Columbus, their requests coming rather late for those who will use first run. The Selig publicity department announces a full complement of paper, cuts, and other press matter and this end will care for itself if the exhibitor will get in touch with the company. The Spanish colors, yellow and red, will lend themselves admirably to a decorative scheme, and any special advertising should be done in the same colors, a red ink on yellow paper, but be certain to get the right shades.

To interest the school teachers and pupils, have a prize contest for the best essay on Columbus, offering one prize of tickets for each grade and letting the various schools compete for the same prize that the interest may be heightened by the rivalry between the schools. Let each teacher select the two best compositions from her class and if possible have some well known educator or minister make the final award. Give a special matinee for the schools. If there is a local ordinance against the admission of children unattended, perhaps you can arrange with the police authorities to waive the observance of the ordinance for this occasion. If they do, try and have one or more police matrons as your guests as well as the school teachers.

There is little that can be done in the way of street advertising without a rather more elaborate investment than the conditions will warrant, boards and perhaps a wagon with an eight-sheet posted on each side being about all that can be done without an outlay for costumes.

That Kalem Clock.

The Kalem Company is sending out a novel piece of advertising matter in the form of a poster which shows a clock face on the Kalem sunburst trade mark. Stiff paper hands provided and above the clock is the legend "Showing at"; the hour when the film will next be shown being marked by the movable hands. The sheet is printed for "The Fighting Dervishes," and strips are provided for "Dust of the Desert" and "The Drummer Girl of Vicksburg." Other strips will be issued as occasion demands and the careful exhibitor will want to make his poster permanent. It may be mounted on cloth, put on a card or on a board. The latter is so much more serviceable than the others that the slight expense involved will more than be returned in the possession of a permanently useful piece of advertising.

To mount on a board, get a piece of compo-board or pine or maple. If matched boards are used putty the cracks to get a smooth surface. Put the poster down with flour paste, first removing the hands of the clock. Use a small brush to get the sheet down smooth. When perfectly dry varnish with dammar or other colorless varnish.

Get the tinsmith to cut out a pair of metal hands. Brass is to be preferred, but tin will do. At a pinch get the printer to let you have some one point brass rule. It should cost about a quarter. With a pair of tinner's snips you can trim the rule to shape yourself. Drill a quarter-inch hole in the base of the hands and also in the board through the center of the clock face, the proper point being already marked by the hole left through the removal of the present brass button. With a 3-16-inch brass bolt of proper length and provided with two washers and a winged nut in place of the usual square nut, you can change the hands almost instantly by loosening the nut very slightly, moving the hands and tightening the nut again, when the hands will be held firmly in any position.

For a Stretcher.

If it is desired to mount it on a stretcher, make a frame of light stuff and stretch over this some unbleached muslin. Apply paste liberally and brush down the sheet, replacing the hands when the paper has dried and been varnished. By running a bar across the back of the stretcher at the point where the center of the clock comes, it will be found possible to employ the nut and bolt here. It is best to have the nut come to the face of the clock, and by recessing the back of the board for the washer and head of the bolt it will lie flat against the wall.

This is not as difficult as it sounds and it will be found well worth the trouble. Even where you run but one or two shows an evening it forms a good advertisement and where the performance is continuous the clock is invaluable.

What Wesley Says.

Wesley, of Gardner, Mass., says:

> The Civics Department of the Woman's Club only had to announce that they were going to have a clean-up campaign during the month of April, in Gardner, when Manager Wesley became interested. He distributed 4,000 booklets, advising residents to clean up their yards, and explaining how contagious diseases were carried by flies, bred in filth. Next, he ran Pathe's "Fly Pest" reel and later "The Awakening of John Bond," both these subjects being in keeping with the idea. Beside this he had several comedy slides made which read "Swat the Fly," "Kill Flies and Save Lives," etc., which were thrown on the screen at each performance. Also run an ad in the daily paper reading "That a Fly had escaped from the Gardner Theater during the past week, if you see it kill it quick." Used a reader offering four tickets for every two hundred dead flies brought to the box office, and gave free to the ladies attending the matinees 1,600 fly-swatters, attached to each was a card reading "Wesley Says So." Aside from making lots of friends and arousing interest it increased business.

Make It Talk.

This is good work, but we think that fly spanker would have made even more talk had it born the legend "Swat the Flies: 'Wesley Says So.'" That catchline has gained more than local note and it is almost always possible to work it in conjunction with some line that will give it added force.

Wesley also says that he is giving out sachet envelopes. They are common drug envelopes well pasted down. They measure $2\frac{1}{4}$ by $3\frac{1}{2}$, and bear the line, "A lasting reminder of the Gardner Theater," a few words of advertising and the inevitable "Wesley Says So." They are of a size to go in the vest pocket or a woman's pocketbook, and they will be kept by practically all who receive them.

Sachet powder at forty cents an ounce sounds formidable, but if you get the envelopes printed up and put in each half a teaspoonful of powdered orris you will find the cost trifling and the scent as good as most violet sachets, of which this is generally the base. Get it from the wholesale drug house and you'll save even more.

Back Stage Advertising.

Good, But Why—?

If vaudeville has to be used this sort of poster will hold the player in check if he knows it will be enforced, but in many New York houses, where similar signs are displayed, the rule is not enforced. Take the suggestiveness from many cheap vaudeville acts and nothing remains. Since there seems to be a demand for vaudeville in some places we are reprinting this sign because it is the best we have seen for clean cut talk and we have seen more than a few.

Cinderella With a Lecture.

The Poincianna Theater, Tampa, Fla., sends a four-page folder of Cinderella that looks very attractive in its display though it offers nothing particularly new in the phrasing. But at the bottom of the third page there come the lines "As this beautiful scene unfolds on the screen, a discourse on this popular fairy story will be given by Miss Leela Maney, the well-known entertainer of children.

Were anything needed to complete the children's delight in the Selig release we think it is a running comment on the film by someone used to telling stories to the Kiddies.

The Poincianna appeals to a fine clientele and the printing is such as to reach that class; clean-cut, sober and refined. It would not work in all sections, but it is characteristic of the house.

Bad Work.

From Washington comes an advertisement of the Alhambra Theater in that city. It was clipped from the Sunday Herald. The style is an attempt at the familiar, chatty Howard ads, but it would be poor business even for Kernan's. This suggestive sort of stuff has no place in motion picture advertising, and it is to be regretted that any exhibitor is so lost to the dignity of his business that he frames his advertising to appeal to the residents between Pennsylvania Avenue and the Mall. It was this sort of stuff that first created the impression that all photoplays were vulgar and made it hard work for the careful men who came later to live down the prejudice. Such advertising hurts every house in Washington, and the other exhibitors should make a concerted protest to the management of this theater. It may sound humorous to some few persons with a perverted sense of humor, but it should not be permitted. Make advertising read cleverly, but vulgarity is not cleverness.

The Q Again.

The Q Amusement Company, Los Angeles, sends in a four-page folder of the Garrick. Outside is merely the large Q and the line "Inside information." Page 2 gives this array of Indisputable Facts.

1. EDGAR L. POMEROY, without a Peer as a Motion Picture Player and a High-class Orchestra.
2. A Bright, Snappy Show.
3. PAUL C. WINTERS, our expert Electrician, is responsible for the clear, bright, steady pictures that are making "Q" Shows famous. We pay him a big salary, and he gets results.
4. One of the Classiest Theaters in America.
5. Courteous treatment is a hobby of the "Q" management and prevails at all times.
6. Prices within the reach of all—10c, 15c, Loges 20c.

Credit Where Due.

We fancy that fact three will be approved by Mr. Richardson, who is keen in his contention that the operator should be credited. We share this opinion. If you have an operator worth bragging about, by all means brag for your own sake. If you have a good man alongside the projection machine make that fact known. It not alone argues for a good show, but if some unavoidable accident happens (and the avoidable will not happen with a good man), the general knowledge that there is a reliable man at his post will do much to allay the panic that is more to be feared than the actual danger of fire.

House to House, or What?

The company explains that they have distributed 2,000 of the folders, through a local distributing company, and asks an opinion of this form of advertising.

The usefulness of house to house distribution depends on the manner in which it is done and the temper of the town. In some sections the use of hand distributed circulars is resented by householders, even when reliable men are employed who do not throw them into yards and on the street, but where there are mail boxes the method has certain advantages of economy, though it is not always that the circulars reach those for whom they are intended. If a servant is employed the servant gets the circular and the householders never see it. Certain sections of California report very favorable results from this method and we do not see that conditions should be different in Los Angeles. We do not believe that the advantages of a mail distribution are sufficiently marked to return the cost of stamps and envelopes unless appeal is made only to the exclusive.

In any case we advise dating the list of releases instead of the too common "This Week," which may not be read until next week.

Wants It Handed to Him.

A. W. Ballenger, of Shelby, Neb., sends in a four-pager and writes:

> Enclosed herewith my first attempt at getting out anything in the way of advertising for a feature program. I notice the way that you hand it to the other boys on their programs and mine will need a whole lot of the same kind of criticism, I suppose. This is a small place of about five hundred people. I run every night and depend largely for support on the out-of-town trade. I take these programs throughout the country and see that they get in every home. It pays to get after the business and pound the public on the back until they are willing to give up that dime and become a regular picture fan. Your department on advertising for exhibitors is sure a help. Best wishes for it, and keep the good work up.

Mr. Ballenger faces a rather unusual condition and, as he says, he must go after business. He has the knack of writing convincing stuff, no fanciful, polished phrases that mean nothing in particular, but straightforward, earnest talk to the man whose ten cents he wants. That's more than half the battle. Of the two we would rather have a convincing folder than a pretty one.

Matters of Display.

But Mr. Ballenger should get in conference with his printer. Men who run printing shops in towns of 500 seldom keep much type and they need to be kept up to the mark. The front page has five kinds of type for eighteen words. Some of this is Old English, some a script, and two a shaded letter that do not match. In the main display there are but two lines with two words each, and a bleak expanse of white space on either side. The highest type seems to be a small twenty-four point shaded letter. The title, Jollo, is only a five-letter word and should have been set in an "extended" type of a size to have taken it well across the four-and-a-half-inch space. The title of the attraction, "Cinderella," should also have been set in a heavy black face, instead of eighteen-point shaded, and these two lines should have dominated the front page, "Cinderella—Jollo." That tells the story. As it is nothing stands up and the date takes four lines in Old English to one line for the name of the theater. The date should have been set in some clear-faced ten-point, then the name of the theater, the town; then "One night only," and the date again, with the under box for the name of the star.

Better Inside.

The inside pages are better with a twelve-point body type and ten and twelve-point full face for headings. The text is interesting and has a pull, and we like the line:

> And the best part of the whole show is that CINDERELLA IS A PICTURE TAKING UP THREE REELS. A whole show in itself. A whole evening's entertainment for you and all your folks.

"You and all your folks" sounds a little homely, but it is just the sort of appeal to make a rural patronage. If Mr. Ballenger can get the printer to come up to his own work he should pull even more, but he should have a good and characteristic letter for the name of the house if he has to buy the type himself and loan it to the printer. If he desires we will suggest fonts and prices if he will send a return envelope. The prices are standard the country over.

Might Be Better.

A Gem Theater, somewhere in Iowa, sends out a small one-sheet announcing the completion of its first half year. The envelope was destroyed before we noted the lack of the name of the town on the sheet. It is not the only omission. The only arguments are "The prettiest theater in all Iowa" and "Exclusive motion pictures," and "High Grade Vaudeville," the latter to each side of a cut of the house, and the first line below the cut. At the top is the line: "First semi-annual."

A bill like this means very little. It could have been made to say something. There is no particular appeal in "Exclusive Motion Pictures." "The Very Cream of the Licensed Product," "The Six Best Pictures the Independents Make" would be a little better. Unless you have something to say don't spend money and say nothing. If you've completed your first six months explain that you've been there that long because you've delivered the goods. Say something that will make people want to go to your house. Put a kick in every line.

Yellow, But Not Yellow.

The Isis Theater, Houston, Texas, sends in its souvenir of its opening, April 18th. The souvenir is an eight-page pamphlet on light yellow laid paper with a deeper yellow fancy border with the name of the house let in on each side. The printing is in brown. The cover is heavier stock in a deeper shade done in brown and red, very little of the latter being used, just the name of the house and some light rule work inside a swastika border. The reading matter is straight from the shoulder. The house is a part of the Fichtenberg Enterprises, and there are pictures of the head of the company, the general manager and the resident manager. There is a little talk about the company and a lot about the policy and equipment of the house. There is a page given the big pipe organ and the man who will play it, and a full announcement of the daily program with straight pictures from 10 to 2 at five cents, pictures and music later at double that price.

We can't see how the theater could have become better acquainted with its patrons at a single move than through the medium of such a booklet. The cuts could have been better made, but apart from this there is small room for comment. We should like to see some of their regular advertising if they keep it up to the standard they set themselves.

What Did You Do?

What did you do with your Titanic specials? Did you use the film to not only attract business, but hold it, or did you circus it so that you offended good taste?

We saw a lot of announcements, crude, cruel, and misleading, that certainly did not make for credit. If you made this same mistake profit by your lesson.

Remember that it's not the dime you get to-day. It's the dime you get every week that counts in the long run.

THE DARE-DEVIL COMEDIANS.

The Lubin stock company just returned from Jacksonville, Fla., among other anecdotes, have a good joke on two of the troupe who like to hear themselves spoken of as "dare-devils." Walter Stull often says, "I dare all that man dare, he who dares more is no man." He claims to be willing on any emergency to face a wolf or wild cat, rescue a babe from the angry deep or take any risk where prowess is required. Geo. Roehm's hardihood is even more thrilling, he will (in the photoplays) leap from the window of a ten-story skyscraper, roll down the side of a mountain or loop the loop in a bi-plane. So many of these thrillers occur in the moving pictures that Roehm is always accompanied with a dummy to take his place should he by chance be killed. One day at Jacksonville several of the company visited a reptile farm and Mae Hotely dropped her handbag in the snake pit. The pit was alive with the squirming reptiles among which was two Gila monsters, Stull and Roehm were called upon to recover the bag, they quickly got busy throwing aside their hats and coats, each looked at the other with a kind of Alphonse and Gaston expression, the situation was tense for a few seconds, then they remembered that whiskey was the antidote for snake bites and rushed to the "German Village" thinking that it was also a preventative. Five minutes passed and they had not returned. Miss Hotely looked and waited in vain, presently she noticed that a bystander had a hooked walking cane. She hastily borrowed it and when the dare-devils returned, the bag had already been rescued by the fair owner, and it was noticed that the snakes had not even bitten the cane.

PICTURE HOUSE DOING GOOD BUSINESS.

The Royal Theater, Ardmore, Okla., under the management of the owners, Messrs. Lowenstein Brothers, is reported to have been doing excellent business since the opening on February 3rd, this year. It is said that a prettier house cannot be found in the State of Oklahoma and that it has received a very befitting name.

The exterior is finished in white, which is very pleasing to the eye. The interior is finished in dark red, with panels of green, which are artistically arranged. The theater is well lighted whether or not a picture is being projected. A six-piece orchestra and a set of Deagan bells has been installed, the mellow chimes of which are very pleasing. Opera chairs of the latest model have been installed. The operator's booth is of fireproof material and the pictures are projected by a Motiograph machine. Licensed films are used.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

CONDUCTED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Come On In, But—

EARLY in the history of this department we explained that it was being conducted for all photoplaywrights and that we wanted all to come on in. A lot did, but a surprising majority of the comers were the disgruntled. We have published a lot of these letters because we wanted the manufacturers to get a clear idea of some of the abuses of the business, but a long succession of complaining letters has grown tiresome, and we beg leave to amend.

COME ON IN AND BE WELCOME, BUT PLEASE COME SMILING.

We want this page to be representative of the real photoplaywright, and the real photoplaywright does not make an outcry every time his toe is stubbed. If you have something to say, say it, if you think it will prove helpful to others, and get your reward in the thanks of others and the advice they, in turn, pass along, but if you merely have a grievance nurse it in secret.

We think the mental attitude of the complainants is clearly shown in a recent incident. A self-styled photoplaywright sent us a letter. We do not know what was in it because he wrote in lead pencil, but we do remember that there was two cents to pay the post office before we would make that interesting discovery.

Ten days later the same person sent another publication about four ounces of exhibits to back up a complaint, the complaint being that sometimes he got no explanation of why his story was refused. And among these exhibits was one that showed a two-cent due stamp, where the Lubin company had already supplied two cents to get the script out of the office. And to cap the climax he asked the return of this mass of matter without even a return envelope. It was all right to send out underpaid letters. It was all right to leave it to the manufacturers to send back the stories four and even six at a time, but when he was asked to pay two cents and share a company's expense, he got all wrought up.

He probably did not know that the complaint would come to this writer in the usual course of business, nor could he know that a communication to a third publication is also in this writer's hands, but the three, taken in conjunction, prove him a person treated with far greater courtesy than his accomplishments deserve.

Another writer, in a greater spirit of courtesy, complimented us on our "spirited defense of the manufacturers." We are not defending the manufacturing companies, because we do not believe that the companies need defense. The photoplay business is comparatively new, and the system that makes the director the court of last resort, is wholly wrong and responsible for many grievous errors, but as a writer and editor of twenty-one years' experience, we contend that the average studio shows more courtesy than the average magazine office.

Come on in and be welcome, but please come smiling.

More Market Tips.

Again we are indebted to Karl R. Coolidge, of Los Angeles, for tips on the Western Market. Many systematic writers will share our personal obligation to Mr. Coolidge for his courtesy. Here is what he writes:

> Los Angeles, California, April 25, 1912.
> The Imp Company's address is now Brooklyn Heights, Los Angeles, Cal., and they are in immediate need of western, mining, prospecting and dramatic photoplays.
> The United States Company has gone out of business.
>
> The Fox Company has suspended operations, and writers should wait until further notice before submitting.
> The Baer Company has changed its name to the Isis, and is at work.
> The Selig Company, Allesandro Street, Los Angeles, uses every class of photoplays. It is not generally know that the Selig Company has a lease on all the missions of California, with, I think, the exception of San Luis Rey at San Diego. Some good mission stories would no doubt be well received here.
> The Globe Moving Picture Co., Santa Monica, Cal., is a new company, which will pay particular attention to travel scenes of an educational nature, and they are planning to leave shortly on an expedition around the world.
> The Pathe Freres, Allesandro Street, Los Angeles, now has an editor, but they buy very little outside stuff.
> The Bison Co., Allesandro Street, Los Angeles, wants good Indian and Western photoplays, which will go into two reels, and no doubt they would use three reels if the story warranted it.
> The Nestor Company, Sunset Boulevard and Gower Street, Hollywood, Cal., is now in the market for Westerns, and they are planning to make three or four a week.
> The Vitagraph Company is located at Santa Monica, Cal., and are in line for high-class Westerns.
> Kalem Companies are at Santa Monica and Glendale, Cal., the former making Westerns and the latter Spanish and others.—(Scripts to New York Office Editor.)
> I concur with you in using the name "photoplay" instead of scenario," but it is "up to" the photoplaywrights to make the change by usage. Why not start a movement to have writers stipulate on their photoplays that they are offered on consideration that their name must be used on the screen? Unfortunately, such a move would conflict with the many whose bare ideas are purchased by the manufacturers, and to whom such credit would be false.

Where authors are sufficiently well established to make the demand we believe that the name is granted without the demand and many novices would spoil their chances of a sale if they issued stipulations.

It is less than three years ago that the names of players was a trade secret. If this writer was not mistaken he was the first to print the name of Miss Florence Turner in the Vitagraph Bulletin, and it was as the name of a character and not a player at that.

The player's name has become a trade asset to all save the Biograph, and, in a lesser degree, Pathe Freres. The author's name will soon be given the same general recognition. We can afford to wait patiently for that time.

That Prize Contest.

Some weeks ago we offered a prize for the largest list of duplications of incidents in a synopsis offered. It wasn't much of a prize, but even at that the student of photoplay would have found it worth while to have remembered. The only decent sized list comes from Leon M. Goetzman, of Minneapolis, who sends in quite a list of titles, only one of which contained the essential of being a duplication, that being Lubin's "The Substitute," in which a telegraph operator cuts in on a line by climbing a pole. The incidents were used several times, but apparently the photoplaywrights do not read the" Stories of the Films" and keep posted.

The winner is James M. Bruce, of Chicago.

Well, Well!

Now comes "Spectator," in the "Dramatic Mirror," to say that Charles Gaskill objects to photoplay as well as scenario. We accepted with enthusiasm Spectator's second of the Gaskill motion that scenario be done away with and now listen to the Gaskill person in reply. After quoting from this column, Spectator adds:

> Pausing only to ask Friend Epes how he would write a bust picture anyhow? (interscribe is defined in the "Standard Dictionary," "to write between") we may now quote again from Mr. Gaskill in reply:
> The very reason that Mr. Sargent urges in favor of "leader" is my own reason for its rejection—namely, its specific quality; which is to say that it means something specifically different from the term necessary in the motion picture. As Mr. Sargent and you and I know, having read all about those things many years ago when we played marbles, there are, generally speaking, only two sorts of words, those that are generic and those that are specific The generic word covers a multitude of matter The word travel is a generic word; we may travel by boat, train or leg; but boat, train and leg, as here used, are specified words. * * * Sub-title, caption, leader, and heading are absolutely specific words; they mean only one thing, or possibly when strained, they can be made to mean almost anything—but very badly; on the contrary, the word interscript is a generic word, which means precisely what all of these words mean separately or together. * * * It seems very clear that the word needed in the mechanics of our art is one that covers all writing, phrases, explanations, interpolations that may be written in in the pictures

Pausing only to explain to "Dear Spec" that he will find that the way to write a bust picture is to write it: Bust—Locket containing Jane's picture—we would speak with Mr. Gaskill. Mr. Gaskill writes more than he says, which is another way of saying that he speaks without saying anything. "Leader" is just as specific as "boat," "train" or "leg," when it is understood what is meant. "Inscript" or "interscript" is vague and unsatisfactory, even when backed up by the Standard dictionary. Mr. Gaskill is better as a smasher of phonograph records than as a smasher of language. If he doesn't like leader he doesn't have to use it in Vitagraph scripts, but if he must have something else we would suggest "insert" for all matter inserted in the film. Anything inserted in the film is written between the scenes and it does not matter whether it is a leader, a bust, a letter or anything else.

We fail to see that any man who refers to photoplay as a "hybrid combination," an "unholy union," and wants something "more flexible," needs other than a new and commonsense perspective. A photoplay is a photographed play or a play to be photographed, hence photoplay, photoplaywright, photoplayhouse, photoplayer, photodrama, photofarce, photocomedy, phototragedy, and other combinations that should be flexible enough even for Mr. Gaskill.

Let's make it photoplay in spite of Mr. Gaskill, and stick to it in our writings and our speech.

In the same connection, Spectator writes:

> One gentleman, for whose opinion The Spectator has the highest respect, looked on the whole discussion as a waste of time and good white paper. "What does it matter," he asked, "whether the inserted words in a motion picture film be called leaders or captions or sub-titles, so long as those who make the picture know what is meant?" The suggestion of interscript or interscription as a proper substitute, he thought particularly frivolous, and he yawned when he said it.

The gentleman should not have yawned. It has been shown that the use of "scenario" has worked harm. Let's get the terminology right.

And if Mr. Gaskill read all these things "when we played marbles," he is vastly younger than this writer, and, we think, Spectator. Perhaps that is why.

Just Wants to Know.

Here is a very characteristic letter from an inquirer who says:

> I have been reading your page in the Moving Picture World and have come to the conclusion that there is no chance for an amateur writer whatever.
> Do you know why so many companies send these scripts back as unavailable or if there are any companies at all that are considering scripts?

We differ with the writer. There is a chance—all sorts of chances—for the amateur. That's how the professional starts. We daresay that Shakespeare wrote some very poor stuff before he came to production, and fifteen years ago we used to send back magazine stuff to authors who to-day get dollars where they were then getting dimes. Every successful author has been an amateur at some time and instead of trying to show the amateur photoplaywright that he has no place, we have been trying to show him that he will stop asking if all men are thieves and buy a few two-cent stamps to get his stories back with, he stands a chance.

Photoplaywriting is at once the simplest and the hardest branch of the writing game, simple because literary skill and finish are not required and difficult because the very simplicity of treatment requires that the treatment be correct

The mere fact that you are an amateur will not hurt your chances. We know a man who probably would not know a spelling book if he saw one, but he knows a good situation, when he thinks of one, and he thinks them up instead of trying to rewrite the work of some one else. He has a sense of the dramatic that atones for his spelling, and roughly he has an idea of technical treatment, not a very complete one, but sufficient to enable him to get his idea over to the editor and producer in such a shape that the possibilities are apparent

He could not even write a dialect story for a mail order magazine when it comes to literary style, but he can put on paper the basis of a photoplay that can be made à good story by any careful director, and does better work in this line than others whose stories are all right, but whose photoplays are lacking in dramatic quality.

But the amateur who thinks more of probable thefts than of the development of his theme, who thinks that anything he writes must be good because he wrote it, and who is perpetually complaining that he gets his splendid plays back while producers habitually present the inferior work of others is going to be an amateur as long as he feels that way about it.

The amateur will succeed who devotes his intelligence and energies to getting out of the amateur classification. He will study photoplays on the screen. The faults will not remind him of how much superior his own work is. They will serve as warnings against the offense in his own work. The merits will not suggest that they must have been taken from his script, but will serve to raise his personal standard.

He will not "make a photoplay" out of every suggestion that comes into his head nor will he merely "dash off" full reel dramas in a couple of hours. Instead he will work to perfect himself in his profession. He will profit by study. If he thinks his work is being stolen, he will send his scripts elsewhere and he will get ahead

He will find presently that he is selling more stuff, that he has fewer returns, and then he will discover that he can drive his Pegasus tandem and write fiction stories as well as photoplays Nothing is more valuable as a training for short-story writing than the condensation and orderly arrangement of photoplay.

We deny that there is "no chance for the amateur writer whatever" To the contrary we contend that the photoplay field is the outlet for the vivid imagination not accompanied by literary skill, and the stepping stone to a broader field for those who can express their thoughts in fluent phrase. It is because of our belief that this department was inaugurated for the photoplaywright: amateur and professional. There are less than fifty purely professional photoplaywrights. It would be absurd to maintain these pages for the few We make our appeal to the novice—to the amateur, if you prefer—and it is apparent that our circle grows each week, and we feel that we are helping the writers. But we cannot help those who feel that no photoplays are bought because the complainant's own scripts are so constantly returned. Until you feel that perhaps there is some other reason; until you realize that there may be something wrong with your own scripts, and not the market, we cannot assist you. When you do wake up you will find helpful suggestions each week, the experiences of others, the stories of the films and a question box where your personal difficulties will be answered without charge.

Mr. Hall Agrees.

Emmett Campbell writes in much the same strain as we have written, regarding film credit for stories. Mr. Hall seems to think that it will come as a matter of course and, while desirable, is not worth the agitation given. As Mr. Hall has probably written as many big stories as any of the other leaders, such as Louis Reeves Harrison, William H. Kitchell, Bannister Merwin and Captain Kiener, his opinion is of weight. He writes:

> I quite agree with William H. Kitchell that while film-credit for authorship is, to a degree, gratifying, it is of relatively small value to the author, as compared to that which would accrue from credit in advertisements and announcements of the release. However, with Edison setting the excellent example, it is only a question of time, and not a great while at that, before proper credit will be universally given, both on screen and in announcements, the second step being too logically obvious—admitting that screen credit is proper and desirable—to admit of much counter argument. The form of wording seems to me not material, but the use of the word "scenario," or any substitute, appears superfluous; "By ——" being adequate. The Kalem practice of giving the name of the producing director is most commendable.
> Meanwhile, the World has an opportunity for further demonstration of its policy of encouraging and developing the art of the photoplaywright by using the name of the author in the "Comments on the Films," when the name appears on the screen A book review or dramatic criticism of a stage play would be regarded as most incomplete if the name of the author should be omitted, and if it is worth while to use the photoplaywright's name on the film, it is surely worthy of inclusion in any comments. A clear distinction, so far as possible in the limited space allowable to each release, should be made in the criticism of story and production, unless both are to be condemned or commended. "Plot good; production poor," or some similar expression might make for justice at times, as would "Excellent production of poor story" in a number of instances.

Looking at the matter in a broader view than Mr. Hall, we are still in favor of the William Lord Wright formula, which gives credit to the author, the editor, and the producer. Each is entitled to his credit, the author for the basic idea, the editor for the development, when development is necessary, and the producer, when he intelligently interprets the ideas of author and editor.

Mr. Hall's suggestion regarding credit in the reviews is respectfully referred to our confreres who have to suffer two acts of poor vaudeville for every reel they see.

A Card Catalogue Technique.

We are indebted to the Rev. F. Boudinot Stockton for a suggestion for a card catalogue "book" on writing the photoplay that other careful students of photoplaywriting may desire to adopt. Dr. Stockton employs a system of tabulation that is all right for a man who has so many sorts of card systems that he has to move his desk out into the hall to make room for them, but building up on his idea, we offer his plan and a scheme for classification more suited to the needs of the non-professional. He writes: "The advantages of the scheme are that it is simple in construction, can easily be modified by each individual user to suit his own idiosyncracies and methods of working and at the same time enables him to keep his information on the subject up to date and in such a form that he can refer readily and quickly to any particular point. After the foundation has been laid, additional rules, hints, criticisms, etc., that come from experience, study or the suggestions of others are simply put on separate cards and filed under their proper head or subject.

For a foundation I took your "Technique of the Photoplay" and cutting it up, item by item, pasted each item on a separate card. (The cards used are the ordinary 3 x 5 library catalog size) Sometimes two or three paragraphs went on one card, sometimes only one paragraph, at other times it took several cards to contain one item. Thus the first three paragraphs of chapter one are a definition of the photoplay. This went on one card. Paragraph four about the conditions under which photoplaywrights worked on another card. The sample photoplay pages 13 to 16, took several cards which were numbered consecutively 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., and each card except the last one marked "Continued on next card." In pasting items on the cards I left a space of ¾ of an inch from the top for writing in the title. If the cards are ruled, paste up below the heavy red or blue top line, leaving the space above free. Having gotten technique on the cards, I grouped them according to the subject classification and separated these groups by guide cards"

Dr. Stockton uses the decimal system, but for general practise we would suggest guide cards of two colors, one for general sub-divisions or chapters and the other for the sub-classifications. For general use we would suggest these headings and sub-titles, the numbered titles being the chapter headings, the letter titles being the sub-divisions of these chapters:

(1) Photoplay (a) Its form. (b) How written. (c) The cast. (d) Synopsis (e) Action. (2) Comedy. (a) Farce. (b) Light comedy. (c) Comedy drama (d) Developing. (3) Drama. (a) Tragedy. (b) Drama. (c) Melodrama. (d) Developing. (4)—Historical. (a) What to write. (b) How (5) Spectacle (6)—Making (a) The studio. (b) Reading. (c) Revising (d) Casting. (e) Producing. (f) Limitations (7) Plots. (a) Theme (b) Development (c) Revision. (8) Inserts. (a) Leaders. (b) Letters (c) Busts. (9) Tricks (a) Visions. (b) Rissolves (c) Stops. (d) Miscellaneous (10) Market (a) Preparation. (b) Mailing. (c) Record. (d) Inquiry (e) Rejection. (f) Payment. (g) Addresses

This looks like a formidable list, but it is simple and compact. To give a few illustrations: 8-a would cover all references to the use of leaders while 8-c would explain the use of busts; 10-a would tell how to prepare the script for sending out, the sort of paper to use, the use of going and return envelopes, etc., while 10-g would have a card for each company for the address, whether it was Licensed or Independent, whether it was slow or quick to read, the rates of payment and any similar information By clipping items from this page, the other trade papers, the suggestion slips sent out by the companies and copying suggestions made by editors direct, it will be possible to possess an ever growing book that shall be up to the moment.

By using the "ledger paper" cards the record will not take up more than a single drawer. With proper care in the selection of material for pasting the file should not grow too bulky, and yet contain all that is essential in such a form that any desired pointer may be obtained in a moment.

INQUIRIES

MRS. C. A. D.—George Lessey was the Thanhouser Romeo in "Romeo and Juliet." He is with Edison now. Miss Viola Alberti was Mary in "The Taming of Mary," by the same company. Your other questions will be answered later as it has been necessary to query the companies.

C. J. S.—Herbert Prior is both Jones and Smith in Majestic's "Unwilling Bigamist" It is a trick effect, as you suggest, the film being run through the camera a second time.

E. M. L.—Ed. Middleton was Yale in Lubin's "The Gingerbread Cupid," and Burton King the Ferara in the same company's "The Handicap." Miss Gertrude McCoy was the Maid in Edison's "Her Face." In Lubin's "A Matter of Business," Raymond Hackett was Raymond, Charles Brandt the President and Howard Mitchell and Miss Jennie Nelson the two clerks. The Kalem Company does not identify Mrs. Mayne in "A Spartan Mother," but in their "Reconciled by Burglars," Donald Mackenzie was Jack and Miss Margia Lytton Nellie. The same players were Ralph and Mary in "Back to the Kitchen."

J. L.—The Edison Company does not place the player in "Winsome Winnie's Dance." The four admirers were not cast for the program.

G. J. M.—If you are told that a company is not buying, while they advertise for scripts, it looks as though they didn't like your style of story and were trying to let you down easily. If you'll drop the idea that you are writing better scripts than the ones you see produced, it is quite probable that you'll make some sales. If you send in a script with the explanation that you are sending it because a certain story by the company fell down on one detail, they'll be more than apt to send your script back. The name of the player in "Jane Shore" is not available. It was made in Paris and we do not get the French casts. We have had several inquiries as to whether it is a former Biograph player, but do not believe that it is more than a chance resemblance.

J. E. H.—Thank you for your letter, but this is a department for replies to inquiries, not for the exploitation of personal opinions.

S. R. J.—We do not place the company playing in Arlington, California. Perhaps the company will kindly identify itself. There are a number of stock companies not listed.

B. A. T.—Lately the Biograph has been working in the vicinity of Los Angeles, but the home studio is in New York. The Edison historical subjects are made on the scene of the story where practicable and where this cannot be done they are made in a situation as like the original as possible. The Essanay stock company is divided into two sections, one working in California and the other in Chicago. Just how many subdivisions there are in the Chicago company we do not know, but from the casts we imagine that they have no well-defined companies, but that each director draws on the general company for the people he needs. You seem to have that Edison title wrong, as it does not appear that they have released a story under that title.

M. E. D.—When a photoplay company returns your script without even the printed rejection slip, the chances are that it is an oversight. The unsealed envelope adds conviction that the company has a very careless office boy. Most Indian stories are studio made, but you seem to have a rather good point of view. You might try stories along those lines.

H. A. S.—We do not decide wagers based on Biograph stories, but we are inclined to think it Miss Florence Lawrence who played the title role in "Pippa Passes."

N. M.—The reason you can get your synopsis short is that you do not have to tell the story scene by scene, but hit only the high places. That's one of the reasons the demand for short synopses is made, to keep out the deadwood. This has been treated at length in previous issues. Read back. If you are a new reader we will give you a list of dates for which you should send if you will ask again.

K. A. C.—We share Kalem Company's ignorance as to the present whereabouts of W. A. Mulcahy. Perhaps he will be good enough to advise us as to his address.

C. J.—We have no record of the present whereabouts of Miss Gladys Field. The Insurgent Senator in the Edison of that title, was Augustus Philips.

P. T. C.—Miss Florence Lawrence will be one of the Powers players

E. N. B.—You write that you are doubtful about your technic, and then go on to explain that you've been making adaptations. If you will stop to think you will realize that the only possible reason a company might have in paying you for an arrangement of "Romeo and Juliet" would be that your technic was far superior to the work of their own staff. In accepting stories from outside writers the company seeks new ideas and technic. Even were you a master of technic you would not be able to do "Romeo and Juliet" as well as the studio writer who knows exactly what his particular company wants to do. Costume plays are made in American studios only for special reasons. They are not purchased from contributors. You do not write in dialogue in photoplays. You merely write the action that tells the story, and if you need dialogue to get the idea over you put it in a leader. If you need much dialogue you have not a photoplay. Prices vary with the companies, but for full reels $20 to $35 is the average, though some companies will pay up to $100 for a standard script

T. R.—It seems to be impossible to obtain from the Pathe Company the names of the players in the Western section of the company and inquiry as to the Eastern company is little better. We have no data on the camera used by Paul Rainey in Africa, but believe that it was a standard box, and not the hand camera, if that is what you mean. We also do not believe that any camera uses the Geneva or "star" movement. The reason is that this movement employs a sprocket wheel which plugs every sprocket hole. The Lumiere movement uses but one in four, leaving three perfect sprockets. If the film is torn slightly the three perfect sprockets are left.

H. O. H.—The announcement that the Lubin comedy company would go to Alaska "for a few months," seems to be a foolish break on the part of the press agent. The company will work in Atlantic City for a few weeks and may then go to the New England coast for the remainder of the summer.

J. M.—The Essanay cast does not place the physician in "An Arizona Escapade. Tom Santschi was the convict in Selig's "The Ones Who Suffer."

L. P. C.—Your suggestion is clever, but you do not have to have private mailing cards printed for post card receipts that can be filed in the card catalogue drawer. The post office makes a special card of this size and any postmaster will order them for you in lots of 100 which would be cheaper than having cards printed. They are intended for libraries, where cards of this sort are needed for certain work.

A TIP TO PHOTOPLAYWRIGHTS.

By L. G. Coover.

MY dear fellow photoplaywright, may I offer you a few suggestions which I feel will work to your interest and also to the producer's? I offer them on the old, old basis of "take them for what they're worth to you." I am in a position to suggest as I do, otherwise this paper's space would not contain my words.

Many of you are taking crime as the central plot of your story. Well, it won't pass any Censorship Board. Perhaps in the end you point a moral; you may show the futility of crime and your story would pass a per cent of the censors But to the producer this is not sufficient. He wants the story that will pass them all. Bear this in mind, the producer's profit is in selling reels; his per cent. profit is greatest on his last reel. His first reels go to make up the initial expense of production. You can easily reason it out for yourself, if you will only look at it in a business light—the way the producer looks at it. A story which must depict a crime to be a story means the loss of ten prints, at least, to the producer. To make it plain, we'll say that a certain company is selling a hundred prints a week of stories which will pass the censors because they do not contain crime nor immorality. Now, should he put out a story showing crime, it would not pass certain city censors and these would amount to approximately ten or more prints less than his average dependable market. And the profit on those ten reels is some profit. Believe me, Mr. Producer wants it and so would you.

Murder is the least, the lowest and most unpleasant theme to handle. It is not moral, not lawful; there is virtually nothing to justify it, not even "the unwritten law." At present most producers will not give such a plot one iota of consideration. So cut out murder. Do not show theft, nor the means of theft. Shade all such scenes; veil them or carry them by suggestion or a leader or a sub-title. Upon your ability to invent ways of getting these tabooed themes "over" in a subtle yet convincing and plain fashion rests the chance of your selling your story, providing the whole of your story is good.

Don't take it now that I've dropped into a defense of the drastic sort of censorship. I have not. I simply mean to impress upon you what you must avoid if you want to sell your writings. I want you to know that the thought of "Will it pass the censors?" is ever present in the considering mind of most scenario editors. Try the simple little straight-ahead themes for awhile—heart interest, love interest, sympathy awakening; use the themes of grief, want, ambition, hardship, joy, sadness, loneliness and a dozen others which you will quickly think of. AND REMEMBER THE CENSORS —or try comedies.

MILLION DOLLAR THEATER FOR BOSTON.

This writer is informed from most reliable sources that Scollay Square, Boston, will soon see what will be the most expensive vaudeville and photoplay house in this country. The theater will front on Scollay Square, the premises now occupied by Austin & Stone's Museum having been secured. The theater will extend clear around to Bowdoin Square in the rear, and will seat about 3,400 people. Mr. "Mitch" Mark, well known to Boston as the man who built the Comique and Premier theaters, is one of the prime movers in this promotion. Plans have already been completed by architects. In fact, only one thing is now holding up the start. The promoters are still lacking one store on Bowdoin Square, which is needed. However, it is stated that this tenant is about ready to vacate his store, as very tempting bait in the way of a large cash bonus has been promised him. Owing to the extreme value of the land, this theater will cost in the neighborhood of a million dollars when completed, including the cost of the property, buying leases and actual construction work. Several other capitalists are heavily interested in this transaction. Mr. Mark has the name of being one of the shrewdest men in this business, and now lives in Buffalo, N. Y., where he controls a string of theaters. HENRY.

TWO NEW ESSANAY COMPANIES.

The Essanay Company is preparing to send two companies of players to the Atlantic coast for the taking of some especially fine films requiring ocean views and the magnificent rugged scenery abounding thereabouts. A number of snappy comedies will be made at Atlantic City for release during the hot months that smack of the salt air, the rolling surf, the famous Board Walk, the "red-hot" stands and "sand-baths." A third company will be sent to the beautiful Wisconsin Dells for the making of a number of dramatic subjects calling for unusual scenic backgrounds.

Comments on the Films

"CAPTAIN KING'S RESCUE" (Lubin), April 20.—A melodrama of the plains by the Lubin Western company, with a pretty heroine, a cavalry captain for hero and a Mexican villain, played by the usual Lubin heavy men. The views of the alkali plains are fine, as good as any we have seen. One view shows a cavalry regiment in camp, and a squad of Uncle Sam's troppers comes, at the story's climax, to rescue the hero, whom the villain had thrown down a well, and with him, to the heroine's rescue. The well photographs are cleverly taken also. The camera work throughout is very good.

"THE PRICE HE PAID" (Selig), April 30.—A strong picture of an Indian chief's justice. The man who paid was a white medical doctor and the price of his drunkeness was death, the death of the chief's sick daughter; and the price of his greed was death, his own death by thirst. The Indians paid the fee he demanded—as much gold as he could carry—but they forced him to find his own way across the desert with his load. Such a situation as this stirs the spectator and fills him with a sense of the bigness and nobility of human life. Everything that happens in this picture seems truthful, adequate and full of justice. It is a very commendable picture.

Besides the strength of its situation, we find the picture well conducted—the little things ring true. It is also very well acted. The producer has chosen his scenes, whether wide views, or close-by sketches full of detail, with much skill. One or two seem truly wild, as for instance does one sketch, the group of Indian ponies on a rocky slope; it brings them to us in so marvelously vivid a way. It's a good picture.

"THE OLD KENT ROAD" (Vitagraph), April 30.—Mr. Van Dyke Brooke adds, in this picture, another very human characterization to his already admirable list. The "Old Kent Road" seems to stand for a fairly well defined station in life. Lowly it is; there's little room for vanity on the Old Kent Road. The old man and his family—Kate Price plays the mother; Miss Clara Kimball Young, plays Sue; Mr. Costello, plays Sue's costermonger sweetheart, Harry—were well content until he gets a legacy. He and the family move out of the "Road," and their moving out is worth seeing. He now thinks Harry isn't good enough for Sue. All this, as well as the train of circumstances that brought him back again to the "Old Road" and to the old simplicity and contentment, are told in a delightfully, humanly droll way. It makes what may be called a good heart-comedy. It isn't played for the loud laughs. It is very good. We notice in the picture also, Chas. Eldridge, Robert Gaillord and Miss Adele de Garde.

"BLINKS AND JINKS", ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW" (Edison), May 1.—Yale Benner and Walter Edwin give us, in this picture, two astute and not very scrupulous attorneys with offices adjoining and a door between. Each obtains one side of a certain small case. Their clients never notice this door between; but while the case is on trial, they notice with much satisfaction, the bitter hostility of their attorneys. The fun of this cleverly conceived and well-made comedy comes largely from the fact that we, the spectators, do notice the door between the two offices, we also see the trial and also see how the lawyers behave when their clients are not present. It is first-class entertainment and seems, in its very interesting settings, a bit of life caught up out of some rural county seat when court is in session. The case is Rufus Hanks, a farmer (Wm. West), vs. Cyril Brown (Robert Brower), whose automobile has caused an upset. Charles Ogle is judge and Bigelow Cooper is the clerk of the court.

"ALONG THE MEDITERRANEAN" (Kalem), May 1.—A very excellent travel film. The camera work is good and the views given are not only interesting and instructive, but full of beauty.

"THE RED MAN'S HONOR" (Pathe), May 1.—After setting for twenty minutes in the strong grip of this picture, we unhesitatingly place it among the very best wholly Indian pictures that we have ever seen. It's a big picture, dignified, and shows us Indian justice as exemplified by the trial and sentence of a sub-chief for wrong-doing—alienating the affections of a squaw from her lawful husband, who was apparently a man less valuable to the tribe in every way. The action is so straight forward and logical that it seems, not manipulated but naturally dramatic. What is more, its players impress one as being red, not as being white actors. The photography is very good. It is a first-class picture to entertain and edify.

"WIDOWERS, THREE" (Melies), May 2.—A breezy farce comedy on a ranch. It has a large cast: three widowers; their three sons who go for a vacation to the ranch; three girls on the ranch, who are guarded by two spinsters; besides cowboys, horses, etc. The boys fall in love and become engaged; the fathers come in a rage and end by marrying the girls themselves. It is artificial, but it's amusing and it doesn't drag for one moment. The audience seemed to like it very much, and got a good many laughs. The players add much to it by clever acting. The photographs are very good indeed.

"A SON'S DEVOTION" (Lubin), May 2.—A picture whose hero is a very lowly Mexican. His mother lay very sick. He couldn't get the medicine or food she must have and in desperation, he stole a horse. When the sheriff finds the circumstances, he protects him from the cowboys. The well-photographed backgrounds in which this picture is set, give to it a very interesting atmosphere. The scenes are in a small, desert village, in the Mexican quarter of the town, with its adobe huts. It is very well acted, especially by the Mexican boy and his old mother, but also by the sheriff and the cowboys, who are in an ugly mood. It gets over effectively and was watched with close attention.

"JACK AND JINGLES" (Selig), May 2.—A pleasing picture, aiming at pathos and sentiment; but featuring, especially, the tricks of a marvelously trained Spitz dog. Jack is a newsboy who rescues "Jingles" and carries him home. They become inseparable companions. The dog's tricks, for the most part done apparently without command, made him seem almost human. He is of much assistance to his little master. It is a good picture for any kind of show; but will especially please children. The dog is certainly a wonder. The photographs are excellent and the picture is commendable as entertainment.

"HIS THRIFTY WIFE" (Essanay), May 2.—A very well acted comedy by the Chicago company. The situation is fresh and very good; and there are also many unexpected and very enjoyable laughs due to good character interpretation and due to the equally unexpected reaction of one character or group of characters on another. The audience laughed heartily and often. The camera work is very good indeed.

"THE LEADING MAN" (Biograph), May 2.—We had the pleasure of seeing this reel twice in one morning and enjoyed it both times and enjoyed the way two good audiences took it. Laughter is very contagious. It is a very funny farce, full of excellent character drawing, and full of sparkle as snappy cider. It seems as though every bit of fun has been gotten out of a delightfully human situation. It is one of those farces that get hold of real life with both hands and don't let go till the end. We take pleasure in commending it for every kind of audience known to us.

"THE FICKLE SPANIARD" (Biograph), May 2.—This farce of Mexican life, partner to the one just noticed, is not a whit less clever or a whit less commendable for real fun. It also depends on a human situation and has as good character drawing. The audiences seemed delighted with both. Both are very clearly photographed.

"RED INK TRAGEDY" (Vitagraph), May 3.—A Bunny picture in which the most popular of motion picture players, in a well simulated jag, gets red ink on his face and throat and then falls asleep. The detective (Mr. Harry Morey) arrests the wrong man (Mr. Dunn). We also notice in the picture, Flora Finck, Kate Price, Edith Halleren, Rose Tapley, Mr. Robert Gaillord and others.

"OLD LOVE LETTERS" (Vitagraph), May 3.—On the same reel is this love story, told in dream light of memories, as two elderly lovers open again and read their old love letters. Miss Edith Story and Mr. Leo Delaney play these parts and the art that is revealed in interpreting them is fine. The story is tragic. The love-match is broken by the girl's father (Mr. Tefft Johnson), who makes her marry a loathsome man of great wealth (Mr. Harold Wilson). Mr. Wilson makes this part hideous; it is a very praiseworthy piece of work. He soon dies in the picture, as does the woman the lover married. It is a picture played by artists. The camera work, in both pictures is fine.

"CHUMS" (Eclipse), May 1.—A farce that utilizes the cleverness of a trained dog to make many good laughs. It is artificial, but it is amusing and can be counted upon to give entertainment. The photography is very fair.

"PERCY'S VISIT" (Eclipse), May 1.—On the same reel is this horseplay farce depending on cameracraft for its most effective moments. An automobile is made to do some very funny stunts. The scenes are interesting; they show a pretty villa at which the unwelcome guest, Percy, makes his visit. His host paid the servants, including the chauffeur, to get rid of him. The gardeners also help in this good work. The photographs are good and there are good laughs in it.

"WON BY WAITING" (Lubin), May 1.—A melodramatic picture that is ably handled and has much charm, due chiefly to the graceful way in which Miss May Buckley plays the leading role. The plot, although hardly vital, is sensational, affords a thrilling climax and holds attention throughout. Mr. Harry Meyer plays the man's lead with his usual intelligence and command of his art. Miss Buckley plays the part of a country girl who, by the conditions of a will, is called upon to marry a man who she had never met, a club-man. This man (Mr. Meyer) marries her to get the money and then neglects her. A second man is introduced, and him the girl skilfully uses to waken jealousy and love in her husband. It is she who wins by waiting. The camera work is of the usual Lubin quality.

"THE CHAUFFEUR, THE GIRL AND THE COP" (Essanay), May 3.—A comedy of kitchen life, brightly conceived, fresh and very entertaining indeed. We commend it on every count and a large audience seemed to find much amusement and pleasure in it. It ends in a wedding—we see the chauffeur and the girl in a carriage, trimmed with white ribbons, passing the cop who philosophically takes off his cap to them. Just at that moment a big load of beer gets in the way of the camera, all unconsciously, and the audience, having enjoyed the delightful comedy from beginning to end, gets one more good, hearty laugh. It's a good picture, wholesome and pleasant.

"GETTING THE MONEY" (Kalem), May 3.—This comedy is a little scream. It is very well acted, quite fresh and, there being just enough of it for the situation, it is wholly funny. It is not vulgar or rough in any way and made a large audience roar with hearty laughter.

"THE POTTERS OF THE NILE" (Kalem), May 3.—This well-photographed, instructive and deeply interesting topical is on the same reel.

Much might be written about it, indeed these topical pictures would be the very best possible point of departure for a class writing themes as a literary exercise. Yet nothing would quite be the whole story. In fact, these pictures are not travelogs, they are travels; they are seeing for ourselves. Very few of us really appreciate their value or our own good fortune in them.

"OUT OF THE DEEP" (Edison), May 3.—When once this picture gets well started, the pianist will need to hustle if he wants to keep up with it; it is speedy. There is a very lively and exciting fight on board the pirate's big ship. This pirate has abducted a woman; it is for personal vengeance. Her husband has roused the neighborhood and the pirate has not been able to get under sail. Over the gunwhale of the big ship they swarm, swords out, and then the fight is on in earnest until the ship is blown up by the villain. The next scene shows a burning ship; the spectators being safe on shore. This is fine; but not so wonderful as a later scene, near the close of the story, which shows us a diver in his queer rig on the floor of the ocean, strange forms of sea-weed growing high as his head above him, and great fishes swimming about him. That scene is very creditable. This pirate ship comes in a narrative, told to two lovers by the girl's father, who wants the lover to secure a chest of treasure lost from the ship. This well made and well photographed picture held the spectators from first to finish. It is a good release.

"A SISTER'S DEVOTION" (C. G. P. C.), May 3.—A dramatic and very effective picture of domestic infidelity. The characters are people of wealth, the man of the house being a famous chemist. It is the wife who is unfaithful; but the husband never knows it. The day she ran away with the chemist's friend, he was blinded by an accident in his laboratory. The devotion of the chemist's sister keeps the secret from him until his eyes are about to be unbandaged, but, at that critical moment, the erring wife, in whom we had seen a growing repentance, enters and the sister leads her back to her husband's arms. The sets are very commendable and the scenes out-of-doors very beautiful. The acting is intelligent and skilfully gets across the varying phases of human emotion that the action creates. The camera work is good.

"THE SALVATIONIST" (Pathe), May 4.—Miss Gwendoline Pate has a role in this picture which fortunately permits her to show how good an artist she is. Besides, that Army lassie's poke bonnet is very becoming to her. The picture's climax is a terribly real accident shown as taking place in a big automobile race. The grandstand is packed and there are dense crowds along the course. Several cars have dashed by at break-neck pace, when the hero's car is wrecked and he is thrown out, it seems, before our eyes. It couldn't have been made more real. This race and its accident are very effective and get a strong grip on the audience. The story is well made and sets them forth naturally and smoothly. The camera work is excellent. It is a good picture.

"THE HIEROGLYPHIC" (Vitagraph), May 4.—A Hieroglyph, with us, means any queer mark that has significance not understood. This is a modern story, a story of mystery and the most mysterious character of the picture makes the queer mark on paper. It seems merely the result of a nervous habit, but leads in the end, to his detection. The intrigue is to obtain a fortune which depends on a will, disinheriting a worthless son for a neice. The detective work is done by a reporter who loves this girl. The picture holds attention strongly from the start and its climax is very tense. The will has just been placed in the hands of the worthless son by the man of mysterious habits and is already on fire when the reporter and the girl bring the police and save the document. It is not a picture that demands great acting; but is carried forward very smoothly and speedily by the players and the producer. The camera work is excellent.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE BANDITS" (Essanay), May 4.—It is not surprising that these Broncho Billy pictures are popular. Mr. Anderson has shown rare business sense in creating this part. He has a good left bower in Alkali Ike; but the romantic and heroic Broncho Billy pictures have the quality that takes here in New York, anyway, and especially with the ladies. The stories are only like a cup in which good old romance is given out. They are all fresh and good and exciting and heart-warming. This one is all of these. We like them ourselves.

"THE TIN CAN RATTLE" (Lubin), May 4.—A very amusing farce comedy set in Tin Can, a Western "City." We see little of the village save the office of the "Rattle," its only newspaper and the shop of its pawn broker. The editor is poor enough; but it isn't he who goes to Mr. Isaacs'. When the stranded actress blows into his office, he thinks up a scheme that sends the vain but simple-hearted cowboys there. It is well done and kept the people laughing. The camera work is good.

"THE TURTLE INDUSTRY" (Lubin), May 4.—This picture shows a number of big turtles, already captured, being brought up on a dock and butchered. It isn't very comfortable to watch the process. The first three or four operations are done with an axe. The camera work is not very good; it is misty.

"BILLIE" (Edison), May 7.—This picture's center of interest is the heart of a brave and very human little girl, "Billie," played with much skill by Miss Margaret Shelby. The scenario is by James Oppenheim and is taken from one of his own short stories which appeared in "The Outlook." Mr. Oppenheim is a poet of rare gifts besides being a novelist and short story writer and his distinguishing quality—a sincere and sympathetic insight into the sorrows and troubles of those who are kept down—shows very distinctly in this picture. Mr. Oppenheim knows the common people and has genius, we hope he will keep on turning his short stories into photoplays.

In this picture, Mr. Marc McDermott plays Billie's father, a drunken, worthless man, who is afraid of her. A stranger, played by Walter Edwin, sees the little girl's difficulties and helps her out a little. We also notice in the picture Bigeloe Cooper, Bliss Milford, Edna May Weick and Wm. Porter, Jr. It is a good picture.

"DR. LAFLEUR'S THEORY" (Vitagraph), May 6.—Dr. Lafleur, played by Mr. Costello, had a theory that crime was a disease. The picture's situation, which is interesting and commendably handled, brings him into contact with three crooks, played by Mr. Van Dyke Brooke, Miss Clara Kimball Young and Mr. Morrison. These three are in the thieving business. Dr. Lafleur breaks up this partnership and gives the love story of the girl and younger man a chance to grow. The picture is distinctly dramatic, very well acted and charmingly set and photographed. It is a good, strong picture.

"PALACE AND FOUNTAINS OF VERSAILLES" (C. G. P. C), May 7.—A beautifully colored picture of a glorious palace with its gardens, groves and fountains. This is very surely a feature picture. It is a treat. Any audience will be glad of it.

"AUTOMATIC MOVING COMPANY" (C. G. P. C.), May 7.—This trick film on the same reel kept a large audience in one continuous laugh. There are no human players. The household furniture just moved itself. The baskets seem to have a sense of humor. They know their place when it's the piano that's coming up the passage.

"A CONTEST AND NO PRIZE" (Cines), May 7.—Two men love the same girl and neither gets her, for she loves a young soldier whom neither of the men knows about. The picture is a farce comedy act, although it deals largely with the obvious, it got a few laughs. The camera work is very fair; some of the scenes are very pretty.

"FIUME" (Cines), May 7.—A very pleasing travelog, showing an old and interesting city in Hungary. It is very fairly pictured and photographed.

"A HUMBLE HERO" (Selig), May 7.—A picture that distinctly pleased a good sized audience. Its chief interest is a race between a claim-jumper and the big dog (humble hero) that the real owner has dispatched with a message. This whole incident is fine; but the picture seems long in getting started and not all of it convinces powerfully. Some of the photographs are fine, all are fair.

"LITTLE BOY BLUE" (Lubin), May 6.—A very pleasing picture, full of children. The Little Boy Blue is played by a youngster who has appeared before in Lubin pictures, and who made a hit recently, when as the son of a sick man, he induced a president of an insurance company to come to his father's relief. In this picture he will also make friends. Mr. Geo. B. Walkers is again very lovable in a grandmother's part. Boy Blue's big sister and brother also do good work.

Independent.

"THE SCHEMERS" (Powers), April 27.—The schemers were two elderly ladies. One had a daughter, the other had a son. The object of the schemers was matrimony. This makes a schemer of the young lady, who dresses up to receive the young man and acts very unattractively until she finds that the man is attractive. Later they meet again by chance. The picture is prettily set and photographed, and, besides good comedy, has pleasing players.

"REVENGE OF THE SILK MASKS" (Eclair), April 30.—Another picture in the Kid, Kite and Kitty series of burlesque melodramas. In this offering, Ralph, head of the "Silk Masks," gets revenge, while it lasts, and a string of pearls, while he can keep it. His object was to make money at the same time that he got Kitty into trouble. We have a pretty picture of Kitty behind the bars. Kitty is soon freed and Kite then plays Sherlocko and recovers the gems. Some excellent trick photographs add to the fun. It seemed to be liked.

"THE TALE OF A KITE" (Republic), April 30.—A very pretty player takes the heroine's part in this romantic comedy picture, which has a very fresh and amusing idea. Big brother, who is planning an elopement, advises little brother to put more paper on the tail of his kite. Little brother uses the note on big brother's table. Kite breaks and falls on the land of father-in-law to-be, who finds the note and gives chase. The young people had auto 999. Dad passing, knows this; but he looked at auto 666 and did not suspect that his runaway daughter was in it—the sign had been turned. The camera work is good in most scenes.

"HORSE THIEVES OF BAR X" (Champion), April 29.—When photography reaches an excellence that makes it seem alive, even a poor story, told by it, becomes interesting. When, however, as in this picture, there is good camera work and a good story too, the film is sure to be popular. The picture has small faults that some will notice; but on the whole, with its popular elements, plenty of horses and action, it is likely to "go" with the majority, who are not critical. There have been more skilfully made Westerns, but this also is interesting, and it has some pretty scenes.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 8" (M. P. Dist. and Sales Co.), May 1.—A good news number with several very interesting items. The camera work is good; yet we wish that the prints had been clearer; they are all very fair, however. Among what seem to us the best items, we find a good picture of a Pacific Coast baseball team, that of Portland, Ore.; a glimpse of the boys who recently came from Australia to visit the King of England; the funeral procession of General Frederick Dent Grant; the ceremonies on Shakespeare's birthday, in Chicago. In this we see the school children decking his statue with flowers, a parade in costume, etc. A picture of two conventions is included; one in Nashville, the Saddlers; the other in Cincinnati. There is a picture of dogs at the St. Louis Dog Show. This includes some of Champ Clark's favorites. There's a picture of J. Bruce Ismay; one of the newest fashions in theater gowns; a wrecked aeroplane, a wrecked automobile, and a new type of locomotive, a very big and powerful one. The last item is the Paris-Tours race for bicycles. This is a very good picture, taken from an automobile following the contestants just after the start. It makes a first-class ending.

"THE REALIZATION OF A CHILD'S DREAM" (Champion), May 6.—This picture has much quality. The little Champion player has a very pleasing part and this she plays very naturally and humanly. She had a toy dog and dreamt that it came to life. Due to a fall, she loses her memory and the doctor resorts to giving her a sudden shock as a means of awakening her faculties. This is done by buying a black Pomeranian, like her toy dog, and giving it to her. In her dream, she had seen this dog. The shock of seeing her toy grow real makes her normal once more. The camera work is commendable. It is well conducted and makes a pleasing picture.

"ON THE SHORE" (Imp), May 6.—A seaside and fisher-folk melodrama. The owner of the land tries to eject the fisherman who has built his cabin on the shore, and sets the cabin on fire. The old man, slightly wounds the owner and is taken to prison. The daughter (Miss Fisher) comes to plead with the owner for her father's release and this introduces a love story. There are some very good views of salt water and sandy beach and there's a pleasing smack of seaside atmosphere in the story. Messrs. Pollard, Le Saint and Horning also play in it.

"THE WEDDING DRESS" (American), May 6.—The spinster had been engaged many years before she became "an heiress." The wedding soon followed. The money didn't come and disappointment showed her what kind of a greedy man her old "flame" of many years really was, but he grows human in the end. It is very well acted, especially by the player who takes Martha's role. The photographs are fair. This seems to us the most human and the best conducted picture released by the "Flying A" in several weeks, it is a good picture.

"THE VOICE OF THE PAST" (Eclair), May 5.—A beautiful picture by the French company, played by famous Parisian actors. The old grandmother objects to Jenny's love affair and locks the granddaughter in the old garret. Jenny finds the wedding clothes of the old people, her grandparents, and utilizes them to recall the past to her grandmother. The picture gets much charm from its scenes, which, taken separately, are full of art. The story is simple, but pleasing and likely to be popular.

"THE ALHAMBRA GRANADA" (Eclair), May 5.—It would be very hard to get more pleasing views of Granada and its wonderful buildings than these. These two offerings on the same reel are a desirable release to show. This picture is a very valuable offering. It is a first-class treat to give any audience at all, but especially a cultured one.

"A QUESTION OF HAIR" (Solax), May 3.—A romantic farce comedy in which Miss Marion Swayne, whose hair is long, light and curley, and Billy Quirk, play the chief roles, a young engaged couple. Her father is a village shoe cobbler; Billy is her father's helper in the shop. Billy finds a better head of hair and proves unfaithful, but soon finds also that "not all is gold that glitters." It is a pleasing picture, quite fresh and very well photographed.

"MELODRAMA OF YESTERDAY" (Imp), May 4.—When this particular kind of burlesque is well done, as it is here, it is always full of laughter. The joke is that even this is, once and a while, the melodrama of to-day, though done, not as in this case, but seriously. Messrs. Pollard and Lyons and Miss Margarite Fisher play the leads.

"BREACH OF PROMISE" (Imp), May 4.—On the same reel is this lively farce in which Lizzie Snodgrass (Vivian Prescott) and the sheriff chase Mr. Thompson (Mr. Gumpson) to serve him with papers in breach of promise proceedings. The papers are served, but very quickly circumstances change and bring Thompson back to her feet. The camera work is good; the business fresh and pleasing.

"THE SALESLADY" (Thanhouser), May 7.—The opening scenes of this picture show something of life in a big department store. Later scenes carry the action into the home life of two of the salesladies, and a fresh love story is introduced. This brings forward, in a very natural way, a promenade of pretty women in pretty gowns, new spring styles, morning gowns, afternoon gowns and evening gowns. This will be interesting to everyone, but will be especially so to the ladies. The story is entirely natural and convincing. It is also very pleasingly acted by Miss M. Snow in the leading role with Miss Flo LaBadie, Mr. Russel and a very good player whose name we don't know. The photography is good.

"LOVE'S MIRACLE" (Thanhouser), May 10.—There are some beautiful views of Florida in this picture, its palms and its swampy Everglades by moonlight and at morning. The situation is new and is a good one. It shows us how love, waking in the heart of an invalid who hadn't walked for years, gave her the new life and strength to throw off her weakness. It is very well played by Miss Marguerite Snow and Mr. Cruze, who make of it a picture full of good entertainment and one that pleased the audience. There are a thousand variations possible on this theme, they can be found, taken from real life, in medical books dealing with psychotherapy. This may be a good suggestion to scenario writers.

"A GAME OF BLUFF" (Nestor), May 11.—A seaside, summer love story. The backgrounds are the usual resort scenes—the well photographed beach, with its combing billows; the hotel piazza, etc. The story is interesting and doesn't drag. The poor clerk ("capitalist") meets at the beach, John Russel ("retired capitalist") and he schemes to marry his daughter. It's a game of bluff on both sides and the uncovering of this bluff is brought in with a snap that will make a roar of laughter. The picture is conducted with engaging freshness all through and, with its pleasing players, good acting, good nature and skilful camera work, is likely to be popular.

"THE THESPIAN BANDITS" (Nestor), May 8.—A very good picture with some fine natural scenery, extremely well photographed. It gives us the exciting, half-humorous, half-painful experiences of three thespians from New York. They had come out to be moving picture bandits, but found real life in the West and a real bad man. One of them, the "Patsy" of the three, is played by Jack Conway; the bad man is played by William Clifford. This is the kind of story, an exciting comedy, that is likely to be very popular. It makes a very desirable picture to show.

"THE TEN OF DIAMONDS" (Nestor), May 6.—This picture tells us a story as narrated by a father to a son who has inherited a passion for cards. This terrible story cures the son. It begins with a few scenes in which the son plays as the chief factor. The father's narrative breaks into those rather abruptly, without a leader to explain. Consequently the narrative is obscure. We know that the leading factor is no longer the son; but it is plainly a young man (the father as a youth), and we don't very clearly know who it is. Yet there is humanity in all of it; for it is well-acted and very well photographed. It interests.

"THE BRIDEGROOM'S TROUBLES" (Powers), May 7.—A very well photographed picture, full of figures enjoying themselves in the spirit of gaiety, except that the bridegroom doesn't come. He is having all kinds of troubles and amusing perplexities and is married, at length, in the queerest kind of suit. It is a pleasing picture and made several good laughs.

"IN THE TIDE" (Republic), May 4.—The interesting backgrounds of this picture are, in part, from the section of congested New York, around Chatham Square and Mulberry Park. It tells a melodramatic story of sharp contrasts with villainy seeming to triumph at first; yet brought to book in the end, as by the hand of fate, and compelled to confess. The scenes of New York life that it gives are extremely interesting; the story which is meant for the many, not for the critical, holds them together vividly. It is pretty well acted; but the photographs, in some scenes, are too heavy and give too little clear detail.

"HER WEEK OF ANGUISH" (Eclair), May 9.—Mrs. Stewart and Mr. Dunn play the leading roles in this intimate picture of home life. The wife, in her hurry, let her husband's pay envelope go away with the Saturday wash and, for seven days, she had to keep the loss from him. It was, for her, a week of anguish. One week's salary is much to a family; but there are so many worse tragedies that the situation seems, at first, inconsequential; but on the other hand, the troubles accumulate until we really begin to pity the poor woman. The photography and acting are very acceptable.

"JIMMIE, THE BUCCANEER" (Gaumont), May 9.—A pleasing picture, slight in the story it tells; but giving Jimmie, the Gaumont boy actor, a good vehicle for his peculiar gifts. Jimmie has won a host of friends and admirers by his cleverness. Any picture of him is sure to be popular. Jimmie's parents went to Morrocco and he didn't like being left behind. Later, he runs away and follows on his own hook. The photographs are good.

"LUCKY JIM" (Champion), May 8.—A picture illustrating a poem of the same name, and telling a love story set on a ranch. The chief characters are well acted, the story doesn't drag and the picture well photographed. It is slight, but interesting.

"THE HENPECKOS" (Champion), May 8.—A caricature, in which Mr. and Mrs. Henpecko appear, people with enormous false noses which make their doings grotesquely amusing. It is a mystery story and Sherlocko and Watso, the two strange beings that have already appeared in Champion films, are called in. Mr. Henpecko knows, however, where his wife's recent purchase went. When Sherlocko questions him, he admits that "he needed the money." It will be first-class as entertainment where something very light, but comically amusing is desired.

"THE WOOING OF ALICE" (Solax), May 8.—Alice is a girl of the slums, played very pleasingly indeed by Miss Blanche Cornwall. When the picture's story opens, a bully has assumed the position of her "steady," and none dare take her away from him. As it continues, the picture shows us how she is rescued by a young man of better social status and how the bully, with his toughs, is frustrated in his attempt to get her back by force. In its character interpretation, which is good; in its pictures of interesting slum scenes, and in its appeal to popular ideas, in plain words to the gallery, it will probably serve its purpose as entertainment to a large number of people. It is very well photographed.

"THE MYTH OF JAMASHA" (American), May 9.—The first impression one gets of this film is pleasure in its fine photographs of wild places. The leaders, written in truly poetical language, give us promise that we will see the strange, uncanny, unreal maid of the Pass, who lures men on to destruction with gold nuggets thrown down from the rocky heights. Perhaps she symbolizes the lure of the treasure mountains—"Death stands above me, whispering low," she sings. At her first appearance in the picture, being but a mortal maid with whom we are well acquainted, the effect is not very uncanny, but, so well is the locality chosen, and so skilfully is the action woven to subdue us to the producer's idea, and also so well is it acted, that she soon takes on not a little dreadfulness. This weird part is played very well by Miss Von Trump. Mr Kerrigan and Mr Richardson support her. It is distinctly out of the beaten track and seems to us very good entertainment.

"THE LAND OF PROMISE" (Imp), May 9.—The Imp Company usually opens its pictures with a list of characters; but this remains on the screen so short a time that, in nine times out of ten, it cannot be read. The "Land of Promise" is a beautiful, fertile land to which two people, José and Juanita, come. They settle on land claimed by an American, like two birds that build their nest in a cranny of a porch. The owner accepts all the money that they have. The picture develops, from this, a pathetic situation springing from the simplicity of these characters and draws its reliefs and contrasts from their heroism. The acting is simple, natural and pleasing. The photographs, throughout, are lovely—beautiful scenes, well pictured. It is a distinctly pleasing release, a good picture for a feature.

"RETRIBUTION" (Powers), May 11.—A certain uncritical carelessness in the development of this story makes it seem artificial to an extent that keeps it from being deeply effective. It has an excellent situation, however, and will interest, especially where spectators have not seen many pictures. It is acted by competent players and is well photographed.

"BILL AND THE DETECTIVE" (Lux), May 10.—A well-photographed picture of comical doings, with some pretty scenes along the seashore.

"THE LASSIE, FRA ABERDEEN" (Lux), May 10.—Our amusing old friend, Skivvy, Arabella, etc., is now a Scotch lassie who has a housemaid's job in Paris. The business is amusing and the interesting backgrounds are well photographed. It is entertaining.

NEW THEATRE FOR PHILADELPHIA.

Word has reached us from the Allegheny Amusement Company, that its new theatre, The Allegheny, situated at Frankford and Allegheny Avenues, Philadelphia, is nearing completion. The house will cost $200,000 and will have a seating capacity of about 4,000 persons. Its size will be 100 feet by 250 feet. This moving picture theatre is one of the five houses erected in the State of Pennsylvania by the Allegheny Amusement Company. The place will be under the management of Mr. Joseph Cohen.

The New Dazzleland Company, 2940 Frankford Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., sends us word that its theatre, the Dazzleland, Frankford Avenue and Birch Street, Philadelphia, is the pioneer picture house in the northeastern section of that city. They report good business ever since the opening.

THE COMING CONVENTION.—In the near future there will be a convention of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees to which the various operators' auxiliaries or operators' unions will doubtless send delegates. I don't know just how many operators' I. A. T. S. E. unions there are, or how many combined operators and stage hands unions there may be. Assuming, however, there are 50 such organizations and that the average cost of sending a delegate be $100, this would mean a total of $5,000—a very considerable sum of money, and enough to pay the average salary of several operators for a whole year. Five thousand dollars is indeed quite a sum of money, and the question immediately arises, what are we going to get in return for it? The operators of these United States cannot afford to pay any such sum, or any other sum for that matter, simply to allow one member of a union to have a very pleasant "junket." Delegates who may attend the convention should go there with some definite ideas in view, and those same definite ideas should not represent merely their own individual notions, but rather the crystallized view of the operators of the country as a whole, or, at the very least, of their own organization.

Now it is, I think, a very generally acknowledged fact that some changes are badly needed in the I. A. T. S. E. laws, in order to make them applicable to the condition of the operator. While considerable may have been done by individual unions in the way of formulating ideas calculated to take care of these propositions, still it seems to me that there should be a general discussion of matters to the end that the solution most acceptable to all the unions be reached, and in furtherance of that idea I desire to say that the columns of this department are open for just such discussion.

On thing that particularly needs attention, as has been pointed out from time to time in these columns, is the six months law. We have called attention to this matter upon several occasions, and recently one brother in Milwaukee was enterprising enough to give us his views on the matter. I might add that his views were excellent, and I might again add that these views were read by probably 15,000 operators, but still, out of that 15,000, there was no other one who was energetic enough to take the matter up and bring forth further discussion.

Last year the I. A. T. S. E, convention passed into history without the promulgation of any laws, so far as I know, of any an especial value to the operator. Why was this? I dare say it was because the various organizations had not discussed among themselves the matter of what changes might be necessary or desirable. One union, let us say, for instance, Chicago, may discuss certain things and go to the convention prepared to advocate them. Now a convention only lasts a few days, and Chicago could not reasonably expect delegates from other organizations to fully grasp the ideas they present, and to decide upon their wisdom, or unwisdom, in perhaps two, or three days, when maybe Chicago has been studying the matter and discussing it for weeks or months. Moreover it must be remembered that the various delegates will not know what the views of the members of their own locals will be as regards any proposition presented by Chicago, although, it may appear to them personally to be good.

For these and other reasons I say to you, my brothers, that the matter of proposed changes which the operators may desire in the I. A. T. S. E. laws should be discussed, and I know of no better place to discuss them than in the columns of this department, which reaches at least nine-tenths, if not all the operators of this country, and certainly reaches practically all of the members of all of the unions.

It will be readily understood that I, personally, have no axe of any kind to grind in this matter. I simply seek the best good of the operators as a whole. I want to see all the operators in the country organized in a solid compact organization, because, as I have repeatedly said in these columns, I consider such an organization as being not only of inestimable value to the operator, but also as being of great value to the managers and exhibitors, themselves. As the matter now lies, there are thousands of operators in our small towns who cannot get into the organization at all, owing to the six months' law. I hold this to be distinctly wrong. Most professions, or trades want a thorough, complete organization of their profession, or trade. The operator, however, is placed in the position of preventing a very large percentage of the members of his craft from getting into the organization. This, in my humble judgment, is not only wrong, but also silly. Please do not understand by this that I advocate the taking in of every Tom, Dick and Harry, regardless of whether he is a competent operator or not. But I do most strenuously object to the competent man being kept out of the organization simply because he does not happen to live in the city in which there is an I. A. T. S. E. organization.

I cite the six months law as being a particularly glaring wrong. There are, though, other things which need remedying, and these matters I repeat should be discussed before the convention. That these things are wrong is not the fault of the I. A. T. S. E. They are simply laws made to fit, and which doubtless do fit, the conditions of stage employees, but they do not work at all well when applied to the condition of the moving picture machine operator. Now, brothers, let's get busy and tell each other through the Department, what we think ought to be worked for at the convention, and then our delegates can all go prepared to pull together and get what we want.

PATHE PROFESSIONAL.—Iowa (name of town suppressed by request) writes: "I am using a Pathe Professional and have some trouble in getting a steady picture. I noticed a brother in California is having the same difficulty. I have done about the same as has he in keeping the film track, which is perfectly new, clean; also the upper and lower sprockets. Some time ago I got a new intermittent sprocket. Before I received same, a traveling operator stopped off and remained with me a few days. I explained fully the difficulty to him, and he immediately said he could remedy same. He did so, though I was not present at the time. The star and cam were loose, that is to say, they could be moved up and down. He tightened them in some way, which made the pictures very much steadier. I notice the star has loosened again considerably, and I would like to know how it can be tightened. I find that if I press on the gate the jump in the film is not quite so noticeable, but when I speed up the machine it increases. You mentioned something about a new book you are making. What kind is it and what is the price?"

It is plain that your tension is not tight enough; also that there is lost motion in your intermittent sprocket. I have not seen a Pathe Professional machine for some time, but as I remember the matter, the shoe which provides tension for the film as it passes under the gate, is held down by two springs. The shoe I know slips out. Now I think that if you slip the shoe out and bend the springs inward, toward the shoe, you will provide more tension. But, before doing this, however, if I were you I would order a new tension spring from the Pathe people. It will not cost much and you might possibly break the other one, in which case your machine would be tied up until you could get a new spring. I don't remember the details of taking out lost motion between the star and cam of the Pathe machine. I presume, however, the intermittent sprocket shaft runs in an eccentric bushing the same as does the Edison, Standard, Powers and Motiograph machines. Examine the bushing in which this shaft runs, and if it seems to be eccentric you certainly can find the set-screw that holds it, and have sufficient ingenuity to turn this eccentric bushing so as to tighten the star against the cam. I am not prepared to say anything about the new book just yet, except that it is one which I believe is going to make you all sit up and take notice, and one of which I may justly feel proud. Announcements will be made in due time, but it will not be ready yet for quite a while.

GREEN GLASS SHIELD.—Burlington, Vt., writes: "On page 72 of your hand-book you mention a green glass shield, designed to protect the eyes of the operator from the glare of the spot. May I ask whether or not, a green shade of gelatine bound between the two pieces of ordinary glass would serve the same purpose? It is not easy to get the green glass you speak of. I like the hand-book very much and am sorry to trouble you, as you are doubtless busy"

Never mind about my being busy, brother. That is exactly what I am here for—to answer your questions. I presume a piece of green gelatine would serve the purpose, provided it be of a light shade, though I don't know whether there will be sufficient heat to injure the gelatine or not. I will send by mail a small piece of green gelatine which I happen to have and which I think will be about right. It is the only piece of gelatine of that color I have got.

STILL GRINDS.—Wisconsin (name of town suppressed by request) writes: "I see, in the April 27th issue, you replied to my note concerning grind in our machine Many thanks for the advice given, but I don't think it is due to an old style shutter, as we are running with a three-wing shutter on the front of the machine. I tried running without the automatic shutter, but the grind was still there. Our machine is a latest type, purchased about six months ago. We have a chain drive on the take-up."

Your complaint is of such nature that I have concluded to refer the matter to the machine manufacturer. The grind might be due to any one of several causes, and I think the manufacturer would be probably more likely to locate it than could I. I am, therefore, sending them all the correspondence, and you will doubtless hear from them direct. [Later: I am advised by the manufacturer that the trouble is probably due to an old style outside shutter shaft bearing and that they will fix matters up for you.]

CONDENSERS.—New York City, contributes the following: "You recently asked us to try out the matter of placing the condenser lenses closer together, and I have done so. You said you always believed they should be close together, and right you are. But I am up against another trouble, even more serious than a ghost. When we installed our 'mirror screen' (?) ($1 worth of aluminum and $1 worth of banana oil), my amperage was reduced from 42 to 18, cutting the bill more than in half. Everything was O. K. until Mr. Aluminum got the blues—that is to say it turned blue and cracked and it was not very long doing it either. I then had a beautiful bunch of rainbows across the screen. But 18 amperes was all the manager would stand for, he claiming that the picture was all right. By following the department closely, I pick up something every week, regardless of my nine years' experience, and I have been watching closely for just such an article on condensers as appeared in the May 4 issue. I had tried every other way I knew of to stop breakage, but without result. Now instead of setting the condensers in the regular slots provided, I set them in between the slots, and it has made 50 per cent. improvement in my light. The beautiful rainbow effect has entirely disappeared. More than this, you remember what a time I had keeping a condenser from breaking? Well, this is Tuesday, 12 P. M., and the condenser put in Saturday morning is still O. K. If you can give the answer, I would like to know it."

Your letter is just a little bit mixed, New York, but I gather that your idea is that while an aluminum painted screen is fine at first, it very quickly deteriorates; that your manager has a very poor conception of what constitutes a good picture, and that bringing the surfaces of the two condensing lenses closer together has made material improvement in your curtain results, as well as reduced, if not stopped entirely condenser breakage, all of which will be of distinct interest to our readers. No, I cannot tell you why the moving of the condenser stopped the breakage. Condenser breakage is a queer and sometimes a wonderful thing. It will start without apparent reason, and will sometimes stop without any apparent reason also. At any rate I am glad to know that your troubles in that direction are over and that another soul has been made happy through the medium of the department.

THE WORD JUICE.—Princeton, N. J., writes, in expressing his best wishes for the recovery of the editor, who was recently confronted with severe mental trouble due to overwork. and contributes a clipping from "Popular Electricity," which reads as follows:

Origin of the Word "Juice."

> One theory of how the word "juice" came to be used to express electricity, current, etc., is here presented. It is said to have been originated by a Swede who was employed as a helper on a wiring job on the Pacific Coast. This was the first job where paper conduit and concentric wire was used. The job being finished, the foreman inspecting the fixtures throughout the building discovering that he could not get current to a lamp in a wall bracket, turned to the Swede, who was assisting in the inspection and instructed him to remove the canopy from the bracket and he would examine it later.
> The Swede, instead of removing the canopy, took off the socket shell and in prying around the socket with his screwdriver caused a short circuit, and as there was a defect in the concentric wire, another short developed inside the conduit. Then the arc caused the asphaltum on the conduit to melt and generate a gas, which, igniting, exploded with a terrific report. The Swede, after rubbing the dust from his eyes, and seeing the asphaltum running down the wall, remarked to the foreman: "Ay ban purdy gud lectric fallar, when ay layern aboud de lectric youice."
> From this remark the electric men took up the word juice, which has now become universal.

The clipping is reprinted for the reason that the word "juice" is very commonly used by operators, and this explanation of its origin is both laughable and interesting, whether it is correct or not. Princeton also says he has proved by experiment, to his own satisfaction, that a great deal of condenser breakage is due to the fact that the lenses, while they may have considerable play, still are too tight in their mounts. He says that considerable play does no harm, whereas a lack of considerable play at least is likely to cause trouble, in all of which he is eminently correct. The editor is recovering, thanks, and hopes soon to be able to "dig in" again, though not quite as strenuously as in the past, perhaps.

INTERMITTENT MOVEMENT WORN.—Ohio (name of town suppressed by request) writes: "I would like to know what causes a picture to appear double—that is to say, there seems to be a second picture about three-quarters of an inch below the main picture, and about one-eighth as bright. It isn't the fan, since you can set it so as to be out the other way, and the picture will still be double; besides it is not ragged like a travel ghost. Have a Powers 6 without eccentric bushings and tension adjustment. Throw, 66 feet; picture, 16 feet wide; two 7½ condensers; 40 amperes of 60 cycle 55 volt current through a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. I think it is the intermittent shaft, or sprocket, but don't see how they could produce this result."

If the picture appears thus all over, then I think it is due to the geneva, or cam, or perhaps both of them, being badly worn, and through some peculiarity of the wear the intermittent pulls the picture down a trifle more one time than it does the other three. Thus: your intermittent sprocket stops four times during each revolution of the crank shaft, each time displaying a picture on the screen. Now if it registers the same three successive times and the fourth time the film stops just the least little bit above or below its position the other three times, then you would have the effect described. The reason the secondary picture does not appear as bright as the main picture is that there are three exposures of the picture in one position to one exposure of it in the other position. I note the secondary picture appears to be three-quarters of an inch below the main picture. This would mean that the film is not pulled down quite far enough on one of the four exposures. Inasmuch you have one of the old style nonadjustable Powers machines, the only two things you could do would be (a) Get a new framing carriage complete. (b) Send the machine in for repairs. In the latter event I think a whole new framing carriage would be required, but it is best to send the machine in. I don't understand your statement that you are taking 55 volts through a compensarc. Certainly if your line voltage is only 55 there would be slight reason indeed for employing a compensarc to reduce the voltage. Possibly you mean the voltage is 55 at the arc, in which event you are in error, since it would hardly be in excess of 40 and is likely to be nearer 35. By "fan" you undoubtedly mean the revolving shutter.

MISSOURI LICENSE.—Jamesport, Mo., orders a handbook, and wants to know how a Missouri operator may obtain a license.

Frankly, Jamesport, I don't know, and will ask some of the St. Louis, or other Missouri brothers who are posted as regards the matter to reply at once, and we will publish same in the department for the benefit of all. In fact it would not be at all a bad scheme to have this kind of information from all the states. Some state governments license operators direct, whereas in other states there is no law requiring license except in the larger cities. Let us hear from you.

POWERS SIX TROUBLE.—Milledgeville, Ga., writes: "Some time ago the large guide casting, No. 684, of my Powers No. 6 broke. I ordered a new one and put it in. Since then the machine runs all right when the carriage is framed clear up, or clear down, but when it is on center there is a grinding noise, and the machine pulls hard. I have been told by another operator that the noise is caused by the gears meshing too tightly when the framing carriage is on center; also that it would not hurt the machine to run it in this way. I think, however, this is a mistake, since the gear 680, and the flywheel pinion 740, and toggle gear 678 don't seem to fit tightly together when carriage is on center, but do seem to be tight when it is at top or bottom. The machine ran perfectly until this trouble came up. I should like to know the remedy."

The operator who gave you the information was correct. It is practically impossible that the gear should be tight when the framing carriage is at the top and bottom, and not tight when it is in the center. A moment's careful examination of the relation of the parts will convince you of this fact. It will probably not injure the machine to run it thus, but it is, of course, not at all pleasant to the operator. I presume the trouble is caused by one of two things: either you have not got the casting on the frame straight, or else you have clamped it down with a little something under one edge, so that it is a trifle out of square. You can determine this latter by sighting along the three gears. If they all seem to be in line then the "something under the casting idea" does not obtain. You can understand that if the gears are out of line it would naturally cause them to grind, particularly when the carriage is in the center of its travel, and the gears at their tightest point. I think undoubtedly you will find that the toggle gear either meshes loosely with the large gear and very tightly with the flywheel pinion, or vice versa, in which case a little shifting of the guide casting on the frame would remedy the trouble. I believe this is all the advice I can offer you in the matter.

BACK UP.—La Crosse, Wis., writes: "Have you ever heard of an operator running a film through his machine backward, so as to make all moving objects move backward, as I have often seen them do in Pathe trick pictures, in which, for instance, a horse and wagon will be seen moving rapidly backward. Will you kindly explain how that particular stunt is pulled off? I am considered by some people to be an expert operator, and I am somewhat of an experimenter too, and that is just why I would like to know if this stunt has ever been accomplished by an operator, for I have done it myself just as perfectly as running through the proper way from the top magazine down to the machine to the lower magazine; but I run my machine backward, with back end of the reel coming up from the lower magazine, through the machine to the top magazine. I have made an extra attachment to do this stunt with, and it is very comical to see every moving article going backwards in its proper upright position. I believe if I should use this in my show it would be a great drawing card for my house."

Yes, La Crosse, it would be a drawing card all right, and while it grieves me to doubt your word, still I am obliged to inform you that when you ran the machine backwards and projected a film in that way, you were asleep, and peacefully dreaming. I say this because you could not have possibly done it while awake, my boy, for it could not be done, unless you place the intermittent sprocket of your machine above the tension springs. The pictures to which you refer are taken in the regular way and then they are separated from the negative and their order is reversed, thus: Supposing we take six pictures, No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, and cut these pictures apart and reverse them so that they read: 6, 5, 4, 3, 2 and 1. When run through a machine in the regular way the action will, of course, be reversed. Simple, isn't it, when one understands it? You would have had to have more than one "attachment" in order to run a film backward through a machine, since your top magazine would then have to be the take-up, and as before intimated, your tension springs would necessarily have to be below the intermittent sprocket.

NEW HOUSE.—Mr. H. Mayer, who owns three theaters in Brooklyn, each named the "Electra," one on Avenue C, one in Bay Ridge and another on Broadway, Brooklyn, has just opened a fourth house, on Broadway, Brooklyn, called the "Colonial." I had the pleasure of being present, purely by accident, on the opening night. That is to say, I was present in two ways: I was there in person and I was also in the Pathe Weekly film No. 17, which was shown at the "Colonial" that night, being the second, on the right, as you look at the screen, in the funeral procession of our former editor, J. P. Chalmers. Mr. Otto Lederer is manager of the "Colonial" and Mr. Lew Epstine is the operator. The projection was excellent and the house, which is commodious and very tastefully decorated, was full to overflowing. The admission is ten cents. Mr. Mayer has demonstrated his ability as a showman by launching three successful theaters, and we sincerely trust that his fourth venture will meet with approval by the public, and return him ample financial reward.

FLICKER.—Massachusetts (name of town suppressed by request) makes the following inquiry: "I am using a Powers 5 machine. Recently one of the directors of the company owning this theater drew the attention of the manager to the flicker in the picture. The subject I was projecting was an aquatic scene, being practically composed entirely of sky and water. It appears that the sun was very strong, striking the lens of the camera at different intervals. On being notified, I thoroughly overhauled the head and showed the picture again that evening at a 15-minute speed. A little flicker still appeared, though the other three subjects I am showing are almost perfect at an 18-minute speed. Am I right in saying the picture is in fault, or is the No. 5 absolutely flickerless, as the director says? I have operated several types of machines, but I don't claim to know it all, though I have satisfied a most strict and well posted moving picture manager for five years. Am using 30 amperes of 110 volt current on a 75-foot throw, with an 18-foot picture."

Your director is in error in supposing the Powers 5 to be a flickerless machine. It is not, nor is any two-wing shutter machine flickerless when run at normal speed. However, a very thin picture—that is to say, one very clear, such as a film composed of bright sky and water taken on a bright day—would naturally show considerably more flicker than would a denser film. Moreover, as the speed of the machine is increased the flicker will decrease, and the flicker at a 15-minute speed would be very considerably less than it would at an 18-minute speed. What we call a flicker in reality is an effect due to the fact that, with a two-wing shutter, the screen is completely dark—that is to say, there is no light on it at all twice every time a picture is exposed. In other words, the screen is alternately dark and light 32 times each second when a two-wing shutter machine is run at ordinary speed. The light effect, however, is greater in the eye than is the dark effect, and if these effects be close enough together the eye does not discern the effect of darkness at all. But if it is too far apart, then we catch the effect in the form of a flicker. Your No. 5 could be made flickerless by the addition of a three-wing outside shutter. Methods for attaching the same have been published and illustrated in the department two or three times. You will find this whole matter of flicker explained in detail on page 12 of the handbook, of which I presume you have a copy. At least you ought to have it. The price of it is $1.50, and the operator who expects to keep up with the procession, must expend a little money in perfecting himself in his business. I would strongly advise every operator to purchase one of those handbooks, not because I am its author, but because it is something you ought to have and to study.

OPERATING ROOM CHANGED.—Mr. Wm. Brown, president of the Royal Amusement Co., Perth Amboy, N. J., writes: "Referring to my letter of last week relative to long throw at the Million Dollar Pier, Atlantic City, I noticed on a visit there the other day, that they have changed the position of their operating room to one side of the hall, making the throw now about 160 feet, at an angle. I don't know the reason for the change."

The change is only temporary during the winter. The operating room (not "booth," mind you, Mr. Brown, but "room") will be changed to its original location during the summer. I don't myself know the reason for the change, and would be glad to hear from the Million Dollar Pier people, with some information regarding that 212 foot throw proposition.

GHOST.—Caruthersville, Mo., writes: "I am running the 'Dixie,' the house of quality pictures here. Business is good. Using a Powers 6 with compensarc; 65-foot throw, 15-foot picture, and 6½ and 7½ condenser. At times my operator is troubled with a dark ghost in the center of the picture. Can you suggest a remedy? My operator is a hustler and a good worker. The theater is a frame structure with a canvas top which rolls back in the summer, converting it into an airdome."

As regards the ghost: inasmuch as this trouble only occurs once in a while, I am inclined to think it is due to some little variation in the seting of the carbons—that the lower carbon is placed a little too far ahead so that its tip burns up in front of the crater so much that it shows a shadow on the screen. That is the most likely explanation. However, you might get another 7½ and another 6½ lens and try out different combinations—say two 7½ and two 6½ lenses, and if either one of the combinations eliminates "Mr. Ghost," well and good. Also try moving the lamphouse back as far as it will go, and you might also try bringing the two lenses of the condenser closer together, setting them so that their surfaces will almost touch. You can do this by blocking the front condenser back with a ring of some kind of non-inflammable material. I should think that that canvas top arrangement would, while very nice in summer, be a pretty cold proposition in the winter time.

?? ?? ??—Canton, Ohio, writes: "Have you ever heard of a picture being projected without the use of a curtain, or anything similar. A friend of mine asked me about it the other day, but I have not heard of any such stunt being pulled off. He said he saw an account of this sort of performance in a Columbus paper, and I therefore come to you for information. Seems to me there would have to be something to stop the light rays before you could get an image. What do you think about it anyway?"

I have heard nothing of any such performance. At first glance, I would pronounce it impossible, but after living through 46 years of so wonderful an age, and having seen such marvelous things come into being, I have about concluded that there is nothing impossible. Certainly there would have to be something to stop the light rays, otherwise how could you have a picture? I am inclined to believe your friend just a little bit twisted in his dates when he read the article.

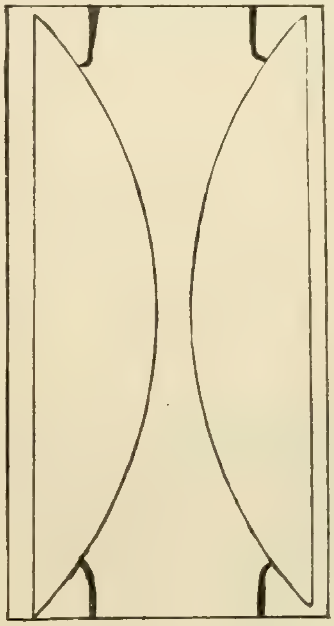
CONNECTIONS.—Millbrook, N. Y., writes: "Regarding the matter concerning which I wrote you recently, they came across with the stuff pretty quick (for them), and yesterday I got the last of it. They were to give me a flaming arc for my 'Train Robbery' film, or else return the reel within a week. After keeping the reel close to two months (he claims he never ran it through a machine during that time) it was returned yesterday with the statement that they could not procure the arc—and second-hand arcs are pretty plentiful too. I am stuck on how to make the fire shutters work on the second-hand Powers 5 they sent me. The angles on the end of the flapper-rod ought to bear against the crank extension, and thus making the flapper, or shutter, raise and lower. The crank works all right and the end of the rod works with it, but only enough to raise the shutter just a little. Should there not be a spring, or something connected with the shutter itself? I have wires connected through my machine switch as per sketch, is that right? The current is D. C. When I close the switch, and the arc is not burning, there are fireworks at the mica insulating the lamp, also smoke, and same display takes place when there is too long an arc. As I am not much of an electrician and your handbook does not say how to connect through the switch completely, I think maybe I have conneted wrong. I put vaseline and graphite all over my lamp before using, and maybe the graphite on the insulating washers formed a connection. Is graphite a conductor? The No. 6 asbestos wire gives me much trouble, as it moves the carbons out of place whenever I shorten the arc."

The matter to which Millbrook refers had to do with a certain New York City outfit sailing under the name of a film exchange. It is a regrettable fact that there are some "dealers" who are, as a matter of fact, sailing very close to the line of demarkation as between dealer and swindler. They manage, by hook or crook, to get hold of the money or goods of a small town exhibitor and the said S. T. E. can then go chase himself. The one in question had been complained of before, and I simply called him up by phone, informing him that he had better straighten the matter out, and do it quick, or I would proceed to give the exhibitors a little information concerning him through the columns of the department, and that information would be of such nature that he would not be able to practice his very questionable business methods longer. The wires are connected properly through your switch. Yes, graphite is a conductor. The direction for putting graphite on the lamp as given in the handbook is perfectly right, except that I should have said "take the lamp all apart except the insulating joints." It did not occur to me that anybody would take the insulation apart and put graphite on it. If you have done so you will have to take it apart again, and clean it thoroughly. The graphite is only intended for use on the screws, and moving parts of the lamp. It is a lubricant which cannot be burned. If your No. 6 and No. 8 wires move the carbons, then something is loose about the lamp. You should, however, pull enough of the wire inside the lamphouse to form a sort of a letter S. This will give you enough spring so that the wire ought not to affect the lamp. As to the fire shutter, there is no spring in connection with the shutter (flapper) itself, but there is one in connection with the arm or crankshaft. Very likely the parts are so badly worn that they will no longer operate. Better send the mechanism to the Powers factory for repairs.

TELEGRAPH.—Joplin, Mo., writes: "While it is out of your line maybe you will settle a dispute which I have had with another operator. Can you inform us as to which telegraph company is the largest, and has the most offices—the Postal or Western Union?"

Yes, Jopin, that is a little out of my line. In fact it is in the telegraph line, I think. However, I happen to have the data at hand. The Western Union has 24,926 offices, 219,219 miles of lines and 1,487,345 miles of wires. The Postal has 33,808 offices, 63,874 miles of lines and 390,139 miles of wires. The figures given are the best available, but I cannot myself understand how it is that the Postal, with only a small fraction of the total mileage, is credited with more offices than is the Western Union. The mileage figures are, I believe, very nearly correct. Now if any of you fellows want to know what size shoe Cleopatra wore, or any other simple little thing like that, don't be bashful—just ask your Uncle Richardson.

CONDENSER MOUNT.—Chicago, Ill., writes: "If the Doctors and Lawyers in this country would give as good advice, giving it as cheaply, and in bright readable language as you do in your handbook, and in the Projection Department, how much less trouble there would be in these United States. My condensers don't break. Four pins hold them in the mount. On one side of the mount is a door through which I roll the lenses into place, and which holds them there. Only by carelessness, draft, or excessive quick heating and cooling will my lenses break when mounted in this way. I would very much like to get one of those new books of which you speak. I note a reference to your illness, and you have the best wishes of many friends who appreciate the work you have done."



It seems to me that that condesner mount scheme of yours is good. The pins could, of course, be made very small so that they would not interfere in the light to any appreciable degree. The thing is passed on to our readers for their consideration. I have tried in the past to offer the best advice I knew, and have also endeavored to put it in readable language. I am indeed glad to know that my efforts have met with the approval of so many.

INTERESTING LETTER.—Mr. Wm. E. May, of Bartlesville, Okla., writes: "In the April 27th issue, I see you are unfavorable to the idea of belting to the flywheel of a machine. Would you kindly give a few reasons for opposing to this particular thing? I am open to conviction, but am under the impression that, on the Edison machine at least, the flywheel is by far the best place to attach the motor belt. My argument is as follows: (1) The belt can be run direct from the motor to the machine, thus doing away with heavy idlers necessary for the reduction of speed if the belt is attached to some other part of the mechanism. This is my main argument. (2) The belt wheel plan allows of a great deal finer regulation of speed. (3) There is no other shaft on the Edison machine where there would be a bearing on each side of the belt pulley, and with a bearing on only one side the strain on both the shaft and the bearings would be greatly increased, which tends to throw the other gears on the same shaft out of line. (4) My fourth reason, which is an argument against the other methods in general, is as follows: (a) On the top sprocket shaft there are two bearings of cast iron, and these bearings will not wear as well under additional strain as will the steel bearings on the flywheel spindle. Also they can be only renewed by the installation of a new casting, which would be costly, whereas new bushings are very cheap; also it would make the gear on this shaft ride too hard on the large intermediate gear as soon as the bearing becomes worn. (b) On the take-up, or lower sprocket shaft, the same argument holds good, with the additional fact that being a great deal farther between bearings, and so light a shaft, the spindle would be easily sprung; also when the bearings become worn and a new casting would be comparatively expensive. (c) The bull pinion, main driving gear of crank wheel. My objections to this are that it brings the belt too much in the way, and in case of emergency you cannot quickly put on your crank and run by hand until you can conveniently make repairs. But in the case of any of these you would lose a great deal of power in the idlers and these large heavy wheels make a quick start and stop impossible without a very large motor. Now I would like to have your reasons against the flywheel belting. I know you must have some very good ones, or you would not condemn it. Those who are running nothing but inflammable films will find that artificial banana oil (amyl acetate) thinned with ether, makes a quick cement, which will also serve for non-inflammable films, but is not satisfactory for them. Another cement which is not so good is collodion and ether. This is a very good cement for ordinary film, but it is worthless on non-inflammable. A third that is very poor cement, but one which can be used in case of emergency, is chloroform and ether. It is hard to make a patch with chloroform and ether cement, but once made the splice is very strong.

"I see that Rhode Island has trouble with a ghost. It is possible he may be able to help the trouble by putting a new adjustment on his lamp so that he can move his top carbon sidewise. This makes it possible to always keep a crater squarely facing the condenser, a thing that is somewhat difficult to do with A. C., unless one has this kind of an adjustment on his lamp. As to gelatine slides, I prefer frosted glass and Higgins ink. The writing may be removed by the use of nitric acid and wood alcohol. As to the house-light stunt describedw by Mr. Day, we have gone him one better. We put the lights under the floor. It costs practically no more, and there is no light globe in sight. We are using this scheme with entire satisfaction. Brownsville's suggestion as to two dynamos is a good one. We use a 220 volt D. C. generator (1½ K. W.) for fans, and a 110 volt D. C. (14 K. W.) generator for the arc, running the same with a three-phase A. C. motor. It is always best to have the field rheostat, volt and ammeter in the operating room. In the case of Bend, Ore., I will say that in La Grande, Ore., I pulled over 80 amperes through 25 ampere meter without burning it out, but it did not register half what was used. I also burned out a 3 K. W. transformer through this meter. I shall be very glad to hear your comment on the flywheel matter. I may be wrong, but I am from Missouri."

Insofar as the Edison machine is concerned, friend May, I am prepared to admit that there is a good deal in what you say, though I cannot agree with you as to the lower sprocket shaft, or the main driving shaft—that is to say, crank shaft. While it is true that perhaps less damage would be done by belting to the Edison flywheel than to the flywheel of any other mechanism, still it must be remembered that the flywheel is on the same shaft with the cam, and that the cam is intimately concerned with the intermittent movement, so that any wear of the bushings carrying that shaft is likely to immediately set up trouble which will show on the screen. The left bearing of the lower sprocket shaft is a wide one and would stand considerable strain, but it would be entirely practical to put in a longer shaft and put an outside bearing on it, attaching same to main frame of the machine. It is also entirely possible to put a belt wheel on the crank shaft, attaching a handle near the rim of the reel so that the machine could be run by hand, using the pulley as a crank, and that is the scheme that I would personally prefer. As against your argument of rapid wear of the cast iron bearings of the lower shaft, it must be remembered that the flywheel shaft goes around four times to every revolution of the lower sprocket shaft, hence the wear of the bearings would be much greater. You say these bearings don't cost much, but you must remember that the shaft wears as well as the bearings and that a new shaft would cost you considerable. Another scheme I have seen worked was to file out the casting between the two bearings of the upper sprocket—that is to say file it deeper down—and attach a drive pulley between the two bearings, placing the motor above the machine. I don't like this, however, for the reason that the pulley is necessarily very small in diameter, and an idler is also necessary to allow for framing. On the whole, my preference is for a belt pulley on the crank shaft, with a crank attached to the rim of the pulley. However, I will cheerfully admit that the argument against the flywheel driving is not so strong when applied to the Edison machine. The Powers and Simplex and Motiograph, however, have a special motor drive attachment, and it should by all means be used. The driving of the machine from the Powers Six flywheel is particularly bad. It sets up troubles which can be entirely avoided by using the motor drive attachment. With the Motiograph machine there is a bearing on both sides of the flywheel and perhaps less damage would be done through belting to the flywheel than with another mechanism, due to the fact that the connection to the intermittent is through a loose joint, still, belting thus would require that two slots be cut in the gear case cover, and it is much better to use the motor attachment furnished by the company. I think I have set my position forth in this matter on several occasions, and I cannot give it more space just now. As to the film cements, I will say that the formulas are of slight value, unless you give the percentage of each ingredient. While it is possible to thus overload a meter heavily without burning it out, still the chances are against it. If it is a D. C. meter the entire current must pass through the field coils. If it is an A. C. meter the motor is then an induction motor and I am not prepared to say positively just what the effect of an overload would be. You will have to explain that "lights under the floor" scheme a little more fully.

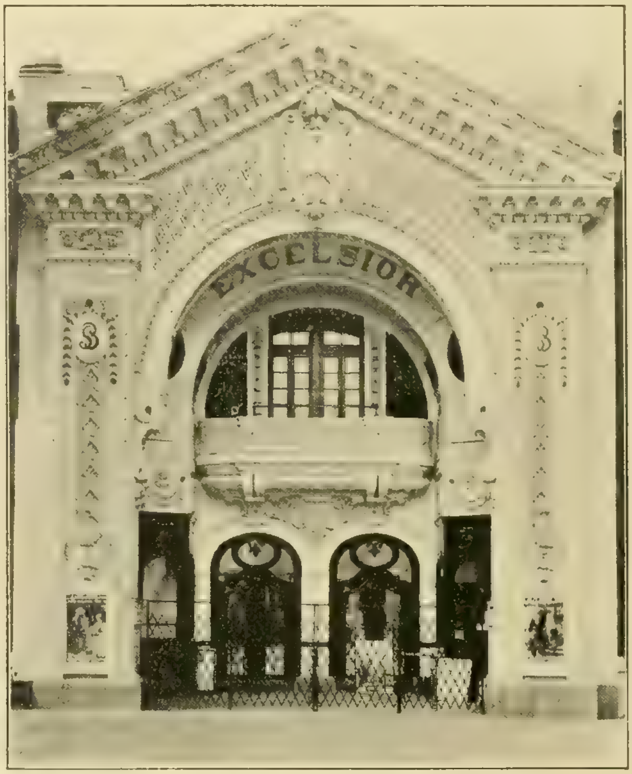
ESSANAY'S "MONTEZUMA" PICTURE.

The Essanay Company's film-masterpiece "The Fall of Montezuma," a Tale of the Conquest of Mexico, which is now in preparation and will be released in three reels, has already set the moving picture world agog with interest. Although mention has been made merely that the subject is now in the first stages of creation, scores of letters are being received from exhibitors and exchanges desiring further information about the gigantic pageant and congratulating Essanay on the stupendous undertaking. Naturally, any attempt to film the entire history of the conquest of Mexico by Cortez, which occupied the space of four long years of the most bitter strife, would be out of the question even in twenty reels, so much is there to be told. The Essanay Company is undertaking to film a series of important incidents dealing directly with the overthrow of Montezuma, also involving a pretty love story into the pageant. Every effort toward making the production absolutely correct as to historical detail is being made, and it is hoped students and close observers will find little to criticize.

HANDSOME THEATER IN BALTIMORE, MD.

We print herewith a cut of the Excelsior Theater, 1358 West North Avenue, Baltimore, Md., which house opened on July 22, 1911, and has been doing capacity business ever since. A continuous performance of licensed films and illuminated vaudeville is given from 3 to 11 p. m. The owner, Mr. Louis Benesch, spared no trouble or expense to make the building attractive and complete in all particulars. The structure is practically of fireproof material, and the appointments and fittings are modern in every detail to insure the comfort of the public.

Seating capacity for over 400 is amply provided for in a spacious hall richly decorated and illuminated in pleasing colors. The pitch of the floor is decidedly pronounced to give excellent lines of sight from every point of the house. A large balcony of a hundred seating capacity, with easy stairways, is in direct connection with the main entrance, and the stage is fitted with dressing-rooms and rest apartments.



Excelsior Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Every precaution has been taken in the construction of the machine-room, which is isolated and ventilated in such a manner as to eliminate any possible danger of fire in this part of the building. The exits are all spacious and conveniently arranged, and particular study has been given to the lines of the interior to insure good acoustic properties.

The facade on North Avenue is of bold and somewhat spectacular design, in keeping with the purpose of the building, and is treated in a pleasing color scheme of ivory, gold and green. Mr. Theodore Wells Pietsch is the architect.

NEW PICTURE THEATER CIRCUIT.

H. P. Mollere, Charles Lohmann and Victor Mollere of Hammond, La., have organized a picture theater circuit covering houses in Natchez, Laurel, Jackson, Hattiesburg, McComb and Brookhaven, Miss., and Hammond, La. The circuit has been incorporated with a capital of $40,000 and includes ten teaters. It is the intention of the promoters to extend their activities over greater territory at an early dae.

MARTIN'S FERRY, O., HAS REX THEATER.

The New Rex Theater at Martin's Ferry, O., was opened May 4th. It is owned by the Atheneum Amusement Company, which has spent $10,000 on equipment and furnishings. The house seats 552 persons. The interior decorations are said to be very ornate, and the house is believed to be the finest picture theater in the Ohio Valley.

"A CLOSE CALL" (Great Northern).

In "A Close Call" the Great Northern Film Company has a splendidly acted drama and a story with heart appeal. Mr. Deering, a business man, discovers that his affairs are going badly and is a coward. He has a lovely wife and a beautiful daughter, Edith, and he decides to end his life in preference to facing disgrace. He retires to his study and produces a revolver and begins the writing of a note. The wife, in an adjoining room, knows of the impending ruin and is endeavoring to keep up appearances for the sake of the daughter. Looking through the French window she sees her husband handling the weapon and divines his intention. She enters the room, reads the letter over his shoulder and then seizes the weapon. There is a struggle for the pistol and Edith enters. The parents, by a great effort, recover their composure, with the wife in possession of the revolver. She hastily extracts the cartridges and the girl has her attention attracted to the pistol. In the exuberance of her youthful spirits she plays with it in a dramatic manner, laughing the while, but her parents are shocked. She is taken from the room by the mother and Deering is left alone. He meditates and is then obsessed by a morbid idea. He will kill himself that he may not bear the disgrace. Mechanically he examines the weapon and then searches among his papers to find another load. When it is found he inserts it in the chamber of the weapon and lays it beside him, continuing to write.

Scene from "A Close Call" (Great Northern).

In the meantime Mrs. Deering is apprehensive and she fears the worst, but the true condition must be kept from Edith. She finally hits upon a plan and bids the girl invite her father to go for a walk. The daughter skips merrily away to enter the study of Deering and he is pained to see her. She fondles him affectionately and then espies the revolver. Before he can deter her she has the weapon and is snapping the hammer in his face. He is horrified and pursues her around the table. She finally terminates the gleeful theatricals by laughingly placing the revolver to her temple and pulling the trigger, and he falls prostrate from fear and remorse. The weapon is not discharged and the mother enters opportunely and takes the pistol from the girl. Deering is entirely cured of his suicidal attempt and resolves to face the world and retrieve his fallen fortunes, happy in the love he bears for his family.

MANY EXCHANGE MEN IN TOWN.

During the past week there have been several gatherings of Independent exchangemen in New York City, assembled for the discussion of the present Independent situation. The appearance of the Mutual Film Corporation, with a large number of exchanges throughout the middle and far West under its control, and making a strong bid for eastern exchanges, has stirred up something. Eastern manufacturers and exchanges have been busy for the past several weeks endeavoring to stem the tide of the "Western Peril." The eastern interests are said to have consolidated under the name of "Universal," and things are happening every minute.

KALEM PICTURES SOUGHT BY EDUCATORS.

The New Orleans Liberal Institute, of New Orleans, La., of which the Rev. H. Gilchrist is the director, has written to the Kalem Company asking about the pictures they are making in Egypt and the Holy Land. News of this exceptional enterprise has penetrated beyond the ranks of the moving picture exhibitor, as was anticipated, and educators generally are showing great interest in the Kalem innovation.

"Jess"

Thanhouser Does Rider Haggard's Story in Three Reels. An Ambitious Production.

"JESS," from the adventure story by H. Rider Haggard, is now a Thanhouser "classic." It is in three remarkable reels. The sun-kissed sands of Africa fairly glisten and the desert winds whirl almost out of the picture and around the spectators. Such an exhibition of realism, fidelity to nature and stirring character portrayals are rarely seen on the screen. "Jess," sympathetic, heroic, self-sacrificing, makes an appeal such as is difficult to shake off. She worms her way gradually but irresistibly and stands out in relief, a noble martyr to love and self-sacrifice. The exhibition of pantomime in portraying these varying emotions and characteristics is a revelation.

The title role is taken by Marguerite Snow. Flo La Badie plays the sister, Bess. James Cruize is powerful in the part of Captain John Neil, the Englishman, and William Russell gets real hatred from you as Muller, the treacherous Boer. Miss Snow and Mr. Cruze seem to take their lives in their hands in the scene depicting their escape from Muller through the ford. The wagon in which they cross the stream is overturned by the strong current and Mr. Cruze pulls Miss Snow out from under the vehicle just in the nick of time, and swims with her to safety. It is a deed of daring that is not encountered in the motion pictures every day.

The subject is so filmed that the love story of "Jess" and "Neil" is given in the first reel, which is released May 21st, and the story of their wartime adventures appears in the second and third reels, which issue the Tuesday following May 28th. The fire scenes in the latter portion of the picture, showing the destruction of Silas Croft's home, are very realistic; they are on a par with the fire scenes in "Flames and Fortune," the house-burning Thanhouser sensation of last year.

The picture takes on its highest degree of interest when Muller, whom Jess had rejected, is shown plotting the destruction of Jess and the man she loves, Neil. It is here that the over-turned wagon figures. Jess and Neil are on their way to Pretoria, under official Boer protection supposedly, when Muller tricks the escort into thinking that Oom Paul Kruger wishes the couple killed. Crossing the stream, the Boer escort fire upon the pair and it is in the attempt to evade the musketry that the incident of the overturned cart occurs.

Jess and Neil become separated and the girl reaches the farm of Croft, her uncle, alone. There she finds that the villain Muller has been ahead of her, and that her uncle is a prisoner on a charge of treason. Muller, who is military head of the districts, tells Bess that Croft will be convicted and hanged unless Bess consents to marry him. The girl, however, refuses; the court-martial is held and, when Jess arrives, her uncle is under sentence to die at dawn, a few hours away.

There is no one to whom she can appeal, and Jess, grief-stricken, decides to be her own avenger. And vengeance is hers in a way that is highly dramatic and highly moving-picturesque. The whole story is full of life and movement and holds the spectator's interest every minute.

DASTARDLY MURDER IN AMERICAN'S WESTERN STUDIO.

A terrible thing has happened in the Western studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company, at La Mesa, Cal. A murderer walks those placid avenues—a killer whose soul reeks to high heaven of dastardly deeds. Read the pitiful details of one outrage as handled feelingly by the soft-hearted editor of the La Mesa Scout:

"There is a class of beings that wear the habiliments of men and perhaps mingle with true ladies and gentlemen, that are devoid of all human characteristics. Vicious and cowardly, afraid to come out in the open with their meanness, they are worse than rattlesnakes who will sound a warning before they strike. La Mesa is evidently harboring a vampire of this class now. The fiend is scattering poison about our streets, never caring if it is found by innocent family pets. The American Film Manufacturing Company's family pet mascot, "Puddles," became a victim of this fiend's operations last Thursday. He is now dead. "Puddles" was much loved in La Mesa and was known as the $2,000 dog, for having carried each week the company's pay-roll."

Warren Kerrigan, the dog's owner, is anxious to meet the man who did it.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"CURFEW SHALL NOT RING TO-NIGHT" (Reliance).

There are many popular classic poems such as "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-Night" which should be done in moving picture form. Perhaps the reason that such things have not been done before is because each one waits for someone else to do it. The semi-classics, together with the nursery rhymes, "Arabian Nights" and all such perennial juvenile fiction, will probably have to be preserved in the future as they have been in the past, and it devolves upon moving pictures to do their share in that conservation, which no doubt they will do in a far better way than we of an older generation had the pleasure to enjoy. We love to hear the old songs when they are well sung, and we love to hear the old stories when they are well told. Hal Reid seems to have realized this, and his second offering as the Reliance producer is the visualization of the well-known poem so often recited in schools, entitled "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-Night."

Scene from "Curfew Shall Not Ring To-Night" (Reliance).

A story to endure must be a good story. All the old stories that have survived and come down to us have lived because they possess some great intrinsic merit, which at the same time is usually simple, and often the greatness of an old story lies in its simplicity and its bearing upon humanity.

The story of "Curfew" tells of a soldier who deserted his post during wartime to keep a tryst with his sweetheart. Having left his post of duty, he was considered to be a deserter and was court-martialed forthwith. The soldier was condemned to die. His sweetheart endeavored to intercede for him with the commanding officer, but the commander was firm and austere. To set the soldier free would have been a bad example; therefore he was condemned to die at the ringing of the curfew bell. Having exhausted all means of securing a pardon for her lover, the maiden resorted to a last desperate chance, which, though seemingly futile, was a chance. She climbed to the belfry of the tower where the curfew bell hung, and there by hanging upon its huge clapper prevented it from sounding when the old deaf bell-ringer came to ring the parting day. The bell-ringer had officially rung the bell and yet it had not sounded. Therefore the young soldier waiting to be shot was legally dead, although he still lived, when the old sexton had finished his work. Such is the story of "Curfew," simple and broad with its complete and logical claim upon human interest.

This picture shows an improvement in photography and stagecraft over many previous Reliance releases, and is well worthy of a place on any programme, whether it be a school, church, or photoplay theater.

EDISON MEMORIAL DAY PICTURE.

Under the title of "The Sunset Gun" from a story by Banister Merwin, the Edison Company will release a high class Memorial Day subject. This is probably one of the most touching of G. A. R. pictures that has been released in some time. The story centers about an aged veteran of the Civil War. As Memorial Day approaches he prepares to join the parade, but his physical condition prevents. Although very feeble the old fellow pulls himself together and stands at a salute as the little band of Grand Army men march by on their way to the cemetery. Sinking into his chair he drops asleep and dreams of battles fought and won. These scenes appear in the picture in startling reality. But the excitement of the occasion is too great for the old veteran, and as the final scene, the firing of the sunset gun and the hauling down of the colors, is shown, the spirit of the brave old veteran passes on to the last roll call.

Scene from "The Sunset Gun" (Edison).

Returning from the ceremonies at the grave of fallen comrades, the members of the Grand Army post and the family of the old veteran find him in peaceful repose. The subsequent discovery that it is his last sleep makes a powerful appeal to the sympathies. The picture will undoubtedly prove a strong feature.

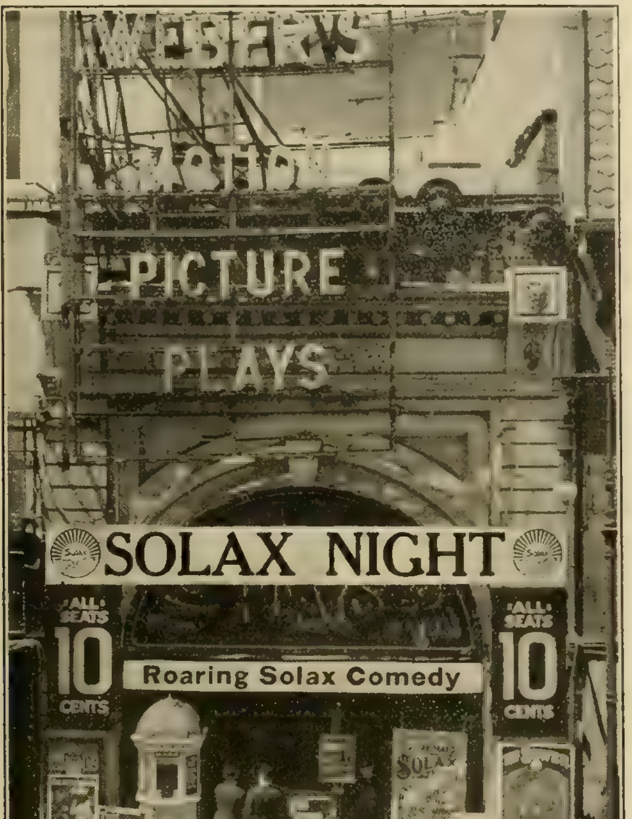
MARIAN SWAYNE IN STOCK.

Miss Marian Swayne, for some time past ingenue of the Solax Company, has resigned to take a position in summer stock at Syracuse, New York. Miss Swayne is a young woman of charming personality, and is fast becoming a favorite with the moving picture fans.

SOLAX NIGHT ON BROADWAY.

Weber's Theater, the new independent motion picture theater on Broadway, showing first run pictures, featured a Solax night on the evening of Friday, May 3rd. Many notables in the film industry were present and saw exhibited an exclusive Solax program. The films shown were "The Sewer," which had a return engagement at this house, "Falling Leaves," "The Animated Bathtub," "The Reformation of Mary" and "A Question of Hair."

Madame Alice Blache, President of the Solax Company, and a number of her friends occupied a box. The members of the Solax Stock Company were there, including Edward Warren, the Director, and Mr. Harry Harvey, his assistant. Mr. Warren spoke in behalf of the Solax Company, and Billy Quirk. Darwin Karr and Blanche Cornwall appeared in person after the pictures.



Weber's Theater, "Solax Night."

Darwin Karr, who is the Solax leading man, told of his picture experience, his trips to Flushing and his adventures on the Flushing cars. Among other things, he said that when he starts out in the morning with a clean shave, he usually looks like Rip Van Winkle when he arrives in Flushing. He made a hit with the audience with some camera business. He told them he would take their picture, and while fussing with the focus, he let drop some gems of motion picture information. Billy Quirk, the inimitable comedian, also appeared and was a hit from start to finish. He has an entertaining act and kept the audience in a merry mood every minute of the time he was on the stage. He was given a fine reception. The small boys in the audience beheld Billy with the awe and reverence they usually behold ball players or prize fighters. A number of them volunteered to carry his coat and cane. They wagered with each other on his height, his weight, the number of pictures he poses in each week, whether he was a greater man than Roosevelt, or whether he made more money than Taft.

Mr. Karr received the same attentions from the youngsters. They marvelled at his heroism in facing the onslaught of rats in "The Sewer," and worshiped him for his kindness to young Oliver in the story. He made a hit with them by explaining how terrible was his ordeal in the staggering and nauseating sewer environs.

"THE COUNTING OF TIME" (Nestor).

"Right Is Might" is forcibly shown in the Nestor release of May 13th, entitled "The Counting of Time." As a diversion from the regular run of love stories, this splendid Nestor production shows us instead the struggle of two brothers with equal opportunities starting out to battle life together. Jack Conway, Nestor's leading actor, portrays the character of one of the brothers, and Harry TenBrook depicts the other brother. Jack Conway's rendition of the brother whose ambition it is to become a lawyer, is splendid, while Harry Ten-Brook, as the brother with pugilistic tendencies, is also worthy of praise.

Scene from "The Counting of Time" (Nestor).

The young law student spends his evenings in his room studying while his brother attends an athletic club. One splendid scene is shown in the courtroom, where we observe Jack striving to win his first case, but to no avail, while the camera hastily takes us to the scene of a boxing bout in which the brother is fighting for the championship. He wins, but, intoxicated by his success and the admiration of his friends, he is tempted to become a "good fellow," which inevitably causes his downfall, for he cannot stand the pace at which he is going. So, when the time comes for him to fight to retain the championship, he finds his strength gone and the fight is lost.

Jack, in the interim, has not lost heart, and diligently studies his lawbooks. An opportunity presents itself to him in the shape of another case, and his perseverance has stood him in good stead, for his efforts are rewarded. And the last we see of Jack he is successfully carrying on his career as a lawyer while his brother, broken in spirit and health, makes his way back to the little country town, a sadder but wiser young man.

The photography in this Nestor production is excellent and the backgrounds for the scenes have been chosen so well as to give the picture that degree of realism usual with Nestor.

RESULTS FROM HALLBERG ECONOMIZERS BEAR FRUIT.

King & Rosen, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., have just ordered from Hallberg "The Economizer Man," one of the Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizers, which makes the third set for that city. Lyric Theater, Waterbury, Conn., is installing Hallberg 220-volt D. C. Economizer. Thos. Lewers, Bensonhurst, L. I., bought of Hallberg two Simplex M. P. machines with Hallberg Cooper-Hewitt Mercury Arc Rectifier. Mr. Hallberg also reports sale of two Powers No. 6 M. P. machines to Chas. P. Gilmore, Oswego, N. Y., and one Powers No. 6 to J. J. Ryan, Susquehanna, Pa.

LE SOIR BACK FROM NEW ORLEANS, LA.

George Le Soir, who has been directing the work of the Kalem Players at New Orleans, La., returned to New York with the company last week. Mr. Le Soir spent several very profitable months in New Orleans and produced a number of very excellent pictures. We understand that he is at liberty for other engagements.

"HER MUSIC MASTER" (Lubin).

"Her Music Master" is a photoplay to be released by the Lubin Company about the end of May. The story as read is at once a dramatic and pathetic situation, which occurs only too often in society life where young folks are betrothed by their parents, from their viewpoint, instead of the choice of the man and woman who have to live together for life, or become victims of scandal and the divorce court. It does not follow that either party to the contract is unworthy, but the love spark has not kindled; perhaps in after years it will, perhaps it never will, and in the later case two lives drag along in indifference and toleration. Such stories have been told by Sardou, Ibsen and Tolstoi and are always dear to the feminine heart. Valmar, Vicomte de Soigny and Georgette Bourcet are married, but not at the time mated. It was a pity because both were worthy, but young people do not love simply for worth; beauty and accomplishment must help out, at the beginning at least. Later, perhaps, the conservative mind wakes up to the fact that they really do love, but have not realized it. A good old music master, who is Georgette's tutor, brings about the grand issue of the story and receives the gratitude of both husband and wife, who have at last discovered the philosopher's stone.

Scene from "Her Music Master" (Lubin).

PHOTOPLAYER POSTERS.

The Exhibitors' Advertising and Specialty Company, 30 Union Square, report that their set of photoplayer posters of popular film favorites has met with great success, hundreds of these sets having eagerly been bought up by the exhibitors throughout the country; as they have now contracted to make them up in large quantities, they secured a much lower price from their lithographers, and are going to give the Exhibitors the direct benefit of same by reducing the price of the complete set of ten from $2.00 to $1.50. For the benefit of those Exhibitors who have not already seen them, a brief description follows: They come in the standard one sheet size (28 inches by 42), handsomely lithographed in colors, and set consists of ten of the most popular players appearing in American productions, among whom may be mentioned John Bunny, Maurice Costello, Florence Turner, Alice Joyce, Gene Gauntier, Arthur Johnson, G. M. Anderson, Mary Fuller and other favorites.

This concern announces for a limited time they will prepay postage on all orders for the complete set of ten for $1.50, where cash accompanies the order.

IMPROVED PROJECTION FOR AIRDOMES.

Airdomes have not been very popular because they are a rather risky proposition. Under the present projecting conditions, an airdome cannot be used for pictures during the day and as, in July and August, the sun does not go down much before 8 p. m. the show time is too limited to be profitable, especially when the manager has to count on some rainy evenings.

J. M. Bradlet, 167 W. Washington St., Chicago, has devised a new arrangement in projection, by which it is possible to show a bright and clear picture in daylight and make the airdome a profitable investment.

Mr. Bradlet's model, inspected at the World office, Chicago, showed simplicity of arrangement and surprising results.

AMERICAN AND ESSANAY FORCES PLAY TIE BALL GAME.

Office, production and factory forces of the American Film Manufacturing Company, and the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, lined up on Saturday afternoon to demonstrate the baseball supremacy of Chicago film makers. The supremacy was not demonstrated, however, as the game was called by the police at the end of the seventh inning, with the score standing 8 to 8. Lest this statement be taken in a vulgar sense, we make haste to add that the police interference was entirely pacific and intended only to clear the diamond for another scheduled game. Essanay started scoring in the first inning with one run. In the third inning the score favored the Americans 6 to 1, but, by good pitching and excellent hitting, Essanay managed to place the odds in their favor at the end of the sixth inning, 8 to 6. In their last half of the seventh, the Americans tied this up, making the final 8 to 8. Oscar Swanson pitched for the Americans, while Al Haines did noble heaving for Essanay. A. L. Randall, factory superintendent, held down first base for the Americans, while Frank X. Bushman, leading man for Essanay, occupied a similar place for the opposition. A second game will be played on Saturday afternoon, at which time it is hoped the better team will show itself.

THE MISSING YEARS.

There are a thousand ways of killing time, but a more ingenious method of destroying years has not been evidenced in all the history of moving pictures than is illustrated in "Lost Years," the Rex production of Thursday, May 16th. En passant, the production in question has a few more, equally effective claims for fame, as will develop a minute later.

The tale is woven about the love romance of a wealthy politician's daughter and an officer of the navy. Forced to depart for Europe, a few days before the wedding date, he sends a wireless from the ship upon which he is returning, that he will arrive "Thursday, two o'clock." But the ship caught fire and sank, presumably with all on board. When the girl heard the tragic news, a merciful fate robbed her of her senses; but one thought was fastened on her shattered mind, that at two o'clock he would be there to claim and wed her.

Every day for years she dressed in her bridal gown, waiting for two o'clock. And every day her parents turned the clock back.

In the meantime, we have learned that the man drifted on a raft until he reached a desert island somewhere in the South Seas. The sea tossed him his sustenance, and for years he eked out a Robinson Crusoe existence, continually and eagerly waiting and watching for a passing sail. He tossed cocoanuts into the sea, with a message inside them of identity and whereabouts, and after an eternity he was rescued.

At two o'clock he returned, explained and learned all. Time had not laid its icy fingers on the heart or soul of the girl. She had merely been minus the years. To-day was ten years ago and ten years ago was now.

Not alone is the tale unusual and startling in its novelty and daring, but the effects utilized in the production are of an entirely thrilling and extraordinary nature. A real wireless room with a real wireless apparatus and a real wireless operator, a blazing ship, sinking into the murderous sea, and sure-enough cocoanuts occasion a few gasps and thrills such as nothing but intrinsic realism can invite.

The exhibitors will not "lose time" in commending the production.

A ROYAL SLAVE.

In the old days of knights and fairy princesses and bold Prince Charmings and royal splendor, in the yesterday of dolce far niente and romance and chivalry, there have been, and even to-day there are, many silly little girls who wished they were princesses. But —did the thought ever strike you that there may have been as many princesses who wished their father had not been a king? It occurred to the Rex Motion Picture Company, and as a result, they have produced "What Avails the Crown," released Sunday, May 19th.

"What Avails the Crown" depicts the golden sorrow of the crown worn by a sweet little girl who was—human, and therefore didn't care to marry the prince selected by her father just because it was good politics. She ran away and lived with the people—lived and loved as only the simple can and do.

Then she became queen—and aware of her duty. So she stifled the cry of her heart and bartered her love for the glory of her state.

The reserve, renunciation, reverence and repression that characterize the tale are indelibly impressed on the mind and portrayed with unusual skill and delicacy.

Los Angeles News.

Interesting Budget of Information from the Great California Producing Center.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., is soon to have a motion picture theater built, owned and managed entirely by women and operated for women and children. Mrs. Hester Grant Giles, a wealthy woman with ideas, is the originator of the project. She has already leased an expensive frontage on Broadway just at the edge of the shopping district, and architects are preparing plans for a model theater. The estimated cost of the building is $80,000, but there will be more capital available if necessary. The house is to have a seating capacity of 350 and there are to be a number of features which are expected to make a special appeal to women and children—conveniences and comforts usually neglected in such theaters.

"The idea first occurred to me when I visited a local picture theater and was displeased with the subjects exhibited," Mrs. Giles explains. "They seemed so crude, so badly selected, so inartistic. I happened to know that many of the compaines put out really praiseworthy reels, but few of them seem to get as far as Los Angeles. It seemed to me that if we had a theater owned and managed by and for women, subjects of special interest to the feminine sex could be shown. I saw some of my friends about it and they were all so enthusiastic that I have definitely decided to give the plan a trial. The films we shall show at the new theater—which will be called the Los Angeles Women's Photoplay Theater—will embrace scenic, educational and travel subjects and a few high-class comedies. Only the pictures which have real educational or artistic value will be run. Films of the current fashions, such as are being shown in Parisian theaters, will be shown each week."

The municipal board of motion picture censors, created by ordinance of the city council several months ago, is finally ready for business. The five members have been appointed by the mayor, and the council has rented a motion picture theater in which the board will hold its sessions at least twice a week, sitting in judgment on all the new releases. The theater is the Arrow Theater, located on one of the upper floors of the largest department store in the city. It will be used exclusively by the board, although it is fully equipped for regular performances. The ordinance which created the body provided also that the names of all films, together with scenarios of the photoplays, must be filed with the board at least three days before they are publicly exhibited. Meanwhile, the board, if it sees fit, may call for any film and view it. The board is not obliged to view every film, however. It has power under the ordinance to forbid the exhibition of any film which is considered unfit, for moral reasons or for reasons of public policy, for public exhibition. The board is really an adjunct of the police commission, from which it draws its powers. The members, who serve without pay, are Mrs. E. K. Foster, chairman; Miss Emma Bumiller, secretary; Rev. Stanley H. Fisher, Ralph C. Daniels and A. P. Tugwell, the last two representing the film manufacturers and the exhibitors.

The Los Angeles Tribune recently featured a story describing the manufacture of a moving picture film showing how sugar is manufactured from beets. The pictures have just been taken at Santa Ana, one of the suburbs of Los Angeles, in the heart of the sugar-beet growing belt of Southern California. They will show the unbroken ground, the plowing, the planting, the crop in its various stages of growth, the harvesting, the transportation of the beets to the factory and the various stages through which they pass, including the packing of the finished product. Beet sugar manufacture is becoming one of the important industries of the state. The name of the company which is making the pictures was omitted, but it is understood to be the Pacific Motion Picture Co.

The Los Angeles police department held its annual review at Fiesta Park this week before a crowded grandstand and bleachers. The thing that seemed to interest the crowd more than the drills of the patrolman, the mounted police, the motorcycle squads, and the battery of patrol wagons and ambulances, was the activity of the camera men of the Selig Polyscope Co., who took a series of views.

BRADY MOVES AGAINST "TRILBY" PICTURES.

William A. Brady elsewhere issues a warning to picture houses against showing the film of "Trilby," announced for release by the Standard Theater Film Co., of London. Mr. Brady owns the stage rights to "Trilby" and is protected by copyright in America. The work is not copyrighted in England, but Mr. Brady promises to vigorously prosecute any infringements in this country, and has notified the sentinels of the American Producing Managers' Association to keep watch for this film and prepare evidence wherever it may be exhibited.

COCHRANE WITH KINEMACOLOR.

T. L. Cochrane, until recently general manager of the Majestic Film Company, has resigned that position to take charge of the production of pictures for the Kinemacolor Company. Mr. Cochrane is now on the job making all preliminary arrangements and expects to be ready to turn out dramatic and comedy subjects in color, within a month or so.

"HAMFAT'S SUCCESS" (Eclair.)

It has been the pleasure of Eclair to stage and depict the real life of the "ham actor" and in "Hamfat's Success," released Thursday, May 30, the Fort Lee producers have brought forth a rollicking laugh-starter, which will make friends not only with the professionals in the audiences—and there are lots of them—but with the great mass of Americans who realize how hard is the road to success for the Shakespearean gentlemen who brave the vicissitudes of Canal Dover, Gallipolis, Keokuk, and all the other tank-towns which try the soul of Thespians. Mr. Hamfat is an actor of the old school, who has failed to gain that gilt-edged success which is the aim of every denizen of the Rialto. He applies to Manager K. E. Frobert and is rebuffed for the ninety-ninth time. In despair, he returns to his boarding house, where Mrs. Grump hurries out for an avenging policeman to aid in the collection of a six-weeks' rent bill. In despair Mr. Hamfat drapes his statuesque figure in a "rube" costume, which he finds in a costume trunk, and he sallies forth, escaping the vengeful policeman, and bringing upon himself the jibes and jeers of an unsympathetic populace along the Gay White Way.

While carefully stowing away a roll of stage money, he attracts the attention of two greengoods men, and at the same time the warning of a benevolent policeman. The swindlers believe that they have struck "easy money," and they invite the supposed "rube" into a cabaret show in a nearby hotel, that they may spread their web over him the more! Hamfat agrees: it has been so long since he has had a real meal that he will hardly recognize it; yet they go on, order a splendid repast, and the result is that they drink not wisely but too well. Hamfat—apparently overcome by the libations, agrees to share their pool on some wildcat mine stock. But, it happens that the manager, with his fair stenographer, has come to the cabaret to dine. He recognizes Hamfat, and when the actor finally eludes his companions, to rush back to the boarding house to pay his bills—on money skillfully obtained from the swindlers—the manager sends a message to Hamfat: "Give up Shakespeare and come with me in comic opera to make your fortune." And so it is that the actor lands on his feet at last, in a way which will thrill his audiences with his merry jokes and the quick-witted turns which bring his fortune to him. It is a satisfactory comedy, which teaches the greatest of all lessons—optimism and sticking-to-it!

"THE SHERIFF'S ROUND-UP" (Nestor).

"The Sheriff's Round-Up," to be released on May 15th, is a truly Western story. It is splendidly staged, with beautiful exterior settings, and the acting of Mr. Jack Conway as the young man from the East is excellent. The story is interesting. A young man accepts a position in the West as the cashier of a bank and on his arrival at his destination is intercepted by a young man who professes friendship for him. He accompanies the friendly young man to his home, where he is offered wine, and it is there that the motive of the newly-found friend is made clear. Some splendid acting is done by Mr. Conway when he succumbs to the drug which has been placed in the wine, after endeavoring in vain to fight off the effects of the drug. The unconscious young man is relieved of his letters, etc., and on his returning to consciousness finds himself a prisoner.

In the meanwhile, his captor presents himself at the bank, representing himself to be the young man from the East. The letters, in the form of credentials, are accepted and he is granted access to the vaults of the bank. The character of this imposter is very well handled by Mr. George Fields.

While feigning sleep, the young man from the East overhears a plot to rob the bank, and awaiting his opportunity overpowers his guard and makes his way to the office of the sheriff, reaching the bank just a minute too late. Several splendid scenes follow, showing the automobile with the pursuers in it following the men over the bills and finally by a clever ruse locating their hiding place. And we see the sheriff's posse leading the thieves back to town, where we know that justice will be meted out to them.

AN APPRECIATIVE READER.

Editor of Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir:—I wish to say a word against a habit which I feel is absolutely useless. I trust I am not out of order, and if anything can be done to remedy the evil, I for one would be more than grateful. Why is it that many good, excellent industrials or travalegues are tacked on to such nonsensical, untrue and useless attempts at comedy? The one last night seemed the limit. "Logging," by the Pathe Company, was fine, great, every foot of film interesting. Yet "Mother-in-law Stung on Hypnotism," was disgusting. This has happened so very often that we now cut off the comedy in many cases, using but 500 feet of the 1,000. That seems hardly fair.

Regarding the advertising—by the way, not one word of your magazine escapes me—I get so many good ideas. May I state what we find to be our best advertising? Just as soon as I see a picture of literary or historic value is released, I send a little note to the principals of our different schools. They then take up the study and by the time we book the film the children have so advertised the picture that just a short write-up in our local paper under our own heading—"This Week at the Dream," fills our house. I also have a "story hour" for the children of our town from the first to the fifth grade. Either some minister will tell the Biblical story, such as "Joseph in Egypt," or one of the teachers, and occasionally I tell a story, but I try not to bring myself forward whenever I can get anyone else to do it. At their story hours given in the afternoon, the film is shown in the evening, perhaps the violin teacher will give the children a selection. The vocal teacher will sing a child's song. We vary the program as much as possible and try to enlist as many good people of the town as possible in the work. They then feel a personal interest in our house. Without doubt the children are the advertisers.

Your projection department is of inestimable value to me. The comments of the films are also good. I would wish them to state a little more plainly the character of the film, for instance, in this little "country" town, we dislike to show our young girls that well-dressed, apparently well-mannered young girls and boys drink intoxicating liquors in each other's company, and it is all perfectly proper; also cigarette smoking. Of course we know it is done, but that seems to be the most criticized thing in our pictures. We have very few cowboy or Indian films unless they are carefully reviewed and well spoken of in your comment page.

I truly cannot express the value your magazine is to us. I do not see how anyone can get on without it.

If under the Moving Picture Educator Department a sort of synopsis of what the film really showed, would help very much in preparing a story or outline of the study preparatory to seeing the film. "Saul and David," in the April 13th issue, is a good example of what I mean, only more of it. I trust I have not tired you with all these suggestions. Again let me thank you for giving to the exhibitors such a valuable and comprehensive magazine.

Very truly, M. G. BROMLEY.

Simplex The Peer of All Moving Picture Machines

NEW YORK MANAGERS SAY:

The machine has given entire satisfaction, and we will soon need more machines for our other theaters.
ARTHUR S. WHITE, Manager Moving Picture Department, Percy G. Williams Circuit of theaters.

I am so pleased with the result that I shall install another Simplex machine in place of one of another make.
WM. J. GANE, Manhattan Theater.

We consider it far ahead of any other machine, and have since put them in our other theaters. WALTER ROSENBERG, Savoy Theater.

So well pleased am I with our "Simplex" that I would not give one screw of it for any other entire machine on the market.
HARRY LEVINE, Manager, Riverside Theater.

Its precision in construction is such that it stands up to the excessive hard work, and we have no more annoying breakdowns.
E. STERN, Proprietor, Bleecker Theater.

The new "Simplex" projector is undoubtedly the best machine we have ever operated.
E. J. CRANE, Eden Musee.

After using the other machines, I cheerfully state that the "Simplex" is decidedly the best.
W. D. KOLLE, Prospect Hall, Brooklyn.

It is the best we have ever used and we have ordered two more for our other theaters.

ECLIPSE.

HER BETTER NATURE (May 22).—Deceived in his hope of a rich marriage, George Marson heartlessly recalls his promise to Jane Fisher. This, followed by her father's financial ruin and sudden death, compels her to earn her own living; and she therefore becomes a nurse.

Three years later she is assigned to care for a very sick child. She soon discovers that the child is the son of her former fiance, and a terrible thought of revenge flashes through her mind. But her better nature conquers, and she cares for him in her usual efficient manner.

In the evening George and his wife enter the room, and the former sweethearts meet face to face. Suspiciously he asks her if she has done her duty. She coldly replies in the affirmative, and leaves the room without accepting his proffered thanks, thus proving that while she will do her duty she cannot forgive the past.

THE JUMPING CHAMPION, MAC MORELAND (May 22).—Showing his wonderful vaulting feats. He easily jumps over an automobile, and then squads of soldiers drawn up in different positions.

ESSANAY.

A WESTERN LEGACY (May 21).—Walter Johnson, a young college chap in the East, receives word that he has been left a legacy of one million dollars by an eccentric uncle, providing he marries the old fellow's niece who lives in Mustang, Arizona. At the same time the niece, Alice Perkins, a pretty Western girl, gets word of a million left to her by her late uncle if she will marry his nephew from Boston. Now Walter doesn't care a hang about marrying someone he has never seen, neither does Alice. So Walter dons the disguise of a foppish dude, hikes out to Mustang, secures the address of Alice and prepares to sicken her of his make-up. But Alice, in the meantime, has decided to play the same joke on her "intended," takes her parents into the scheme and all have rigged themselves out as a family of most ferocious Westerners, picking their teeth with bowie-knives and whanging at everything with six-shooters. Therefore, when Walter calls, he is dumfounded and soon takes to his heels, at the smell of powder. Getting out of his make-up, Walter sends a note to Alice that he wouldn't marry her with ten million, then starts for the train. Now Alice has removed her make-up and has gone up the trail, when she is suddenly confronted by a ruffian who tries to steal a kiss. Walter is just leaving the little hotel, when he hears screams, hastens up the trail and is just in time to kick the loafer on his way, reassures Alice, hands her his card and starts on for the train. Neither has recognized the other. Alice watches him out of sight, then one look at the card identifies Walter as her "intended" from Boston. Consequently, Walter is stopped by Alice as he is boarding the train, identifications are disclosed and—to be sure, the train slips away while plans for an early wedding are being earnestly discussed.

A GOOD CATCH (May 23).—Frank and Beverly are sweethearts. Beverly, however, has a craving for taxies and similar luxuries, while Frank earns a "coffee and ——" salary. He is forced to refuse to hire Beverly a taxi one day, and she goes home in disgust. Seeing he cannot make her happy, Frank writes and breaks their engagement. A few days later he is overjoyed at receiving word that a kind benefactor has died and bequeathed him a legacy. In his zeal to reach the lawyer, Frank is arrested for a diamond thief and has an awful time before he is released. But he is bitterly disappointed to find the legacy is only a photo of the old man, his benefactor. Seeing an ad in the paper, Frank now sends the photo as a surprise package for the "fishing pond" of a church bazaar. Fate now takes a hand and Beverly hooks the photo that night and recognizes it as her deceased Uncle John Ross. Smothering her pride she goes to Frank, shows him the photo and he tells her how he came to get it. Suddenly Frank has an idea! Maybe Uncle John has left a fortune for Beverly in the care of the lawyer! To think is to act and they hasten to old lawyer Winner, explain matters, he looks up the records and discovers Beverly is indeed the lost heir of Ross' fortune. Consequently Beverly agrees to share the fortune with Frank for life, and they ride in taxies now, morning, noon and night.

DETECTIVE DOROTHY (May 24).—The Widow Martin, wretchedly poor, allows her little girl, Dorothy, to be adopted into a wealthy family. The child is loaded with luxuries by the kind people, but strangely enough is unhappy and longs for her real mamma. Meanwhile, the widow vainly tries to find employment, but none is to be had. Returning to her poor hovel one day she sees a sign tacked on a tree, reads it and learns that $5,000 reward is offered for the capture of Jim Bradley, a notorious murderer. With a deep sigh at the thought of such a fortune, and how little chance she would ever have to share in it, the widow stumbles on. On the avenue, little Dorothy is taken for an airing by the maid, and, seeing her opportunity, suddenly runs away while the maid is talking with a friend. Meanwhile, Bradley, the murderer, is leading the police a merry chase and finally takes refuge in flight up a fire-escape that leads to the Widow Martin's rooms. Here he finds the widow's clothing, dons them as a disguise, leaves the house before the detectives' very eyes and is on his way to safety when little Dorothy meets him on the street. Recognizing the clothes, and believing the figure to be her mother, Dorothy stops Bradley and clamors for attention. Vainly Bradley tries to drive her away, excites the suspicion of a passing patrolman, a struggle ensues and Bradley is arrested. Once at the station, he is identified and little Dorothy is lauded for making the capture possible. An hour later Dorothy is returned to the widow and is rewarded with a check for the $5,000 by the chief of police, ending all poverty and restoring complete happiness.

THE DESERT SWEETHEARTS (May 25).—Jim Morris, a young prospector, plans a trip into the great desert to search for gold. Before he leaves, Morris places an engagement ring on the finger of Mary, his sweetheart, and she promises to await his return. Two months later Jim befriends another young prospector, whose water supply has given out, and learns he is returning after a fruitless search for gold-ore. Jim now shows him Mary's picture, writes her a letter and Wells promises to deliver it for him. However, Wells falls in love with Mary and, as the weeks go by, they become good friends. At length Wells wins her consent to give up Jim and go with him. Leaving a note for Jim when he returns, Mary goes with Wells back into the desert. Later, Jim returns and discovers the situation. Heart-broken, he returns into the "land of dead things" to fight it out alone. Meanwhile, Wells loses his way in the trackless sands and he and Mary have but one canteen of water left. A few hours later the last drop only remains and Wells, crazed with the heat and terror, drinks the precious fluid, deserts Mary and staggers on. Brooding in his camp, Jim suddenly hears faint cries out on the desert, investigates and finds Mary lying half-dead in the sands. He revives her and she tells her story. With half-drawn gun Jim starts to lead her to his camp, when suddenly they stumble over the dead body of Wells. Providence has stayed his vengeance, and Jim kneels with Mary and gives thanks for the opportunity of starting life anew once more with her by his side.

EGYPT (May 20).—This very interesting and instructive industrial picture illustrates the primitive methods still in vogue in Egypt, along the upper Nile. Our boat stops at a small landing place and, walking a short distance from the river, we see an Egyptian ploughing and one cannot help but wonder how vegetation can ever spring from the sun-baked earth. We are enlightened when we behold the odd system of irrigation. A native draws water from a well by means of a "shadoff"—a peculiar well sweep—and the laborers irrigate the ground by building small squares and dams which regulate the flow. Sowing and harrowing are done by hand. We next visit a half-grown wheat field where we see the natives fertilizing the soil with powdered "guano." The following view is of the laborers reaping with crude sickles. Now we visit the Egyptian farmer during his threshing season. The wheat is placed on the ground and a rough sled, caled a "norag," is driven over it, revolving discs forcing out the grain. The winnowing and grinding into flour next receive our attention. Then we see the natives kneading the dough and placing the loaves into primitive ovens. A little Egyptian girl offers us a loaf and guarantees that it is whole wheat.

The making of straw brick, from the first operation of digging the clay to the baking by the sun, is shown through all the different processes and will be found of special interest.

A series of novel views show the method of making cloth—the shearing of the sheep, spinning the yarn, framing, winding, the operation of the loom and the final transaction of purchasing and paying for the completed article.

HER CONVICT BROTHER (May 22).—Ellen pays a Sunday visit to her brother, Tom, who is serving a term in prison for a crime committed by another. A few days later John Cally, Ellen's employer, asks her to marry him and she consents. After the marriage Ellen desires to tell her husband of the unfortunate situation of her convict brother but is afraid. Some time later Tom escapes from prison and seeks refuge in Ellen's unoccupied summer home. He telephones Ellen, who hastens to his assistance and supplies him with money and some of her husband's clothes. Believing that he will be temporarily safe, she advises Tom to stay in the house until all danger has passed. The next morning a newspaper article giving an account of Tom's escape affects Ellen and when Cally asks what disturbs her, she feigns illness. Cally returns home unexpectedly and discovers Ellen at the telephone, talking to her brother. With suspicions fully aroused he demands to know the name of the party at the other end of the line but she refuses to enlighten him. Cally then locks Ellen in her room and obtains the number from the telephone operator downstairs. He calls Tom, decoying him to the house with a statement that Ellen has been taken ill and wishes to see him. Tom rushes to the house and Ellen's cry, "He is my brother," stays the hand of the husband, who is about to shoot the unfortunate man.

UNDER A FLAG OF TRUCE (May 24).—Tom Dean, a young man without means, is in love with Rose Neville, daughter of a well-to-do Southern planter. Rose is an ardent sympathizer of the Confederate cause, while Tom is a follower of the Union principles. Rose's father refuses to countenance Tom's suit and does not conceal his distaste for the young man. Just at this time news comes of the declaration of war. Tom goes North, enlists and is placed in command of a company of Union cavalry. Three years go by but Rose hears nothing from Tom, to whom she is still faithful.

Tom receives an order directing him to burn all houses five miles South and to take particular care to destroy the home of the Confederate, James Neville, together with all personal property. This is exceedingly unpleasant to the soldier but his orders must be obeyed and they are carried out to the letter.

Bill Wheeler, a worthless scamp, is attracted by Rose's charms and when the girl resents his advances, he joins a party of bushwhackers, who are nothing more than marauders. After the Union forces have destroyed the home of Col Neville, the party of bushwackers, headed by Wheeler, attempts to loot the outstanding buildings. The old colonel and his daughter take refuge in one of the negro cabins. Capt. Dean learns of their precarious situation and goes alone to their assistance. Rose's sister, Nan, manages to convey information to both the Confederate and Union forces regarding the danger which threatens her people who are being besieged by the bushwackers. The Confederate and Union soldiers join hands under a flag of truce; the bushwackers are captured and the defenders of the little cabin are relieved just as they are about to abandon hope.

FATIMA (May 21).—Melik, a powerful magistrate, is betrothed to Fatima, a beautiful girl, living in a distant land. He orders Omar, his foster brother, to go to the distant home and bring her back with him.

On the return journey Fatima becomes strongly infatuated with the handsome Omar. But, although he returns her admiration, he is faithful to his trust and delivers her safely to his superior.

Omar sorrowfully confides his hopeless love to his mother, who in turn informs Fatima, much to her happiness. As time passes Melik attempts to win Fatima's love with unfailing attentions and

THE grandeur of the Northland is a thing hitherto unknown to the great majority of human beings. The knowledge of the masses in regard to the Arctic region is largely a matter of hearsay and confined mostly to picture books. A vague idea of the frozen North is the best that has been brought back by writers and lecturers. Therefore these moving pictures taken under the patronage of the Carnegie Museum, by Captain Kleinschmidt, will be a revelation of life and affairs in the frigid zone that has never been equalled

AN EDUCATIONAL FEATURE—FULL OF LIFE. A picture for all classes—young or old—rich or poor—high or low.

¶ Perhaps no popular idol ever lived who is so well known personally as Buffalo Bill. Many are known by reputation but few by sight.

¶ Colonel Cody's renown is not confined to America. He is a world character, known in every civilized land, and is popular with our foreign citizens.

¶ From James Fennimore Cooper we learn, through books, the early western life, but—by Buffalo Bill the World was given the actual sight of it.

¶ As an educational picture it shows us the development of the great West including the personality of one of the great pioneers who did the work.

HOMER'S ODYSSEY

MILANO FILMS

A PURCHASER of a moving picture should be guided by the same reasons that actuate a connoisseur in the purchase of any other kind of a picture.

¶ When J. Pierpont Morgan buys an oil painting he is making an investment. He buys a picture that will gather interest as time goes on. He knows that one authentic work of art by an acknowledged master is worth a shipload of "pot-boilers" by men who are rated as "good," "pleasing," etc.

¶ The kind of pictures to buy are those that will stand the test of time. Something that will be as valuable in the end as in the beginning. The story of the Odyssey is two thousand seven hundred and sixty-two years old. It must be a pretty good story to last that long. But that is not all. It may last for several thousand years more.

¶ There are still a few States for which the rights for the Odyssey have not been sold. They are: Maine, Pennsylvania, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Arizona, Nevada, California, Vermont and New Hampshire. Also Saskatchewan, Canada, and Maritime Provinces.

¶ A line of special lithographs can be had for this subject. These posters are the equal of any that have appeared for the biggest of theatrical productions. Write or wire for information.

SCENES IN PADUA, ITALY (May 21).—Showing many interesting sights of the city, such as the Valleresso Arch, St. Justine Church, the Market Square, and the ruins of the Roman Ampitheater.

A MYSTERIOUS TELEPHONE CALL (May 25).—Detective Roberts is called up by telephone with a message that a daring burglary is being committed, but before the message is completed it is cut off with a noise like a revolver shot. Roberts learns from the telephone company the source of the call and hastens to the designated house.

Cautiously entering, he proceeds to examine the premises, but is unfortunately discovered, and, although he attempts to escape, is shot by the robbers and left for dead. He manages to crawl after the two men, however, and learns that the empty house is adjoining the bank, and that they are planning to enter the vault that night.

Later, Roberts succeeds in entering the vault, and fastens down the trap door securely, but, before he is able to call assistance, faints away from his wounds, and is discovered almost lifeless the next morning. As soon as he is revived he speedily informs the astonished manager of the intended robbery, and asks to have the clerks called in. Dramatically entering the room, he easily picks out the two offenders and turns them over to the police.

SELIG.

THE LOVE OF AN ISLAND MAID (May 13).—Catalina is a pretty shell vendor on an island off the California coast. Loved by Amado, a native boatman, she is fascinated by John Dalton, whose friends are present on a visit, among them his fiancée, Eleanor Henry. Dalton, as a pleasant diversion, trifles with Catalina. To her it is a serious matter, and, in a fit of jealousy, she is prevented from casting Eleanor from a crag into the sea by the sudden appearance of Amado. Her lover divines that she loves Dalton, the yachtsman, and he, in turn, acts from jealousy by boarding the craft, seizing Dalton in his arms and jumping overboard. Catalina follows them and, through her expert swimming, manages to send Amado to the bottom and rescue Dalton. She has learned by now that Dalton does not love her and the following day, when he calls to reward her for saving his life, she dramatically refuses his gold and bears her humiliation with all the fine pride of her spirited race.

THE TURNING POINT (May 14).—John Carewe is apparently blessed with all that man most desires. He has a comfortable home, beautiful wife and loving little daughter, yet he persists in neglecting his wife and home, spending his time among the bright lights. His wife tries to make him reform, but Carewe is set in his ways, and while he loves his wife, he cannot give up his evil habits. Mrs. Carewe finally determines to try a little strategy on her wayward husband. When he arrives at home that night, a trifle intoxicated, he finds a note from his wife telling him that she has taken the baby and departed. She is in reality only as far away as the next room. Carewe's grief at the realization of his folly and its result prompts him to contemplate suicide. He takes out his revolver and is about to use it when little Doris makes her appearance upon the scene. His joy on learning that he has not lost his wife and child is as great as was his grief. He decides to turn the tables on his wife and does so by smearing some tomato ketchup over his shirt bosom, and then firing several shots into the floor. His wife rushes in and faints at the sight of her supposedly dead husband. He, however, has learned his lesson and the happy family are once more reunited.

SCENES IN CUBA (May 14).—Another interesting and instructive travel subject, showing scenes in and around the new Cuba.

THE VAGABONDS (May 16).—A wandering violinist enters a barroom followed by his canine companion, Roger. He entertains the company with Roger's tricks and tells his story. The story of the vagabond violinist tells of "a dear girl's love." How the "wine went round," and the blasted home and broken heart that followed his taking to drink. He relates how, years after, when a wanderer, he saw her and how she little dreamed he had kissed the coin she had dropped to him. He finishes his story by picturing the after scenes of his vagabond life with Roger as his companion.

BRAINS AND BRAWN (May 17).—The Village Board, despairing of the condition at the village school, send for a football graduate, who will manage the boys. When he arrives the boys laugh at him and plan to show their independence of "the little shrimp." But in the fierce frolic that follows the litle schoolmaster proves himself equal to the occasion and declines the help of the board, who fly to his rescue. Later one of the girls takes a hand in subduing the teacher with some glue. He blames the girl who has frustrated the plot of gluing him to his chair. But the real culprit confesses and sends him after the other girl. They come to an understanding in more ways than one.

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS. NO. 3. THEY PLAN A TRIP TO GERMANY (May 17).—But the good captain abandons the trip on account of what happens to his clothes. The piano recital that follows brings things to a climax and at last the kids are put to bed and guarded all night by a club.

A CITIZEN IN THE MAKING (May 20).—Itze, a Jewish immigrant with his sweetheart Esther, arrive at Ellis Island, where they become separated. He passes the examination of the inspectors and is forced to leave for New York without her. Alone, Esther is examined and she is allowed to pass. Finding the boat and Itze are gone she turns back. At the dock where Itze arrives, he tries to stay aboard for Esther, but is forced to land. At Chicago, on meeting his relatives, he explains that Esther was detained. In his trouble his relatives take him to the office of the Jewish Immigration Society. He is assured his sweetheart will be found. Landing alone, Esther, in her distress, meets with an officer, who takes her in hand, finds her a place and locates her friends. Itze, in Chicago, is busy in his new home and a happy ending is shown by the reunion of the immigrant and his sweetheart.

RIVALS (May 21).—Two fisher boys, Tom and Bill, are the best of friends until each discovers they both love the same girl. While she prefers Bill she likes Tom well enough to propose a novel task for her suitors, of climbing the highest peak on the island home, and securing the head and horns of a famous wild goat, the successful man to be rewarded with her hand. They accept the test and climb the mountain, and Bill has the good fortune to shoot the goat. He makes his camp for the night and his rival, who has heard the shot, tries to steal the trophy. Bill awakens and, in the struggle which ensues, is forced over a precipice. Tom starts away with the head and horns, but overcome by remorse, returns and rescues Bill. He carries his rival to the girl, who learns the whole story. The loser then manfully departs, leaving the happy pair to each other.

THE GIRL WITH THE LANTERN (May 23).—In this railroad story a city girl, visiting her uncle and aunt in the country town, falls in love with the operator at the railway station. Her uncle, a cross old owl, disapproves of having young men call on her. She finds the telephone handy in talking with her new beau, but is detected by the aunt and uncle. A delayed order is received by the operator to hold the train until the President's special passes. The train has just gone and he telephones his sweetheart to flag it, as her uncle's home adjoins the railroad track. She drops the receiver, rushes to the kitchen, gets a lantern, covers it with her uncle's red bandanna and she runs out of the house. Then she climbs the fence and embankment and gets to the track just in time to stop the train. All manner and things happen to her while she is doing this, and the ending of the story is both ingenious and entertaining. The lovers are, of course, reconciled.

THE LOST HAT (May 24).—An old man's hat blows through a Pullman car window and is lost. He doesn't notice his loss and takes another's hat by mistake, thinking it is his own. The two men stop at the same hotel by coincidence and the man with the wrong hat gets into the wrong room, much to the mortification of an elderly lady, who immediately screams for help. In making his getaway the man drops his hat and through this clue the innocent owner is arrested.

The lost hat is picked up by a tramp, who later robs the hotel and in getting away he, also, drops his hat. This results in the arrest of the other man. After many extremely exciting and amusing incidents the mystery is finally unraveled by the arrest of the tramp, who confesses the hotel robbery.

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS (No. 4)—THEY ENTERTAIN COMPANY (May 24).—The mischief-making schemes of Hans and Fritz result in fast and uproarious fun at a supper party given in honor of Mommer Katzenjammer.

MELIES.

THE RUSTLER'S DAUGHTER (May 30).—Molly, curious to know where her father and his men got so many fine horses, acts as her own sleuth. A noise in the bushes arouses the gang, one of whom goes to investigate only to find that it was the girl he loved. Thus to her astonishment she learns that her father is a horse thief. The sheriff, being notified by the governor that horse thieves are busy in his vicinity, disguises himself as an Easterner in order not to draw suspicion. Molly, homeward bound, watches the stranger on horseback, and seeing him fall over the cliff, owing to the saddle girth breaking, rushes to his aid. She brings him home and, while taking off his coat, spies his badge. Her father returns with the men, and an argument in the next room in which her father is shot, tells the whole story to the sheriff who has been in hiding. He telephones to his deputies that he has discovered the thieves. On their arrival they arrest the gang. Molly, grieved over the death of her father, begs to be arrested also, but the sheriff, remembering how she saved his life, refuses to do so and begs her forgiveness in playing the part of a spy.

EDISON.

THE CONVICT'S PAROLE (May 17).—The governor of one of the Western states, has inaugurated a new system for handling the convicts. Instead of leasing them on contract to private corporations for private gain, he proposes to release them on parole and give them employment in all cases where they show possibilities of reform. The warden of the penitentiary has a business interest in the old system and with his colleague decides to make an attempt to discredit the governor's plan.

Our interest centers next in three convicts, two men and a woman, who have been released and given employment at a theater. The two men are friends and one of them is in love with the girl. The warden sends an emissary to tempt the younger with the promise of a big haul in a well-planned burglary. A meeting place is appointed in a room back of a saloon.

Having gotten the younger man there with some other criminals, the stool-pigeon produces a set of burglar tools. Meanwhile his friend has followed and the girl has gone to the governor with her story of the possible plot. The result is that she and the governor's secretary are looking through a window and see who produces the burglar tools. But they also see the friend enter and plead with the convicts and the younger man to honor their parole, and the general arrest of everybody concerned, except the warden and the stool-pigeon.

The next morning there is a hearing before the governor. The convicts are allowed to tell their story and the warden strongly intimates that their word is hardly to be taken in a matter of his kind aganist his. Even the girl's story he considers unreliable, but when the governor invites his secretary to step forward and tell what he saw, the warden understands that the game is up. The governor hands him his dismissal and congratulates the faithful among the convicts, and the story ends with honor triumphant and the grafter turned out.

A ROMANCE OF THE ICE FIELDS (May 18).—Dan Wilson, working on the Kennebec River, is very much in love with his landlady's daughter, Jess. The feeling is reciprocated, which causes Alec, the foreman of the job, also in love with Jess, to become jealous and he tries his best to make life miserable for Dan by abusing his authority as foreman.

One day a poorly clothed tramp applies for work and is put to loading ice under Dan's direction. The cold, however, is too severe and while stopping to warm up he is reprimanded by the foreman, and about to be discharged, when Dan removes his coat and gloves and gives them to the tramp. This action so angers Alec that he flings the garments to the ground. Dan forces him to pick them up again and hand them to the half-frozen wretch. This incident only serves to increase the ill feeling existing between the men.

Later in the day while Dan is cutting ice, bordering the open channel of the river, Alec sees his opportunity to avenge himself and, stealing up behind him, pries loose the cake of ice upon which Dan is working and sets him adrift in the river. Jess, driving back from town, hears his cries for help and, urging her horse forward, gives the alarm to the rest of the men who at once rush to Dan's rescue.

The current has caught the ice-cake by this time and is rapidly carrying it toward the falls, half a mile down the river. The men hurrying down the river bank try to get a line to Dan as he swings around the bend above the falls, but to their dismay the line falls short and Dan floats rapidly on toward the falls.

Here the men manage to stretch a line across the breast of the falls and Dan, drifting down to sure destruction, manages to grasp the rope and work his way ashore.

Here he explains that it was Alec who set him adrift and the men, bent on giving him a coat of tar and feathers, start out in search of him. Finally locating him, they are about to carry out their design, when the sheriff, having heard of their intentions takes him in charge.

Not much the worse for his experience, Dan is quite strong enough to propose to Jess, who doesn't hesitate to say "yes."

SCENES IN DELHI, INDIA (May 18).—This film shows many views taken in Delhi, India. Some of them are ancient landmarks, cherished by the natives for their connection with a history that dates back for ages. Views showing a portion of the ancient mosque, a temple, the memorial tower, the "Asoka Pillar" and the shell-scarred Cashmere gate whose mouldering walls are significant of past bloodshed and strife, are particularly interesting. A scene showing the natives carrying water across the country on clumsy wagons, drawn by domesticated buffalos, is quite a novelty, to say nothing of views of the busy streets showing the throngs as they move about bent on their daily enterprises. Like other people of the world they seek amusement and a scene depicting a "mela" or native fair is not unlike the amusement parks and places of recreation in other countries.

THEIR HERO (May 21).—Two college boys, from a very respectful distance, worship the great hero of the football field, Jarvis by name. At the beginning of the picture we see them negotiating for and achieving an introduction to him. After college days are over they become assistant shipping clerks in a big establishment. On one of the pillars of their workroom is pinned a big newspaper picture of their hero in full football regalia. Whenever they pass it they stand in salute before it. One day a great event happens; at a cheap table d'hote dinner their hero makes his appearance and Synopsis and Full Information on Request. DO IT NOW with much trepidation they finally decide to go over and claim acquaintanceship with him.

Instead of a haughty repulse when they might have expected, he invites them to sit down at his little table and have their dinner together. It is a great honor and a great event for the boys. And then we become cognizant of the fact that, as a young lawyer, the football hero is not a success. Things go from bad to worse with him until he is entirely out of money and is very glad when a chance meeting throws him again in the ways of the boys and they invite him to their room to help partake of a box of good things from home. Of course, the boys see him only as their ideal hero and know nothing of the struggle against poverty which he is making. But one day, when he is down to the last notch, he answers an ad for a porter and the next thing he knows is face to face with his worshippers in the very place where they are working. The situation is both comic and dramatic, but, like the true blue that he is, he goes to work under his two small admirers. Of course, he soon rises to a better position and is able to marry the girl who has waited for him all this time. But through it all the two young adorers are true to their ideal and rejoice at his success.

THE ARTIST AND THE BRAIN SPECIALIST (May 22).—In an attic studio lives an invalid artist with his wife and children, in dire distress. A friend (Harry Furniss) visits them and, learning of the artist's misfortune, advises him to apply to a benevolent institution for aid, giving the artist's wife a letter of introduction to Sir Tufto Dauber, a presiding officer of the institution. In presenting this letter she meets with bitter disappointment and is rudely ordered out of his house. Returning to her friend (Harry Furniss), she describes her ill-treatment at the hands of Sir Dauber, whereupon the former vows vengeance. Disguising himself as Professor Cyclops, the great American brain specialist, he presents himself at Sir Dauber's studio, having arranged by 'phone to pose for his portrait. Sir Dauber, highly flattered with an order from such a celebrity, begins work at once. A lady having a previous sitting returns for her umbrella. The moment Sir Dauber's back is turned Cyclops changes the handsome lady's portrait to a most laughable caricature, quickly returning to his seat, assuming a most unconcerned attitude. When the lady makes the horrible discovery of her distorted portrait, she flies into a violent rage, destroys the portrait and departs in a huff.

Sir Dauber unable to account for the transformed portrait imagines he is going insane. Recovering himself he begins to outline the portrait of Professor Cyclops; at an opportune moment Cyclops again tampers with the canvas on the easel, which adds new horror to Sir Dauber's perturbed mind and he implores the brain specialist to diagnose his case. Cyclops pronounces him insane and orders immediate rest in a sanatorium. He conveys him to the attic of the poor artist and there he, Cyclops, reveals his true identity. Sir Dauber discovers he is the victim of a practical joke brought about by his uncharitable attitude and promises to be more benevolent in the future, and proves his assertion by immediately contributing to the support of the distressed family, bringing about a happy conclusion.

THE SUNSET GUN (May 24).—Thomas Brainerd, a Civil War veteran, is an enthusiastic old soldier and a firm believer in discipline. His household, which consists of his married daughter and his beloved grandson, Dick, is run on strict military rules, and if Dick objects to the early arrival of bedtime it needs only a word from grandpa on the subject of a soldier's first duty to bring the youngster to strict obedience.

As Decoration Day approaches, Brainard and his G. A. R. comrades meet and discuss the plans for the annual parade in the village. But Brainerd has been failing of late and, in spite of the doctor's efforts, seems to be getting weaker as time passes.

The eventful day arrives and Brainerd, dressed in his best is ready to take his place in the line with his comrades, but as he takes his beloved rifle from its place his weakness is so apparent that his daughter finally prevails upon him to give up his idea of marching in the parade. He will watch from his chair in front of the house and insists that his daughter and little Dick take their places in the parade. Reluctantly they leave him and report his illness to his waiting comrades.

The march to the soldier's monument is begun. As the stirring sound of fife and drum reaches his ears, Brainerd starts up, rifle in hand, and there comes to him a vision of battle. He is in the midst of the charge, the bursting shells, the cheers, the groans all come back to him. Only a moment and it passes away, but the sound of fife and drum are real, for there, passing before him, is his little band of comrades on parade. They cheer the old man as they pass on their way. At the monument the roll is called and many a name is left unanswered, but litle Dick cannot remain silent when grandpa's name is called and bravely steps out and answers in his stead.

Brainerd, too, has answered roll-call, but it is one of long ago, the vision comes back to him as if but yesterday as he steps out and answers to his name.

At the monument they now fire a salute for their departed comrades. It sounds to Brainerd like the booming of "The Sunset Gun." He sees again the sinking sun of long ago, the officer gives the command, the gun booms out and slowly the stars and stripes flutter to the ground. The vision disappears and Brainerd sinks exhausted into his chair. The exertion has been too great. There now floats to him from the monument the sounds of taps. How many times has he heard it in the stillness of the night! He sees it all once more, the bivouac at the end of the day's fighting. The trumpeter steps out. How sweet the notes sound upon the night air! The last call. All lights out. With a smile he sinks back and closes his eyes. His light is out, he has answered the last call. His returning comrades find him serene but cold, and reverently cover him with the tattered old battle flag.

A WESTERN PRINCE CHARMING (May 25).—Mrs. Hindemiller, a widow with five young children, the eldest of whom, Lena, is only eleven years old, finds that the struggle to keep the wolf from the door is becoming too great and decides to send Lena into service. To this end she arranges to send her to Mrs. Maloney who runs the Quarry Hotel. Lena is placed in charge of Fritz, the old stage driver and, amid the tears of her family, is whirled away to her new home, tightly clasping to her breast her one treasure, a thumb-worn copy of Grimm's Fairy Tales.

Arrived at the Quarry Hotel, Lena is at once put to work. From daylight until long after dark Mrs. Maloney drives her from task to task.

The hard work, the rough men and Mrs. Maloney's constant abuse, do not tend to cure little Lena of her home-sickness. Her only consolation is her book of fairy tales, which she keeps hidden under her cot in the garret. Here, after her day's work, she manages to steal a few sweet moments poring over the trials of poor Cinderella and the Prince. But even these are denied her, for Mrs. Maloey discovers Lena at her reading and rudely takes the book from her. This is the last straw. She writes a letter home, telling her mother of her treatment and that if she does not come and take her away she will jump into the river and drown herself. This letter she drops out of the window to her one friend in the house, little Tommy, with instructions to give it to Fritz to deliver. Tommy gives Fritz the leter just as the stage is pulling out for its night run. The Circle Bar boys have been out on a wild lark. Coming back from town they spy the coach and decide to have some fun with old Fritz. They accordingly hold up the stage in true bandit style and, seeing Fritz clutching litle Lena's letter, forthwith make him read it. The pathetic tale it tells has a sobering effect on the boys and they decide that Mrs. Maloney needs a lesson.

Tying Fritz to a tree, they ride to the Quarry Hotel and very nearly wreck it. Lena hears the noise and huddles frightened on her cot until there comes up the stairs a big handsome man. At last! It is her dream come true: Prince Charming has come to rescue her. True his dress is slightly different from the one in the fairy tale but he is big and handsome, so it must be he. Without any hesitation she goes to his arms.

VITAGRAPH.

PROFESSOR OPTIMO (May 20).—A dense gloom pervades Mrs. Brown's boarding house. All the boarders are at odds with each other, their landlady and the rest of the world. Professor Optimo arrives in town and, in searching for a livable home, accidentally comes across Mrs. Brown's boarding house. He secures accommodations and hangs out a sign as a "crystal gazer" and dissipator of gloom. His very presence in the boarding house seems to impart sunshine to its cheerless atmosphere. When he takes a seat at the table with the rest of the boarders, his happy disposition, humorous stories and bright remarks put everybody in good humor. He promotes love and acts as a matchmaker.

He has many patients who call on him to have him analyze their grouches and diagnose their dispositions, and everyone of them are immediately benefited when they gaze into his globe of crystal, into which he reflects and through which he transmits his optimistic nature and his bright views of life, imparting them to his clients, who depart with faces wreathed in smiles. His fees are within the possibilities of all, for he gives his services without money and without price; he is anxious to have others enjoy that which he knows helps make the world better and happier.

He is a welcome guest wherever he goes and when he is about to depart and spread his magic wealth of crystal light in other dark places, Mrs. Brown hates to have him leave, feeling that the happiness which he has brought into her home and the lives of its occupants may go with him. She is almost in tears, but his smile and assurance that it has come to stay makes her satisfied that gloom has been dispelled and joy established forever.

FORTUNES OF A COMPOSER (May 21).—Samuel Herman, a composer, in seeking recognition for fame and fortune, goes to Paris and takes a position in a small music hall, playing there at night and writing music during the day. His compositions do not find a market and disappointed and disheartened, he sends them to his wife and daughters in America, to be disposed of by them if possible. He loses his memory through an attack of aphasia. His wife and daughters dispose of his compositions for $100,000. They send word to their father to the address which he had given them, but no one knows what has become of him and so the letter is returned unclaimed with a report that the professor is dead.

Two years afterwards Herman's memory returns when he hears his music played upon the street and he determines, after he has fully recovered, to return to America. He goes to his old home and is told by the janitor that his family has moved away when they become rich. He makes his way to the opera house where one of his operas is advertised to be sung that night. As he is entering, his wife and daughters, in evening costume, alight from a limousine and pass in without recognizing him, so changed is his appearance. He gets a seat in the front row of the gallery, where he listens intently and raptly to the music which his own brain conceived, and the hand with which he is unconsciously beating time has written. He does not see his wife and daughters, sitting in the opera box, applauding and taking to themselves the credit and fame of the father and husband.

After the performance everybody leaves but the professor, who is left sitting there alone. The lights are put out and the hand of death closes the old man's eyes and he awakens in Heaven.

THEIR GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY (May 22).—Farmer Jones is a hard parent of the old school, who believes in strict obedience from his children, even when they grow up, and always wants them to be working. John, his youngest son, and the only one now left at home, is always getting into hot water with his father. He has no love for farming and is not particularly robust, and his father is always driving him. He stays on at the farm, however, for the sake of his mother, a kind-hearted, cheery woman, who is always trying to make peace. John is interested in photography and spends his spare time working at it, to the disgust of his father. John takes a picture of his mother, of which he is very proud. In developing and fixing it, he wastes, he considers, valuable time, and when Mrs. Jones tries to plead and shows him the photograph for an excuse, he tears it in two. He and John quarrel and the son leaves home, his father remaining stern and angry, his mother broken-hearted.

Five years pass by, and the father begins to repent his action, for the old folks have heard no more of their son. On the eve of their golden wedding anniversary, he and his wife have a long talk and he promises to take her to town the next day, the anniversary. They drive to town. In passing a photographer's studio, he proposes they have their pictures taken. The photographer, a very attentive and gentlemanly young fellow, in passing the old folks, recognizes them as his parents. They do not recognize him, for he has changed, but when he reveals himself as their son, John, clasping his mother in his arms, there is a general jubilee of great joy and reunion.

DIAMOND CUT DIAMOND (May 24).—Mrs. Bunce grows suspicious of her husband's good-looking stenographer and Mrs. Brown sees visions in her mind of her husband entertaining chorus girls at wine suppers, a regular cut-up. She doesn't believe his stories of being detained at the office with his two faithful clerks. She makes up her mind to find out, and one night, when he is kept at work later than usual, she calls up his office, but it so happens that Bunce and his clerks had finished their work and had gone to dinner. She receives no answer to her phone call and is assured that her suspicions are correct. When he returns home he receives the icy stare and the stony heart from her. She determines to catch him at his deception.

She writes a letter to her husband as if sent by a mutual friend, saying that a Westerner who is visiting the city would like to be shown the town. Mrs. Bunce disguises herself as the Westerner and calls on her husband with the aforesaid letter. Her husband recognizes his wife, but to get one on her he makes an appointment to meet her at a swell hotel, saying he would like to introduce her to a couple of attractive young ladies, with whom they can have a red hot time. He arranges with his two clerks to impersonate the two young women, and they do it to perfection. Mrs. Bunce, disguised as the Westerner, meets her husband and together they meet the two girls. She can stand it no longer. She confesses her identity in tears and humiliation. In the midst of her denunciations of her husband's rascality, the two clerks take off their wigs and give Mrs. Bunce the merry ha-ha.

THE REDEMPTION OF BEN FARLAND (May 25).—Ben Farland finds it hard to resist drinking. He has another enemy, however, in Steve Higgins, a fellow ranchman, who is in love with Doris Maitland, the ranch owner's daughter. Ben is left in charge of the ranch by Maitland. He neglects his duty and goes to a nearby saloon, where he becomes intoxicated. Steve sees a chance "to get his goat" and provokes a quarrel, in which Ben knocks Steve down. Higgins reports Ben's conduct to Mr. Maitland, who reproves Ben and tells him if he repeats the offence he will discharge him. Ben promises to keep from drink and does so until Steve, who again meets him in a saloon, entices him to drink and again tells his boss, who summarily dismisses Ben.

Doris meets Ben leaving the ranch. She encourages him, telling him to brace up and redeem himself. He does so, securing a position on another ranch, and being a fine workman and skilled ranchman, he gains the confidence of his new employer by his sober, industrious behavior, and is made manager. Ben goes to town in his employer's automobile, and stopping at the post office, he meets Doris. She is riding a fractious horse, and on her way home the horse runs away with her. She is unable to stop him. Ben sees her danger and instructs the man at the wheel to give chase. It is a hot chase, but Ben, who is an expert lariat thrower, lassoos Doris' horse from the tonneau of the auto and quickly brings him to a halt. Doris is all but exhausted. Ben places her in the automobile and they are soon speeding homeward. During their journey Ben proposes to Doris and she unhesitatingly accepts him.

LUBIN.

A RAILROAD ENGINEER (May 20).—Tom Benson, the engineer of the Nightingale, is the pride of the station and John Butler, the despatcher, freely gave his consent that Tom should woo his daughter May. So they were engaged. One day at the end of his run he sees one of his frequent passengers, a flip drummer, flirting with his sweetheart May, who likes the city man's attention. That night at a barn dance Tom is much neglected by his sweetheart, and Dick Thompson, the drummer, gets most of May's dances. Next day the dispatcher's daughter takes her accustomed walk along the track to see Tom's train pass. She is joined by Thompson and he suggests that they sit down in the shade under a trestle. During the flirtation, Thompson carelessly throws a cigarette stub behind him which alights among the dry brushwood, which takes fire and blazes up towards the structure. There is no way of stopping the fire and the train is due at the viaduct. May implores Thompson to walk the trestle and flag the train, but he is terror stricken and runs off in the opposite direction. May looks after him in disgust and starts herself to flag the train. She catches her foot in one of the ties, falls and sprains her ankle. She then calls for her little sister to flag the train, but the little one gets terrified at the approaching engine and stands panic stricken on the track. Tom sees her, but he cannot stop the engine on the down grade, he climbs around the engine down to the cow-catcher and picks up the child from the track. This brings about a reconciliation of the sweethearts, and May resolves that it is better to give herself to a heroic man than to a nerveless masher.

DARBY AND JOAN (May 22).—Darby, an old cabinet maker, and Joan, a lace maker, are an elderly couple who have been married for years. The wedding of Minnie and Alfred takes place at the home of the old couple. Minnie is a maid in the service of Lady Wilbur and Alfred is the coachman. Soon after the return from their honeymoon, Minnie becomes envious of her mistress' beautiful clothes and she steals a handsome scarf. Alfred discovers what his young wife has done. They quarrel, and he angrily leaves the house. Minnie goes to Joan, telling her the whole story, and Joan promises to return the scarf to its owner. She takes some pieces of lace, and while showing them to Lady Wilbur manages to leave the scarf without her seeing it. Sir Wilbur enters. His wife asks him for money to pay for lace, and as he is giving it to her he unintentionally draws a note from his pocket. It is from a London actress. Joan overhears it. Lady Wilbur goes out on her horse. Joan returns home, where Minnie is still weeping. Darby has, in the meantime, found Alfred drinking at a tavern and brings him home with him. The old couple busy themselves getting supper so that the young couple will make up, which they promptly do. The old couple kiss them and they leave happily. Lady Wilbur falls from her horse, and Darby and Joan bring her into their cottage. They wish to reunite the husband and wife, and so Darby conceives a ruse by which he brings the husband to the cottage. The second couple make up and leave and we last see the old couple alone with their candlesticks about to retire.

A BACHELOR'S WATERLOO (May 23).—Clarence K. Peabody, a rich and handsome young bachelor who does not care for the society of women, is greatly annoyed by the attentions of a Mrs. John Hall Proudfit, who seems determined to make a match between Peabody and her pretty daughter Alice, much against the protests of the girl. The bachelor is so pestered with letters, telegrams, etc., that in desperation he flees to the country for a week's rest. Arriving at the Inn, he is horrified to find the verandas and hammocks filled with girls, and he turns the back back to the station. On the way Deacon Johnson hails the driver for a few words and, being introduced, learns of Peabody's predicament. The Deacon invites the bachelor to his home and assures him of peace and quiet. Bess, the Deacon's daughter, is a tom-boy. Having an aversion for men, she proceeds to make Peabody's visit so unhappy that he resolves to get away pretty quickly. Then he begins to realize that he will miss the little girl's pranks. The next morning, as he is strolling through the grounds to take a farewell look at the place, he comes upon Bess standing by the gate weeping. Their eyes meet and they realize that they are really in love. Breathing tender words into each other's ears, they are surprised by the Deacon, who flies into a rage. It has always been his wish that Bess shall marry a clergyman and he orders Peabody from the premises. Love, however, finds a way. Peabody disguises himself as a minister and, presenting himself at the house, he is cordially welcomed by the Deacon. Bess is quickly run up against the supposed minister and her father insists that she shall marry at once to circumvent Peabody. Bess rebels and Peabody remonstrates, but the Deacon insists and a young minister, a friend of Peabody, is sent for. The knot is tied and Peabody throws off his disguise and papa is won over with his little girl's kisses.

THE SPONGE INDUSTRY (May 25).—The fishing for sponge is done with hook poles and also by divers, both of which methods are shown with perfect realism, and true photography taken on the south coast of Florida, Cuba and the West Indies. The cleaning and preparation for the market is also pictured.

DREAM OF A LOBSTER FIEND (May 25).—A. Gourman, fond of the inner man, but has never suffered the pangs of indigestion or had bad dreams, is not careful of his diet. One night he heartily enjoys a meal of lobster, beer, ice cream, etc., which causes him great distress. In a dream he imagines he meets a charming woman, whom he takes to a ball. When she removes her hat and veil he finds that she is a colored lady. They are shown out of the place. Wandering from there he comes to a house which he thinks is his home. Then he tries to find the keyhole, but the doors rock to and fro. Finally, disgusted, he throws away the key and jumps through the second story window. Looking around he finds a woman's dress, which he dons and goes out. He meets a policeman at the front door who tries to flirt. The policeman is persistent and follows him. Gourman is about to enter an ice cream parlor, when C. Swellfellow mets him and invites him to a cafe. He accepts; the policeman still following. They enter the cafe. C. Swellfellow orders and puts down the cigar he is smoking, when Gourman picks it up and smokes. Swellfellow is greatly surprised and, in trying to get the cigar away from him, Gourman's wig falls off, disclosing that "she" is a man. A chase ensues. Gourman, after losing the woman's clothes, discovers the policeman following him. In his anxiety to get away from him, he jumps up a telegraph pole and walks the wire into the three story window of a house. Coming through the window, he discovers a lady and her children eating. He admires the lady and kisses her. The chef is called and Gourman is thrown out of the window, landing on the policeman. Finally he takes to the woods, when he is suddenly surrounded by Indians. One throws a spear, which pierces his body, and while the Indians are dancing he escapes. Then there is a chase through the woods, when finally he stumbles, the point of the spear sticking in the ground, throwing him in the air, while the Indians build a fire under him and dance. Gourman is awakened by his family coming in to bid him good night. He then finds that it is a dream and is very thankful.

FROM THE LAWYER'S WINDOW (May 18).—Up in the Canadian woods is a small town where John Stanway's law office window looks into the window of a saloon next door. One day while working at his desk Stanway sees a brawl in the barroom, in which the bartender finally hits a man over the head with a mallet; this is all Stanway can see clearly. It develops later that the man who was struck dies, and the blame is shifted by the bartender, who knows nothing of Stanway's espionage, to the town drunkard, who has a beautiful daughter with whom Stanway is in love. Of course the story ends properly, as all stories should, with the bartender in jail, the town drunkard reformed and the lawyer married to the girl. But before it ends there is a corking good fight between the accused man and the real culprit.

SING LEE AND THE BAD MAN (May 22).—Sing Lee, a cook on Crooked Z Ranch, is unsatisfactory, and is removed to the office of potato peeler. The new cook, who comes to take his place, is a very charming girl. One of the cowboys in forcing his attentions upon her gets in wrong and is driven away from the ranch. He comes back, however, when apparently nobody is around and heckles the girl; the Chinaman interferes with intensely dramatic results.

'TIS MOTHER! (May 23).—A young girl elopes with her sweetheart and becomes wealthy, while her parents become poverty stricken. One day her mother, in search of work, gets a cook's position in a beautiful residence where her cooking is not satisfactory, and she is again discharged. Being engaged and hired by the butler she never sees the mistress of the house until she comes to leave, when she discovers it's her own daughter.

PROSPECTOR SWEETHEARTS (May 25).—A prospector is injured, found by a young Mexican woman, taken to her hut and nursed to health. When he is almost well his sweetheart from town comes out to see him. When the Mexican girl finds that she is coming, she has some of her friends intercept her and hold her prisoner. She is rescued, however, by a small Indian boy whom the prospector has befriended, and everything ends as it should.

ORPHANS OF THE PLAINS (May 15).—The overland mail coach is attacked by Indians. Little Emily, a four year old girl, escapes unnoticed. Finally she meets a little Indian boy who takes her to the lone tepee of Moose Head and his squaw. Here the youngster is taken care of. In the meantime a wounded survivor of the Indians' attack on the stagecoach crawls away and notifies the cowboys of the fight, and a great battle takes place between the Indians and the cow-punchers. Later, the latter come across Moose Head and his squaw and kill them both. The little Indian lad's Indian blood permits him to kill little Emily under the Indian code of "a life for a life," but realizing that he is alone in the world he spares her life that she may be his playmate.

MAX IS CONVALESCENT (May 14).—The story of this film is particularly interesting, because our old friend Max has recently undergone a very serious operation, and this is his first reappearance. He plays this little sketch with a view of assuring his friends that he has entirely recovered, and he is ably assisted by his sister and father and mother. In the picture Max arrives at his home town, is met at the station by his sister, who accompanies him home, where he meets his father and mother and all the pets of the houehold. The story is built around these pets and is a corking good comedy.

THE HARVEST IN SICILY (May 14).—These are interesting views of the period in Sicilian life when the crops are gathered, and every one joins the harvest feast of hilarious mirth and frolic.

A ROYAL WHIM (May 17).—Francis I was rather a gay monarch and particularly fond of the ladies. Once when he was visiting at the castle of one of his noblemen, he rather thought that he would like to hold a tete-a-tete with the countess, so under pretence of kissing her hand at parting with her and her husband for the night, he slips a note into her palm suggesting a redezvous. The countess is torn between love for her husband and fear of her monarch, but her dilemma is finally solved by her old nurse, who gives her a potion which puts her into a state resembling death, just when her royal suitor approaches. This alarms the household and his majesty is discovered, and with the best grace possible in the circumstances takes his leave of the countess and his host.

HOLLOWHEAD AS A MAGICIAN (May 21).—Hollowhead witnesses many wonderful stunts pulled off with the aid of a magic wand, so he swipes the wand and going home, experiments on the family with terrible results.

FOXY CUPID (May 24).—A young woman whose sweetheart is objectionable to her father, is taken away by the latter on a trip to sea. The young man, however, ships on the same boat and, when his prospective father-in-law becomes seasick, disguises himself as a physician and treats the old man so well that when the deception is discovered the irate parent is perfectly willing.

BIOGRAPH.

WHEN KINGS WERE THE LAW (May 20).—Over the Kingdom of Romanda there reigned a King who was greatly influenced by his favorite, whom he devotedly loved. He presents her with a necklace of fabulous worth and enjoins that she never part with it, which command she swears by the stars to keep. About this time an impecunious cousin of the King calls to beg the loan of money, which is refused. The favorite promises to intercede for him. The cardinal and the favorite are bitter enemies because of her thwarting many of his pet schemes, and he plans a revenge by inciting jealousy in the King. The scheme he devises is to have the necklace missing and found in the cousin's pocket. The plan succeeds so well that the King condemns the seemingly guilty pair to an air-tight chamber, where they would have suffocated to death had not the lady-in-waiting, who helped in the plot, become horror-stricken and confessed. The cardinal himself was plunged into the depths of remorse, as he did not think the scheme would drive the impetuous King to such extremes; he merely wished to have the favorite exiled from the Court.

A CLOSE CALL (May 23).—A couple of street fakers fail to draw a crowd, so decide to change their act, one of them blacking up and singing coon songs. This might have gotten the crowd had not the blacked-up singer been mistaken for a colored fellow, who was suspected of a kidnapping. His neck is saved by the child being found by the nurse, who had allowed it to stray away.

HELEN'S MARRIAGE (May 23).—Helen and Tom try to elope, but papa catches them and drives Tom away with a gun. At first Tom's friends at the club give him the laugh, but next day when he tells them of a plan, which was suggested by seeing a motion picture company at work, they consent to help him, bringing his scheme to a succesful finish.

GAUMONT.

ATTACKED BY A LION (May 16).—In the lone, vast deserts of Morocco, with his nearest neighbor more than thirty miles away, a contented hermit is passing his life. His house is fairly well concealed from the bands of marauding Arabs who traverse this desolate waste, so that he does not deem it necessary to have any connection with his neighbor, so distant, except by telephone. One night, however, a group of Arabs discovered his hut, and by means of stealth tried to gain admission, for the purpose of pilfering his house and killing him. Their plan, however, is frustrated when the hermit sees them on their approach and opens fire. By virtue of his position the latter is able to withstand the enemy, despite their number. With rifle in one hand, he resorts to his telephone and attempts to notify his neighbor of his peril. The Arabs discover this means of communication with outside assistance and, one of the best shots of their number directs his aim at the telephone wire, with the result that he cuts it in two. Part of the message, however, has already been received by the friend over thirty miles away, and the hermit hopes, almost against reason, that his situation has been made clear. The friend on the other end has understood the whole matter. He realizes how dangerous and short-lived must be his efforts in keeping so large an enemy at bay. Without delay he mounts his swiftest and surest steed and heads for the scene of action.

On the way a terrible sand storm blows up and the journey is of course impeded. Little did the benefactor who had pledged himself so willingly to the rescue of the hermit realize the dangers of his undertaking. While asleep, with his horse cautiously picketed near him, he is suddenly disturbed by the roar of the savage lion. He jumps up in dismay only to recognize one of these monstrous beasts about to spring at his horse. He grabs his rifle, and, without having time to aim a sure shot, kills the lion in the very act of pouncing upon his faithful beast. After encountering several similar desert terrors, the horseman finally succeeds in reaching the vicinity of his friend besieged by the Arabs. He makes his appearance in the very nick of time as the bold marauders had, by their craftiness and endurance, completely worn out the lonely hermit. His powder and ammunition was entirely exhausted. His water supply was also gone. Not one bit of food was left. There was nothing for him to do but to surrender. The presence of the friend, however, turned the tables. The Arabs, fearing a large rescue party had come, were dismayed and were driven in confusion to the outskirts of the desert. The two friends then sat down to recount to each other the details of their respective perils.

THE FATE OF MOTHERS (May 19).—The willing deprivations that mothers make for their offspring is a theme familiar to all. The extent of the suffering incurred by her devotion often reaches down to the tenderest cords of her heart. In this two-reel subject, Mrs. Herbert, a widow, centers all her affection on her charming daughter, Suzanne, a pretty and dainty young lady of eighteen. Her devotion keeps her from accepting the offer of Ernest Prather, a friend her age, who keeps reminding her that Suzanne is no longer the child she was when he made his first request for her hand, some five years back, and that she is now perfectly able to take care of herself without maternal fondling.

Nevertheless her unsefish love for her daughter quite fills her life, for which reason she persistently holds her admirer at bay. One afternoon, however, Suzanne steals off and not caring to interrupt her pleasure, sends a note to mamma explaining that she has called upon family friends. the Dunkirks, who have urgently invited her to stay to tea, and that she will be home promptly at 10 P. M. The unusuality of such a procedure causes Mrs. Herbert to call on the Dunkirks herself, where she learns that Suzanne has not told the truth. Overcome by the disclosure, she returns home to await her truant daughter. At ten o'clock her patience is rewarded when she sees Suzanne alight from a taxi in the company of a charming fellow who claims an affectionate good-night kiss. Upon the daughter's entrance to the library, mother upbraids her severely, only to learn that Suzanne loves this friend, Willis Allison, and has already affianced herself to him. The mother is overcome at the intelligence, but is forced to make the best of it.

The young couple are wedded and settle down in a veritable mansion of luxury, taking Mrs. Herbert with them to live. However, both Willis and Suzanne, having come from families used to extreme comfort, prove careless with their money and squander it most shockingly. Mrs. Herbert ventures a precautionary warning, which so incenses Willis that he insists that his mother-in-law leave their home and live by herself. This ultimatum proves a hard blow for mother to endure, but there is no other alternative, wherefore she packs up and goes off to herself.

Young Allison's recklessness soon leads him to wild speculation, with the usual result—complete bankruptcy. He is forced to meet an obligation of $50,000 when he hasn't even a ten-spot to his name. This crisis fells Suzanne, who, forgetting her husband's mistreatment of mother, runs pell-mell to her with her woe. Daughter finds mother just signing a letter to the persistent but kindly Prather, this time agreeing to accept him as her husband, thereby ending her enforced loneliness.

Mrs. Herbert listens to daughter's tale of despair, tears her letter to Prather into shreds, and, with true motherly affection, draws a check for the sum of $57,000, her entire savings, and transfers it to the account of the youthful Allisons, Willis and Suzanne, thereby protecting them from everlasting humiliation. Thus is an example of the sincerity of mother-love, one of the many daily, yes, momentary, occurrences of maternal sacrifice.

TOMMY BECOMES A TOREADOR (May 23).—Tommy, the ambitious butcher-boy, has been spending a most busy life, but an advertisement of a pretty young girl desiring to marry a toreador, in order to inherit her uncle's huge sums left her. He forthwith presumes to be a noted bullfighter, wins the girl's consent to marriage and accepts the generous hospitality of her relatives, who give a large banquet in honor of the engaged couple. During the festivities, Tommy is asked to pantomime some of his arenic strokes, during which demonstration he accidentally whirls up against a stranger at one of the other cafe tables. The stranger resents the accident, and asks Tommy where he learned bull-fighting, at the same time presenting his card, which discloses him to be the noted Local bull-fighter. A match in which both are to exhibit their skill is arranged. Tommy enters the arena with shaking knees, is tossed most brutally by the bull. Of course he is discovered as a fakir, loses his fiancee, who marries the real toreador, while Tommy is forced to continue working as a butcher-boy, and even forced to deliver meat to the home of the young toreador and his rich wife.

SOLAX.

SOULS IN THE SHADOW (May 15).—Alice Penryhn, the younger of two orphaned sisters, is engaged to Harry Mayne, but in a moment of girlish folly, accompanies Will Mortimer, a member of the "fast set," to a somewhat rapid Bohemian restaurant, and promptly regrets it, being fearful that Mayne will discover her imprudence. Her elder sister, Christine, has discovered that Alice has an organic heart affection, and that she is in a dangerous condition. Christine is herself in love with Mayne, but conceals it for her sister's sake. Mortimer forces Alice to see him at midnight, and in a drunken humor, tries to embrace her. In her terror and frenzy she strikes him with a heavy ornament and kills him. Christine discovers the accident, and, taking the burden on herself, is arrested for the crime. She is placed on trial, and, just as the jury is bringing in a verdict of guilty, Alice staggers into court, confesses that she killed Mortimer, and collapses. The judge is thereupon forced to discharge Christine.

IN THE YEAR 2000 (May 17).—A great number of prognosticators often terrify us with visions of what will be when women shall rule the earth, and the time when men shall be subordinates and adjuncts. It is rather a fine question to decide—for chivalrous men, anyway. To-day, with the multiplicity of feminine activities and the constant broadening of feminine spheres, it is difficult to predict to what height women will ascend.

In the Solax production of "In the Year 2000," the release of Friday, May 17th, a serio-comic prognostication is unreeled on the screen with such magnetic force, charm and rich imaginative detail that one is compelled to accept the theories advanced on their face value.

The conditions are reversed. Women in this film are supreme, and man's destiny is presided over by woman. No attempt is made at burlesque, but the very seriousness of the purpose of the theme makes the situations ludicrous.

THE GLORY OF LIGHT (May 22).—A blind man, although in comfortable surroundings, suffers mental agony because of his affliction. His kind wife and little child try their hardest to make his life happy for him, but the young blind man continually broods over his misfortune. While sitting on the steps of a public building—and all the world passes on seemingly happy—God reveals to the blind man in a vision a side of life which makes the blind man satisfied with his lot.

The young man sees, instead of a patient and good wife, a veritable shrew, a woman who is mercenary and unwifely. She sends him out with curses to earn a living. He tries hard to find employment, but an uncharitable and commercial world is impatient with his shortcomings. He comes back to his house and finds that he is dispossessed, while his wife upraids him. He goes out again and tries to steal some bread, but he is caught by a mob, and as the mob pounces on him, the blind man wakes up and finds that it is growing dark and that his good wife has come to take him home. He then thanks God, while his former mental agony is alleviated.

THE KNIGHT IN ARMOR (May 24).—The father of an heiress has objections to Billy because he (the father) wants his daughter married to a man with a title and distinction. The father has Billy rudely ejected from the house while the favored suitor is encouraged.

Billy gets an idea. He steals a suit of armor from his sweetheart's parlor and dresses up in it. The armor happens to be an antique, with a marvelous lock. Billy locks himself in it and although he creates havoc with the household (here we get a demonstration of very entertaining trick work) he later finds that he cannot get out of his plated suit.

He is taken to a blacksmith and there at the forge his coat of steel is removed, not only in the presence of the people he has tormented, but also in the presence of his sweetheart and her father. The father has a sense of humor and gives up his daughter to the man with imagination and nerve.

REPUBLIC.

THE OLD CHIEF'S DREAM (May 21).—Chief Patt Tyhee, the head of the almost extinct tribe of famous Bannic Indians, visits President Taft at the White House and after a lengthy interview with the "White Father," he is slowly walking down the steps of the capitol, when, overcome by fatigue, he rests upon the steps, pulls forth his pipe and smokes. Sleep soon overcomes him and he sees a vision of his by-gone days when he was a young buck and the whites were beginning to settle in his territory. He again sees the famous raid on the town of Mitchellville, when he and his small band attacked the town during the absence of the male population.

Scene by scene is vividly portrayed in his dream. The Paul Revere-like ride of one of the young girls of the town, as she went for reinforcements, the heavy rain of leaden messengers pumped into his band by the brave women of the West, the different times his band was repulsed by the white squaws, and finally the complete defeat of the Indians as they were driven away by the white settlers, led by a white squaw. So real does the dream seem that he awakens with a start, gazes around as though in a trance; then realizing that he is in the capitol city, slowly continues his journey.

HER BIRTHDAY ROSES (May 25).—When you have promised your sweetheart as a birthday gift a rose for every year of her life, and ordered your florist to send her eighteen roses, and the florist, trying to show that he appreciates your patronage, adds twelve roses to your original order, and unknown to you, sends the entire lot to the young lady, what can you expect but an instant breaking of all ties.

Poor Edward could not understand why he was driven from his sweetheart's door on the day of her birthday when he went to see how his present of roses was accepted. Can you imagine his rage when the florist tells him that he sent thirty roses instead of eighteen to the young lady?

CHAMPION.

THE CASHIER'S ORDEAL (May 20).—Bob McCoy loves his East Side lassie with vim and devotion. Bob is a chauffeur and a peculiar genius, but he is not the hero of this photoplay, though he plays an important role in it. The hero is Jack Cummings, who is cashier of the First National Bank of Bacon City. Now Cummings owns a car and loves the daughter of the Bank President. The latter is not favorable to the cashier's suit as the latter is not well fixed with this world's goods. Now, the Vice President schemes to get a half of the bank's funds and inveigles the cashier to come in on "a sure thing" proposition. Thus a "loan" is negotiated and the cashier's prospects look immense.

In the meantime the chauffeur takes his girl on a joy ride, and the cashier finding it out, discharges him. The chauffeur pleads, but the cashier is obdurate and the chauffeur leaves, vowing vengeance. Now the bubble burst on the "sure thing" proposition and the cashier finds himself confronted by a terrible dilemma—disgrace and ruin staring him in the face. Almost bereft of his senses, he decides to take his life. He sits down and writes a letter acknowledging his culpability.

At this juncture, the chauffeur, in the role of a burglar, enters the room and levels his gun at the cashier. He sees the situation, however, and decides to hold the cashier so that he must take his medicine. Several hours elapse, and in the early morning, the cashier's sweetheart rushes in on the scene with a newspaper in her hand. The Vice-president has committed suicide and confesses his guilt, and takes upon himself the entire blame. But stranger than this, the "sure thing" proposition has panned out good, and the cashier can meet the demands of his sweetheart's father. He is overjoyed. The chauffeur demands his old job back again, which is readily done and the incriminating letter is destroyed. Shortly after, the wedding bells ring out for a double header.

MRS. ALDEN'S AWAKENING (May 22).—Mrs. Alden, a society leader, is so much taken up with club work, social gatherings, etc., that she devotes very little time to her home life. She is the mother of a son of twenty-two and a little daughter of six. One day she realizes that the colored mammy, who has been in her service for years, is incapable of teaching her young daughter as she should be taught. She is discharged and an advertisement inserted for a governess who speaks French and plays the piano. Her son has quarreled with her about the neglect of the child and after a heated argument Mrs. Alden orders her son from the house.

Jack takes up his abode in a respectable boarding house where he meets May Moore a poor girl. They see the ad for governess and Jack persuades May to apply. She does so and secures the position. Mrs. Alden, being unaware of the plot, the child and the governess become great friends. Being busy with club work, Mrs. Alden sees very little of her child. One day the child's clothing gets afire and she is rescued by the governess, unharmed but her dress has been badly burned.

The governess is struck with the idea of using the incident to arouse the latent instinct of motherhood in Mrs. Alden. She places the child in bed after bandaging her up with much cotton and bandages, and phones the club about the accident. Mrs. Alden rushes to the bedside of her child, at last realizing her neglect. In her agony she also sees the injustice she has done her son, and expresses a desire to see him. May, who has plotted for this, now sees her opportunity to unite the divided family. She hastens to Jack and brings him to his mother. Explanations follow, and Jack and May receive the mother's blessing to the great joy of the child who was the innocent cause of it all.

NESTOR.

THE COUNTING OF TIME (May 13).—With equal chances for success, the brothers, Jack and Dick Conway, leave their country home to seek employment in the city. To the annoyance of Dick, Jack insists upon their taking rooms at a cheap boardinghouse, and at once starts out to find work. In answer to an advertisement, the brothers find work with an importing firm, but while Jack makes himself a favorite with all and rapidly advances, Dick is soon discharged through his combativeness. At night Jack hurries off to night college, while Dick frequents the Athletic Club.

Some time later, we see Jack studying law, while Dick is training to be a fighter, and still later, Jack has been admitted to the bar and is pleading his first important case, while Dick is fighting his first championship fight. Jack loses and hurries home, to the same little room that he and his brother first engaged, to study. Dick wins and with a merry party of friends enters a smart buffet and later the cafe, where he meets, for the first time, the class of women who frequent such places, and in the wee small hours, he is brought home to his handsome bachelor apartments.

Later we again see Jack pleading a case and this time he wins, while Dick, who is fighting to hold the championship, loses.

A year passes. Jack is a successful lawyer, of whom Dick is forced, from time to time, to borrow money. Dissipation has done its work and those who crowded around him but a year ago, now pass him by with a curt nod. At last Jack writes to his father to come and take Dick home, as his health is not of the best. Dick is finally forced to submit, so after years of wasted efforts, broken in health and spirits, Dick finds himself at the starting point.

THE SHERIFF'S ROUND-UP (May 15).—A private banker, J. C. Rodgers, is going out of business and, knowing that his cashier, Chester Byron, is anxious to go West and that the bank out West in which he is interested, is in need of a new assistant cashier, he secures the position for him. So Chester Byron, with a letter of introduction to the president of the bank, starts out.

A notice of Byron's appointment as assistant cashier, and the day that he is expected to arrive in the Western town, is printed in a local paper and it is brought to the attention of Allen Hayden, who resides in a neighboring town. With the aid of two Mexicans, Joe and Pete, Hayden decides to meet Byron before he arrives, by boarding the train a couple of stations below. He does this, giving Byron the following note: "This will introduce to you Mr. Clay Randall, our confidential clerk, who will meet you en route regarding a private business transaction," with the signature of the president of the bank attached to it. On the strength of this note, Byron alights at the next station with Hayden and accompanies him to Hayden's house. Here Byron is offered wine. The wine has been drugged and as soon as Byron becomes unconscious, Hayden quickly appropriates the other's letter of introduction, etc., and leaves Byron in Pete's charge. Hayden goes to the bank, representing himself as Byron and is soon, on account of his previous record, placed in full charge whenever the cashier is out. Finding the coast clear one afternoon, he closed the safe door without setting the time lock, so that, later, when he returned to the bank, "to do some extra work," as he told the watchman, it was an easy matter to open the door, take the currency in the safe and lock the door without exciting suspicion. Byron had, in the meantime, been kept a prisoner by the Mexicans.

Upon the night that Hayden decided upon robbing the bank, he sent Joe the following note: "Everything arranged for tonight. Have Pete with horses at Dell's corner 9 o'clock. Don't fail. Big haul. Will wait for you below Eagle Rock, Brush Canyon. Signal."

It was Joe's open delight that excited Byron to strike for liberty that very night. Something was afoot, he felt sure. Pretending to be ill, be staggered from his bed to the floor and no sooner did Joe bend down to his aid, than Byron jumped, and, taking the other wholly by surprise, obtained possession of Joe's revolver and marched him outside, where, fortunately, he found the coast clear. As they reached the moonlit road, an automobile came along. Quickly Byron explained the situation to the driver and soon Byron and his captive were speeding toward the sheriff's office. Here the sheriff decides that Joe should be taken to Eagle Rock to act as a decoy. Accordingly the sheriff, his posse, Byron and Joe set out on horseback, and some distance from the rendezvous drew rein and Joe was commanded to give his signal, which was promptly answered by Hayden. Then, while the posse circled around, Joe was forced to advance, on foot, to where Hayden was waiting, so that almost before his suspicions were aroused, the sheriff and his men had closed in upon the bank robber and his accomplice. Hayden and the Mexicans were taken into custody by the sheriff, while Byron entered upon his career as assistant cashier.

CUPID'S VICTORY (May 18).—While on a visit to Brownsville, May Richley meets and falls in love with Bob Mayfield, a young country lawyer. They become engaged, and on May leaving for the city, Bob promises to call to meet her folks.

Bob calls, but Mr. Richley absolutely refuses to have him for a son-in-law and Bob is politely shown the door. Back in Brownsville, Bob accepts the invitation of the old justice of the peace to take his judicial post during the latter's week vacation. May's father, a gay old boy, goes on a grand joy ride with a friend and two chorus girls. They reach Brownsville while an open-air election meeting is in progress and run into the platform with their car, breaking up the meeting and getting themselves arrested. The justice is sent for. Bob arrives and Mr. Richley does his cleverest to get friendly with the young justice, but without success. Bob passes a note to the old man which reads: "If I can have May, put up your right hand and you all go free on suspended sentence; if not, it's three months for you all."

When Bob calls on May the following day, he is again ordered out; this time by May's mother. Father, however, sings Bob's praises and inveigles her out of the room, leaving the young people alone. May's feminine bump of inquisitiveness is finely developed and Bob is obliged to make good use of his legal training to sidestep the issue. He gets the girl without having to divulge papa's little escapade.

ESTUDILLO HOUSE, CAL. (May 18).—This very interesting scenic shows the marriage place of Ramona as it is to-day. "Ramona," as most book-lovers know, is the heroine of the great American novel of that name. Estudillo House is where Father Gaspara married Ramona to Alessandro, for whom Ramona had left her beautiful home to wander from town to town, happy in her great love for the handsome Indian. Beautiful views of the garden, grape arbor, Wishing Well and temporary abode of Ramona are also shown, together with kitchen, oven and cart, so vividly described in the book.

A CAVE MAN WOOING (May 20).—George, our hero, falls in love with Clarice, a fascinating young girl of an athletic turn of mind. There is a rival in the field, however, one who would attract any woman—a manly man, while poor George is a weakling, consequently, he is decidedly out of it in the race for her hand.

At this time he reads in an article published in the papers by a famous authoress that women like cave man methods to-day, just as they did hundreds of years ago. This is a tip which he promptly takes advantage of. He joins a class in physical culture and after many amusing and exciting experiences, he finally accomplishes the end in view, and becomes indeed a giant in strength. His friends and family, and especially Clarice, look on in amazement at the wonderful acts of strength he performs, and when, at the end of the evening's surprises, he picks up the unresisting girl and bears her off to a clergyman's house to be married, the climax is reached.

Of course, when Clarice realizes what it all means, she does not submit passively, but such struggles are apparently unnoticed by the strong man. His destination being reached, the marriage ceremony is performed. Just then the girl knows she does care very much indeed for George, and when there intrudes upon them her entire family, she is indignant, and peremptorially commands them to depart. This they do forthwith, leaving the husband and wife alone in their new-found happiness.

THE CLOWN'S TRIUMPH (May 23).—Ravelle, a clown, with a traveling circus, is in love with Mimi, the columbine, and she with him, but in an indiscreet moment she accepts an invitation to dinner from a gallant attending a performance. Ravelle thinks she is unfaithful and when she returns after an innocent evening's amusement, he drives her away.

Penniless, Mimi wends her way along the lonely country road until, tired, she is given a lift by an old vegetable woman, who takes her to London in the wagon. There she finds a home with a fellow circus woman, and through her meets a theatrical manager, who gives her an engagement at the Theater Royal.

One night, Bert Grimaldi, the famous clown, meets with an accident, and it looks as though there will be no performance that night. All is confusion. The manager rushes from the theater in search of a substitute and to his delight, discovers the traveling circus wagon of which Ravelle is a member. He rushes up to the clown, drags him into the dressing room, and forces him on the stage. Ravelle makes a tremendous hit. Suddenly he comes face to face with the woman whom he thinks has wronged him. She leaves the stage sobbing, goes to her dressing room, where she writes Ravelle a note, and then vanishes. Ravelle, on receiving it, goes in search of her, but his quest is in vain.

The little actress falls ill, and by chance Ravelle learns that her life is in danger. He tries to see her, but the doctor forbids this. Mimi gets sufficient strength to write, as she thinks, a farewell note, sending him a little bunch of roses. These he receives with many other floral offerings, as he peforms before the King of England and the President of France, and amid the plaudits of his public, rushes from the theater to the bedside of his sweetheart.

A new joy comes into her life as she sees him by her side. The crisis has passed. Mimi and Ravelle are reunited and two lives made happy again.

THE MAID'S STRATAGEM (May 25).—Bridget Kelly is a very pretty Irish girl, accomplished, and with a good education. She is maid to Mrs. Warner, an arrogant society widow, who is hated by all her servants. Mrs. Warner receives an invitation to a big society affair at which the Governor of the state will receive, but as she is hurriedly called away by the illness of her mother, she finds it impossible to attend.

Bridget desires to shine as a lady, and feels that she can hold her own with any of them. She forges her mistress' name to a letter, stating that she is unable to be present, but that she is sending her niece to represent her. Bridget dons one of Mrs. Warner's gowns and attends the reception. Owing to her wit, beauty, and musical accomplishments, she makes a decided hit. A young millionaire falls in love with her, and begs permission to call; this is granted.

Meanwhile word is received from Mrs. Warner that all the servants are to be discharged. Before this is done, however, they agree that Bridget shall invite her friend to dinner, so they may see for themselves how well she can play the lady. This dinner promises to be a great success, but in the midst of it, to their consternation, the real mistress arrives. All the servants make a hasty retreat and leave Bridget to her fate.

Mrs Warner denounces the girl as an impostor, but the young fellow, being really in love with Bridget for herself, and not her social standing, VIEWS OF LOS ANGELES, CAL. (May 25).—Los Angeles, Cal., is counted one of the most beautiful and progressive, cities in the United States. It is fortunate in its situation, being near the Pacific and under the shadow of picturesque mountain ranges.

This picture gives a very good idea of the architectural and commercial features of the city, and in panoramic form, shows the beautiful residential environment. It also includes views on an ostrich farm, together with pictures of alligators on a farm devoted to the propagation of amphibians.

MAJESTIC.

TOMBOY (May 12).—Tomboy sits on the veranda reading a book, and occasionally throwing an apple at her young neighbor, Bob Whitman. An interview follows, and she becomes engaged to Bob. While Bob is telling his father of this, Tomboy assaults them with a bean-shooter. She gets her father, a near-sighted minister, to try a shot, and he, innocently taking the bean-shooter, is promptly accused by the Whitmans of making the assault. A scene between the parents follows, the engagement is broken, and Tomboy is packed off to boarding school.

Her pranks at school are equally edifying. She decorates one girl's face with burnt cork, and with the aid of pepper she sets the entire class and the principal sneezing. Finally she is sent to her room, in disgrace.

But Bob has not been idle, and he sends Tomboy a note, planning an elopement. The following night he comes to the boarding school, with an automobile and a ladder. He is to throw a pebble against Tomboy's window. He throws it against the principal's window. When Bob does notify Tomboy, and they are ready to elope, the principal and a fat cook appear, and Tomboy is led ignominiously back to her room.

A period of despair is followed by a brilliant idea of Bob's. If he could get the cook's dress, and Tomboy were to don the chauffeur's uniform, the elopement could be carried out successfully. Back go Bob and the chauffeur to the cook's room. She is overcome, then bribed. Bob gets the dress, the cook takes the chauffeur's clothes to Tomboy, and the chauffeur years Bob's suit. Thus arayed, Tomboy and Bob walk boldly out, under the very nose of the deceived principal.

And now it is Tomboy's turn for an idea. They drive to her father's house. The alleged little chauffeur and big fat woman present themselves before the nearsighted minister, and ask him to marry them. He is rather surprised at the disparity of the pair, but consents to perform the ceremony. Bob's father is summoned from next door, to act as a witness. The marriage takes place.

When the identity of the couple is revealed, bewilderment and consternation on the part of the parents melt into admiration. Tomboy has won her happiness, which begins for her and Bob by their receiving the blessings of both fathers.

BUNCOED (May 14).—Nettie is a very clever girl, but she is without funds, in a country hotel. So she announces that she has lost a five-dollar bill with the corner torn off, and five rural admirers help her to search for it.

Of course the bill is not found, but the smartest countryman conceives a plan. He tears the corner off a five-dollar bill, presents it to Nettie, and tells her he has found it. She is delighted, and invites him to call for a walk at three.

One after another the five carry out this idea, each concealing it from the others. The second has to pawn his watch, the third and fourth work at carrying baggage and sawing wood, and the last, a "tightwad," yields with great reluctance.

At three o'clock all call at the hotel, dressed in their best, but Nettie has gone. A horrible suspicion comes to them. They dash down to the station in time to see the three-ten train depart, with Nettie aboard. But they receive a note, which reads: "Boys—Aren't you glad it wasn't a ten-dollar bill?"

DOGS (May 19).—Jones is called away from his suburban home and his wife and her sister left alone. They become frightened at seeing a tramp in the garden, and the wife decides to buy a bulldog that is advertised for sale. As the dealer will not sell one, she ends by purchasing all five. That day the tramp returns and enters the house. He soon rushes out again followed by all the dogs. He feeds them bits of a sandwich he is carrying and they become very friendly. Just at this moment Jones returns home. One of the dogs rushes after him. Then another spies him and makes a dash after him. He climbs a tree until the tramp assures him that the dogs are harmless. Then he comes down and the dogs follow him into the house.

THE MARRIAGE GAME (May 21).—Nell and Tom are in love. But Nell's father refuses his consent, saying that he will never give his daughter to a man who lacks business ability. Tom and Nell get together and think up a plan, whereby they can make money and convince father that Tom is a business man. Tom opens a matrimonial agency and Nell works as his typewriter. Among others a cobbler, Scardon, attracted by their circular letter, comes to the agency for a wife. At the same time, Mrs. Jones, a hard-working washerwoman, arrives. She is looking for a husband to take care of her. Scardon selects her, and they are married.

Pickle had expected his wife to love him and a pretty housemaid. They also marry. Mrs. Jones finds that matrimony is not all she expected, she has to work twice as hard to support her lazy husband. However, when he comes in drunk one night, she and her two children throw him out.

Pickle had expected his wife to love him and care for him. But she makes him do all the work. When he asks her to help him she quits him in disgust. So he goes back to his tailor's bench.

However, Nell and Tom have made plenty of money out of their agency, despite the fact that it is satisfaction to none of the clients. Father hearing of Tom's success is forced to consent to the young people's marriage.

THE HATERS (May 16).—The cowboys on ranch "L" had sworn to debar the feminine sex from their thoughts forevermore. Jim Bradley, foreman, was particularly loud in his complaint against the fair sex; so when he fell sick with a fever, Charley Williams undertook to doctor him with whiskey. That failed, however, and when the official ranch doctor called, that personage was highly alarmed and at once prescribed quiet and a trained nurse. He sent one—a dainty, pretty little miss in the usual white cap and gown. But she only came after her aunt, also a nurse, positively refused to have anything to do with men.

The rangers notice a change in Bradley's condition for the better. One day they were astounded, on peering through a window, to find the nurse's face buried on his shoulder. They swore to be revenged on him. Meantime, Charley Williams found time to hang about the house and invite the nurse for strolls. That didn't have a beneficial effect on the injured feelings of the cow punchers, either. Finally the aunt became suspicious. She donned her bonnet and sallied forth to the range in quest of information as to her niece's long absence. It happened that the couple were out for a walk, as couples often are; so this determined man-hater went in uninvited and made herself at home.

Now old Ben Griscom was one of the band of sworn woman-haters. He had found, however, that the longer he knew this pretty nurse, so in proportion changed his sentiments toward the weaker sex. In fact these sentiments changed so rapidly that he actually went to town and bought all manner of stuff. This he modestly pushed under the door. It happened at that time that the old nurse was firmly seated in an arm chair awaiting the arrival of the missing couple. She observed the offerings pushed beneath the door and finally decided to investigate. This she did by opening the door suddenly, just in time to fall fairly into old Griscom's arms. There was grand rejoicing, for instantly they remembered an old love affair and a promise of long standing.

THE CRISIS (May 15).—The Rev. John Mason, living in Iola, Kan., whose powerful sermons had made him known and respected throughout the sparsely settled country, receives a call from a band of settlers in Medicine Bend, Wyo., and decides to accept. With his family, consisting of his wife, his daughter, Marie, and his son, Ned, he takes the train to Blue Gulch, Wyo., the stage to Laramie and prairie schooner to Medicine Bend.

The construction of the church is shown and the sending of the letter by the church committee, which is delivered via pony express riders, who change horses at full gallop, and stagecoach to the railroad.

Ned Mason has caused his parents and his sister much pain by his wayward habits and his liking for liquor. While waiting for the prairie schooner in Laramie he makes the acquaintance of a number of cowboys, who invite him into a saloon, and Ned becomes intoxicated. When he meets his father, the parson, indignant and disgusted, disowns Ned, and goes on without him. Ned goes back to the saloon, where he spends the night, and is shown to the door when he has reached a state of helplessness.

The next day, with an aching head and slender purse, he fights a mental battle and vows to follow a straight path and to beg his father's forgiveness.

Parson Mason is warmly received by the settlers, and the Sunday service is attended by every one able to attend. Mason's pleasure at the bright future for his church is darkened by thoughts of his son. Mrs. Mason and Marie grieve over the absent son and brother, and break down at the dinner table.

The Indians had been giving evidences of unrest. To the sophisticated Westerner the dances and harangues, lasting far into the night, boded no good. The Indian commissioner, with a view to averting an outbreak, visited the Indian village and held a pow-wow with the chiefs, but his friendly advances were met by taciturnity and frowns. Knowing from previous experience that quick action must be taken by force of arms to prevent a massacre, the commissioner bade goodbye to the redskins and made haste to reach the distant fort.

Riding on a burro, Ned is nearing Medicine Bend when he comes upon one of the first victims of the Indians. With his dying breath he asks Ned to warn the settlers, and Ned rushes on. The news that the Indians are on the warpath creates the wildest alarm, and the settlers gather together for mutual protection.

The Indians had expected to surprise the white men, and their whirlwind charge is met by well aimed rifle bullets, which deplete their ranks and cause them to withdraw. Craftier tactics are adopted, and dogding from tree to tree and rock to rock, they surround the whites and play the savage game of warfare, drawing the fire of their foes and waiting patiently until their ammunition would be exhausted.

Like a shepherd protecting his flock, Parson Mason proves his calibre. The church is converted into a fort, and with bullets and arrows whistling around them the minister leads his congregation in prayer, and picking up his rifle takes command.

The coolness of his father toward him has stung Ned deeply. From the moment of his arrival the tremendous excitement prevailing has prevented a moment's private conversation with his father. Without uttering a word he takes his place at the loophole and many an Indian bites the dust when his rifle barks.

The uneven conflict rages until, in despair, the whites realize that their ammunition can last but a short time longer. It is the first time that Ned has had his life in jeopardy, and the crisis brings out his noble manhood. This sight of his terror stricken mother and sister and his brave father and a realization that a horrible death awaits them all, spurs him on to a desperate undertaking.

Leaping from the window he dashes through a group of Indians, who are thunderstruck for a moment, but with a yell take after him. Ned brings down the nearest pursuers, and leaping on a horse gallops away.

A troup of cavalry has left the fort and is making its way toward the Indian village. Ned hears the bugle call in the distance and turns his horse toward the sound. In a few moments the situation is explained to the captain, and a race against time is made to save the besieged settlers,

Like a hurricane the cavalry bursts upon the astonished savages. The battle is quickly over, the surviving Indians scamper away, with the soldiers at their heels.

The bravery of Ned filled Parson Mason's heart with pride, and when his son dashed through the lines the stern old man was so overjoyed at the regeneration of his son that had the outcome been different he would have met his death with resignation. As Ned came up with the captain he suddenly found himself in the embrace of his father, mother and sister. Words were unnecessary. The glad look in their faces told the story.

RELIANCE.

PRINCE CHARMING (May 15).—Little Billy, the newsboy, is having a lonesome time in the park when a rich little girl and her roller skating friends pass by. The little girl drops her gloves. Billy picks them up and returns them to her. She is so pleased that she calls over her governess and makes her give Billy her bag of cakes. Billy looks after her longingly and, when she is out of sight, returns to his little shack and sleepily sits down to munch the cakes.

He falls asleep and dreams that a wonderful lackey, dressed in silken doublet and hose, is standing before him. He hands him a letter, commanding him to appear at the court of the Princess Marie, and also gives him a wonderful court costume. Billy attires himself in his new costume and is soon at the court. The Count and Countess Moneybags and the Duke and Duchess of Gingerbread precede him, but much to their chagrin are refused admittance to the throne room. When Prince Charming (Billy) arrives, the jester is told to lead him at once to the Princess. The others resent the unknown being made a favorite. Prince Charming makes love to the Princess and wins her favor, which causes the other members of the court to vow immediate vengeance. They get Prince Charming while he is alone in the throne room and, notwithstanding that he puts up a splendid fight, he is overpowered by sheer numbers. They are about to evict him when the Princess appears and saves him. She commands the jester to take him away and clothe him in "clothes of gold." Upon his reappearance the Princess calls upon her court to bend upon their knees and she takes Prince Charming as her royal husband. Then Billy wakes up. But "Gee, it was a great dream."

MIXED IDENTITIES (May 18).—The picture opens with the home of Tom and Ethel Brandon, brother and sister, on the outskirts of the village. Tom is going to town to spend the evening at his club. The two servants also go out to spend the evening, leaving Ethel alone. Tom has told her that he will be back at 11:30. Ethel spends the evening reading. At 11 o'clock she picks up the paper and reads an account of a burglar who has been breaking into houses in the village. She goes to the window, pulls down the shades. The paper describes the robber as being tall, good looking and quite gentlemanly appearing.

Tom is at the club playing billiards. Bob Gordon, an old friend of Tom's whom he has not seen for several years, enters and Tom invites Bob to visit him. Bob consents. As he has been traveling all day he is quite tired, and Tom tells him to go on up to the house and he will follow shortly. Ethel hears the front door unlock and picks up an old sword and an old pistol, which are used as wall ornaments and, with assumed bravado, faces the door. Bob enters, advances toward her and, she, much afraid, backs away, dropping the weapons as she does so. She mistakes him for the robber, as she has never met Bob before, and he looks very much like the man described in the papers. Ethel goes to the dining-room to get him something to eat, as she is going to try and detain him until Tom arrives. While she is out of the room he picks up the paper and he sees the article she has been reading. He catches on at once, and decides to play it out until Tom arrives. Ethel enters with the lunch. He eats. Ethel sits and talks with him and decides to give him some silver and jewelry. She goes to the dining-room and filling a tablecloth with stuff takes it to him. She hears Tom at the front door and fearing that Tom will be killed by "the burglar," she hustles him out of the window, just as Tom enters. Tom asks her where Bob is, and she tells him that she had seen no one. Just then the bell rings. Tom goes to the door and a policeman enters with Bob. Tom explains everything and at the end we learn that Bob is in love with Ethel.

THE BOA CONSTRICTOR (May 18).—This subject shows how a boa constrictor is forcefully fed when it refuses food. It also depicts a battle between two different species of the tarantula spider; the asp, a snake of the kind that is supposed to have poisoned Cleopatra; and further illustrating a wonderful picturing of the timber rattlesnake striking at an enemy.

ON THE STROKE OF FIVE (May 21).—There was nothing particularly romantic about her love story. She was a poor girl and had two suitors, both humble workingmen. The man she chose was the more worthy of the two, and loved her fondly. The other man, a brutish individual of ungovernable passions, became involved in an altercation with his foreman and savagely attacked him. Thorugh the efforts of the successful suitor he was captured and, as his reputation was bad, was sent to States Prison for a long term.

When the prisoner was set free, eight years later, his first desire was to find the woman he loved and the man he hated. With very little difficulty he located them, for they had married and settled down in the quarter where they had lived most of their lives. The ex-convict rejoiced to find that his foe had met with an accident, was helplessly paralyzed, and while he still lived, could not move nor speak; only his eyes showed that he was alive.

Calling at the tiny cottage, the convict gloated over his foe, but was careful to conceal his feelings from the wife. In the presence of her or her little girl, he was the sadly sympathetic friend. When alone with the helpless man, he gloated over him, and whispered insults into his ear. The invalid was unable to retort or complain, he could only gaze at the man, and wish that his strength might come back so that he could defend himself.

The convict found that his love for the woman still existed, and he proposed that she elope with him. She rejected his advances with scorn, and his love turned to hate. He brooded over what he regarded as his wrongs, and planned a fiendish revenge.

He called at the house, pretending great friendship, and presented the little girl with a music box. She was delighted, and the mother was also pleased. Then, while the two were playing with the new toy, the convict tiptoed over to the paralytic and whispered to him that the music box really contained an infernal machine, and that it had been cunningly set by clockwork to go off on the stroke of five. Then he pointed to the clock, which marked fifteen minutes of the hour, bid a pleasant farewell to the family he designed to destroy, and departed.

The woman and child suspected nothing wrong; the man who knew was powerless to say anything. He suffered mortal agony as time sped on, and he was unable to warn them. Finally his little daughter came over to "cheer up poor papa," and noticed his intense gaze. He looked from her to her blocks, which were on the table at his elbow. The two had often "played spelling." The girl would speak a word, then hold up blocks. When she picked the right letter, the man would blink his eyes, and the little girl knew how to spell many words, having learned it in this unique way.

This pastime was now put to a stern use, and the man supposed to be helpless was able to convey the warning. The woman hurled the bomb from the window in time, and it rolled down the steep hill to the feet of the ex-convict, who was waiting there for the explosion that meant the death of three innocent people. He had no time to escape, and the fate he had meant for others became the frightful death that Providence dealt him.

THE RING OF A SPANISH GRANDEE (May 24).—A romantic young girl, visiting St. Augustine, finds that she must make the choice which means happiness or misery for life. She has two suitors, one an everyday young American who has made his way in the world and is proud of it. He has money, will have more, and in every way would seem desirable. But the other man had ancestors! True, he didn't apparently have much else except a fondness for cigarettes, but he could talk for hours of those knightly days and dazed knights. He had a wonderful ring which had been given to his great great and a few more great grandfathers, who, as governor of St. Augustine had saved the fort and been rewarded with a ring from the fair hand of the Queen of Spain. He offered her the ring and asked her to marry him. She said yes, and took the ring. It was so romantic.

And then some power transported her to "those good old days," and she learned the true story of the ring. It ended her infatuation, and she decided to stop being romantic, and wed a good American who could supply her with affection, also new gowns, opera tickets, and a steam heated home with all modern improvements, things they did not have in the time when the ring of the Spanish grandee was simply a jewel, and not a family heirloom with an absolutely incorrect history tacked on.

THE CONVICT'S SISTER (May 17).—A merry party of guests are gathered at the home of Malcolm Fairweather. All are enjoying themselves thoroughly, when suddenly an air of gloom is mysteriously cast over the yarty. Mrs. Fairweather becomes very silent and none can explain the reason of this mysterious gloom. Crouching outside the Mansion gates, stands Percival Reven, her degenerate brother, the knowledge of whose existence she has so far been successful in hiding from her husband. Knowing this full well, the villain has come to levy blackmail upon his sister.

During the evening, the conversation turns to precious stones, and Mr. Fairweather shows his guests a splendid diamond which he has recently purchased. The diamond goes from hand to hand and suddenly the lights go out and the room is plunged in total darkness. The servants enter, explaining that this was caused by a defect in the wiring and the light is soon switched on again. It is then discovered that the diamond has disappeared. A hurried search is made, but no diamond can be found. The gentlemen present insist on being searched by their host. One by one they are searched, until it comes to the turn of Robert Wadbrook, who refuses to be searched and leaves the house. Naturally the suspicion falls upon him.

Later Mrs. Fairweather calls to see him and demands to know why he refused to be searched. He shows her the reason of his refusal by drawing her picture from his pocket. This he had in his pocket at the time the diamond was stolen and not wanting her husband to see his wife's picture in his pocket, he refused to be searched, and risked the danger of being called a thief.

At this moment Mrs. Fairweather takes the diamond out of her muff and explains that she had taken it, showing Wadbrook a letter which she received from her brother, saying that he would wreck her life unless she provided him with money. Therefore she was forced to take the diamond in order to get money for him.

That night she goes to her husband's study and there is confronted by her brother, who has gained entrance to the house, and a duel ensued. He levelled a revolver at her and a struggle takes place, in which the weapon was accidentally discharged. Thus Mrs. Fairweather silences her brother forever—true she had not wilfully caused his death—but he was killed and nobody regretted it. A public apology is tendered to Wadbrook by Mrs. Fairweather and all goes merrily again. Wadbrook alone knows the truth.

LOST YEARS (May 16).—She was a wealthy politician's daughter and he was a rising officer of the navy, but that wasn't the best reason for the marriage; it was their love. The marriage date was set, but a few days before it reached the calendar, the government dispatched him on a secret mission to Europe, and the happy happening and the tender hopes were postponed.

From the ship upon which he was returning a few weeks later he sent a wireless, bidding his bride-to-be to prepare for his arrival and the wedding on Thursday, at 2 o'clock. The impatient longing and uneasy waiting and suspense transformed into a busy happiness; the house was arranged; the bridal gown tried on a thousand times and a few, and the million and four thousand details acessory to a wedding ceremony were prepared and arranged, with delicious disorder and ardor.

Thursday came, and the news that was parent to the dark disaster that followed. The ship had caught fire, had sunk, and the dismal report conveyed the tragic tidings that all had perished. She read the news, the bride that was to be wedded to a dead man's memory, and a merciful fate robbed her tortured thoughts. She forgot, knew not—knew naught.

Every morning she dressed in her bridal attire, waiting for two o'clock and her loved one. But two o'clock never came, for always they turned the cruel clock back and made a liar of time.

The man had drifted to a desert island, and the years that were days for the girl were eternities for him. Living a solitary, deathly existence, hopeless, helpless, the invincible years paused and passed; until a ship revived the dying dream.

He returned; at two o'clock he met the bride of the dead years, and her mind bridged the chasm of the buried past. It was yesterday again, the ancient yesterday; it was two o'clock, and he was there. And she was fair, as fair as on the day she had first waited freighted with hope and happiness; time had not written its cold scroll on her heart, nor left its scar upon her soul; the lost years had left her as young and strong as when they had first dropped into the abyss of oblivion. . . . And he was there!

WHAT AVAILS THE CROWN? (May 19).—She was the princess, and a human girl. Sincere, simple, with an earnest love for all things everywhere, she hated royal pomp with a hatred that was passion. In her light, bright eyes was the uncopyrighted story of human struggle, of contending human emotions. You were impressed at first glance that she was composed of the purifying and preservative forces that have made civilization. For a princess, she was refreshingly real.

This, then, was the girl to be sacrificed for a political alliance. The prince selected was a jellyfish personage with enough blue blood to give a girl with as much red blood as the princess the blues. With all her stubborn individuality, she rebelled against the selfish decree of the Court, but when her aged father, the king, sternly commanded her, as her father and sovereign, to fulfill his mandate, the girl choked down the rising lump, acceded and accepted the ring as a pledge of the betrothal.

Then she flew to her room, and the girl conquered the princess. In a wild abandon of grief, she sobbed her pitiful apology to herself—and felt better. And the thought was born.

She would go to the home of her old nurse, and live among the people. She would live free from the iron fetters of regal birth, free from the slavery of royal lineage. She went out and met life, merged and mingled with its rushing tides and varied sides. And among the people, with hearts that beat with the heat of life, she found love and lost her heart.

The blow was too great for the weak heart in the old frame of the king, and he died, as he had lived, a martyr to royalty. And the girl was proclaimed queen.

For the moment the realization and appreciation that she was queen and could do as she willed and wished, surged through her, and her being filled with fervent ecstasy. Then she remembered the cost of her birth, remembered the state and the people and her duty to them, saw and realized that she had contemplated turning traitoress to the government of which she was queen; and in sadness and resignation she dismissed the man she loved, to marry the thing her nation needed.

For she was queen, to live in garish grief and wear a golden sorrow until death emancipated her from the slavery of the throne.

ECLAIR.

THE REVENGE OF THE SILK MASKS (April 30).—The troubles of Kittie and "Kid" have not ended with their escape from the "Silk Mask Gang." The rascally nephew of the dead Uncle Bill steals a pearl necklace, and by a clever ruse turns suspicion on Kittie. She is arrested and saved from punishment through the brave detective work of "Kid" the Western boy, who turns a neat and surprising trick upon the gangsters and sets things right again.

COUSIN KATE'S REVOLUTION (May 3).—Mrs. Strong, a strenuous suffragette and her puny husband, a writer of moribund romances, are visited in their New York home for the first time in ten years by their spinster cousin from the country. They are both "victims of the artistic temperament"—and their home shows it, from the dirty-faced children to the untidy rooms and the slovenly maid. They leave Cousin Kate alone, to make herself at home. The way in which she does this—starting in to make the house clean and orderly—is one of the most amusing film plays ever put on the screen.

A USELESS SACRIFICE (May 12).—The photoplay has for theme the fickleness of Pierre, the village "Beau Brummel" of a pretty little French town. He makes love to Blanche, who promises to be his bride. Her friend, Mariette, coquettes with Pierre, and wins his affections, falling in love herself, at the same time. The jealousy which develops between the two girls, and the weakness of Pierre in deserting his fiancee are depicted in a most enthralling manner.

ROSES AND THORNS (May 16).—Here is a mirth-provoking farce of mistaken identities, of the sorrows which overtake a romantic young gentleman in search of a romantic young lady who is to prove her identity by wearing a white rose. It happens that on this particular day, white roses are popular! And thereby hangs the trouble!

HER FOLLY (May 19).—Here is a story, so often and so wretchedly true of marital relations in this country, as well as in the beautiful Paris where it was taken. Gaston Chauvelt woos the wife of his friend, and on being repulsed by the faithful woman, he threatens to destroy himself. By posing this way, and working upon her sympathy, he finally persuades her to yield him an interview, and he proposes an auto ride to Havre. Jeanne, the wife, foolishly agrees, seeing little harm in this. But an accident prevents the fulfillment of their plan, and the young woman is injured in an auto wreck. Her husband, while attending her with the physician, receives a false telegram from Havre, stating that she had arrived safely there for a visit, and signed with her name. This arouses his suspicions, and he investigates the matter, to learn the true state of affairs. His frenzy on the discovery almost drives him to the slaying of his false friend, but when proof of his wife's innocence are shown him, he reconciles himself and forgives her for her folly.

ANDALUSIAN DANCERS (May 19).—The scene is the wonderful Sevillian garden of the Alcazar, and the beautiful Spanish dancers are shown in their characteristic poses and steps. This film possesses musical and poetic quality seldom equaled on foreign travel films.

CHAMBER OF FORGETFULNESS (May 21).—The powerful story of a wife's innocent mistake and its bitter punishment, the rancor of a jealous, misguided husband and the ultimate righting of a great wrong to his son. It will bring tears and teach a beautiful lesson to every beholder.

POWERS

GRANDPA'S "SPECS" (May 14).—Grandpa loses his spectacles, and his older granddaughter helps him look for them. Not finding them, she then starts the farmhands upon the search, and even Grandpa joins in. After a careful hunt they finally decide that Grandpa lost his spectacles down the well when he was drawing a bucket of water. It is then that the youngest granddaughter discovers the glasses on Grandpa's nose and—well—determines to teach Betty a lesson and Betty decides to wring Alf's heart and the troubles of this loving couple begin. Alf leaves a note, saying that he is going to jump into the creek, and Betty writes that she is going to drown herself in the same creek. Alf finds Betty's letter and Betty discovers Alf's note, and each, filled with remorse, starts out to discover the other one's body. The two lovers are each joined by their relatives and friends, who aid in the hunt for their respective bodies. The two parties of searchers meet, headed by the remorseful lovers. Alf is in the middle of the creek and Betty on the bank. When each discovers that the other is alive, they rush into each other's arms in the middle of the flowing water of the peaceful stream, and all further misunderstandings are over.

HIS NEIGHBOR'S WIFE (May 18).—Ames is ill, apparently, and his physician advises him to take outdoor exercise. He retires to his country home, and, giving his gardener a holiday, he proceeds to do the man's work.

Next door, a new family have moved in, a husband and wife, little girl, and the husband's charming sister. Bessie, the sister, mistakes Ames for a hired man and Ames humors her along, and thus plays a joke upon her. To get even with him, Bessie leads him to think that she is her brother's wife and the mother of the little girl. This leads to the most romantic complications, especially when the child succeeds in locking Ames and Bessie in the library on the second floor of Ames' house, and sends the only key to the door up into the air tied to a bunch of toy balloons. Poor Ames tries to make a martyr of himself, but is not permitted, and to his joy, suddenly finds himself possessed of a blushing, but rather mischievous little bride-to-be.

FOR THE GOOD OF ALL (May 21).—Essie is secretly engaged to Harry, meeting him on the sly. Her parents finally discover the love affair, and in order to cure her of her infatuation, send her to her aunt's home in the country. Arriving at the farm, Essie soon plays havoc with the hearts of all the men folks, who sadly neglect their various duties, in order to dance attendance upon her. Things come to such a pass, that Essie's aunt, who discovers Harry prowling about the farm, manages to corral him and then begs him to elope with Essie. She even furnishes him with a ladder and points out Essie's window. After the young couple have disappeared, the aunt writes Essie's parents that she did all she could to prevent the elopement, but that after all, it is probably the best thing that could have happened for the good of all concerned.

THE HOUSEKEEPER (May 25).—A miserly widower has a young and pretty daughter whom he neglects, urged on to do so by a scheming housekeeper, who has designs upon his wealth.

The housekeeper has a lover in the person of the widower's clerk, who also has designs upon the old man's money, through his influence with the housekeeper. The housekeeper cajoles the widower into a promise of marriage, and thus winning his confidence, learns the combination to his safe. The clerk then persuades the housekeeper to take the widower's money and elope, arranging that she is to place the money in the daughter's traveling bag and throw it out of the window to him.

The plan works all right excepting that the clerk hears the daughter coming around the house just as the housekeeper throws out the money, and he dodges around the corner out of sight. It thus follows that the daughter is almost struck by the bag, which falls at her feet. Led by natural curiosity, the daughter stoops and opens the bag and finding therein her father's money, she quickly decides that certain suspicions she has had are correct, and dropping a large stone in the bag in place of the money, she hastens with the latter to her father. The widower then realizes the extent of his folly in permitting the housekeeper to steal not only his affections, but his wealth, and acknowledging his error to his daughter, he begs her pardon.

In the meantime, the clerk has returned, picked up the bag, and has joined the housekeeper. The two proceed to the railroad station, where they gleefully open the bag to count their ill-gotten gains. When the paving stone is brought to light, and they realize they have been duped, the love of the clerk cools most rapidly and he climbs aboard an outgoing freight train and disappears.

The widower and his daughter sit down to their evening meal, when, to the astonishment of the old man, his daughter mischievously calls in a new housekeeper she has engaged,—a large colored woman, guaranteed perfectly harmless. At the same hour the former housekeeper is occupied in a foot race with an active member of the police force.

GREAT NORTHERN.

A CLOSE CALL (May 18).—Mr. Deering is blessed with the love of a dutiful wife and a loving daughter, Edith, and ought to be happy, but an unfortunate speculation has shattered his fortune, and he is in despair. He resolves to take his life as a solution to the difficulty, being a moral coward. He procures a revolver and is about to end his life, when his wife enters and grasps the weapon. There is a struggle for the possession of the pistol when the daughter enters, who becomes puzzled at the strange actions of her parents. They are confused, but explain that the struggle was only in a spirit of playfulness. Mrs. Deering takes the precaution to extract the cartridges from the gun and Edith seizes it and, facing imaginary foes, pulls the trigger, snapping the weapon in the faces of her father and mother in the exuberance of her childish spirits. The parents are horrified, but they dare not explain, and the mother soon retires, taking with her the girl. Left alone, Deering reflects and then decides to carry out his original intention to commit suicide. He searches among his effects and finds another cartridge, which he inserts into the chamber of the weapon and then resumes writing. Mrs. Deering, hoping to detract the attention of her husband from his business worries, sends Edith to invite him to take a walk. The girl enters the room and again sees the revolver. She snatches it up and resumes her theatricals, pointing the gun at her father and pulling the trigger. He is horrified and attempts to wrest the pistol from her, but she eludes him and finishes her mock battle by placing the gun to her temple and pulling the trigger. Deering falls, nearly unconscious, and the mother enters and takes the pistol from the girl, frantic from fright. The incident has a salutary effect, for it makes a man of Deering and he resolves to live for his family and try to retrieve his fallen fortunes.

A DOUBLE PLEASURE (May 18).—This is a laughable comedy and concerns the experience of a rounder who drew a cow in a lottery. His trials in taking the animal home are ludicrous in the extreme, but he finally arrives home and installs the bovine in his sleeping apartment, retiring to sleep off the effects of his potations. He awakens the next morning to discover that his prize has eaten the stuffing out of the mattress and has accumulated a mild jag from drinking wine.

Among The Exhibitors.

GOLDEN'S SONG REVUE

The demand for this attraction is rapidly spreading. R. L. Goldberg's Evening Mail "Foolish Questions" are a hit everywhere. We have arranged with our Spiegel Motion Song Slide Agencies to supply service on Golden's Song Revue. The cartoons will be shown in motion, which makes them better than ever.

If you have no singer, use Goldberg's cartoons in motion slides alone; as a feature they are real joy producers.

Write your State Agency immediately for particulars, or write us direct.

AIRDOME AND OPEN-AIR THEATRE MEN TAKE NOTE

Topeka, Kansas, May 1, 1912.

American Theatre Curtain & Supply Co.,
St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sirs:—

During March there was held in the Topeka Auditorium, under the auspices of the Topeka Commercial Club, a contest between the seven motion picture houses of Topeka. I used for this contest the evening of March 26th, one of your and it was certainly a Magnificent Success. I showed with all the side and balcony lights on and was able to show a better picture than my competitors in a perfectly black house. To cap the climax, I cut in the dome lights at a given signal and as soon as the people realized that the pictures were still clear and distinct, the applause was deafening.

In concluding allow me to state that if I had a hundred houses, I would have just one hundred Radium Gold Fibre Screens. The cost is nothing in comparison with results.

Yours truly,
FRANK KLINGAMAN.

LET US DEMONSTRATE.

SALLIE THANKS YOUNG ELK

THE SWASTIKA

(Meaning "Under the Protection of the Great Spirit")

The Indians, unable to get whiskey, kidnap the ranchman's daughter. Young Elk, an educated Indian, worships Sallie, and schemes to protect her without betraying his men. This he had done by cutting the sign of the Swastika on her forehead. The Indians about to torture their captive discover the sign, and dare not proceed. They set her free and load her with presents. She returns home to thank Young Elk, who has been in prison for his outrage upon her, the reason for which is now clear.

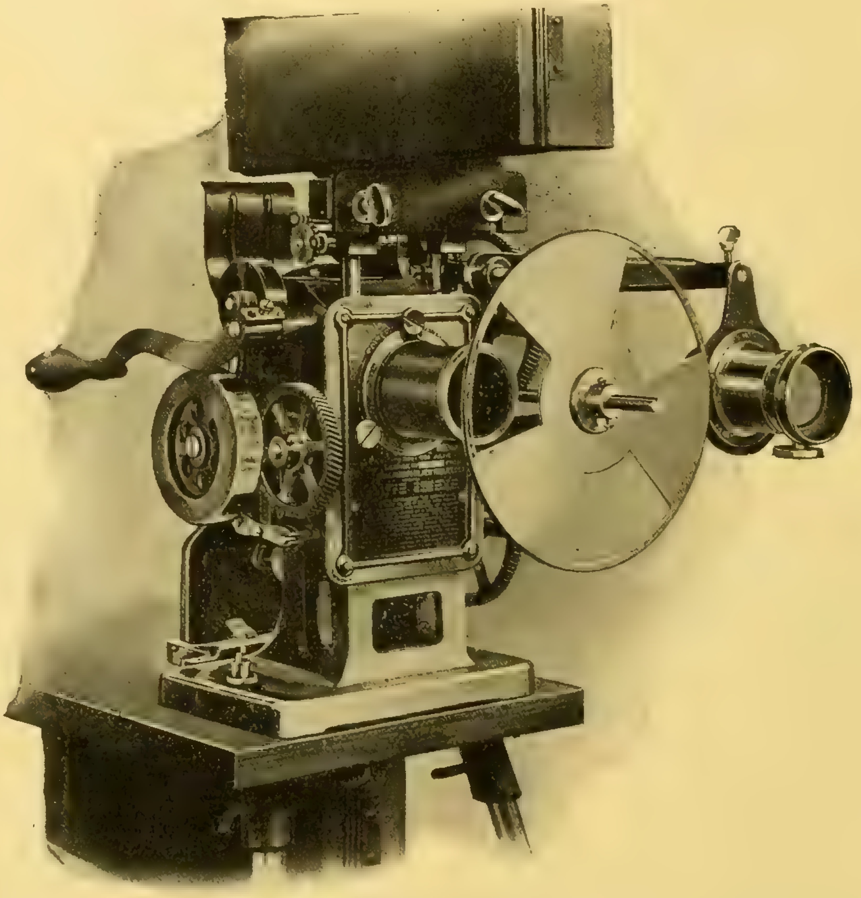
WHAT IS THE PERFECT MOVING PICTURE MACHINE?



First, it must please your patrons. They must have a clear, flickerless, steady picture. The Power's No. 6 positively projects perfect pictures. That's the machine for them.

For yours, Mr. Exhibitor: An easy-running machine—one a child can operate, but which will do a man's work—a machine whose parts are exposed and get-at-able when necessary; one almost noiseless in operation, composed of the finest material that money can purchase, with the delicate adjustment of a watch, and firm as the hills eternal; a machine that will see you through twelve months in the year. That's the machine for you.

The perfect machine must please both patrons and exhibitor; and Power's Cameragraph No. 6 has over five thousand users who are a living proof that it does this always.

If you use alternating current the ideal combination is Power's No. 6 with two-wing revolving shutter and Power's Adjustable Inductor. Power's Inductor saves the maximum amount of current and operates without heat. It excels particularly in the brilliant, steady light made possible by its use.

Write to-day for catalogue G, fully explaining it.

Human Interest Special

RELEASED FRIDAY, MAY 31

Here is the simplest story in the world, but it will set many, many people thinking. In that it is a Higher Motion Picture. It creates thought, study. They are happily wed when she goes aboard a boat that is lost at sea. He, lonely, contemplates a second marriage. The wife-to-be loves him much. And then the wife-who-was-lost (but really WASN'T) returns and you get food for thought a-plenty.

ESSANAY PRODUCTIONS DE LUXE!

THIS WEEK

That Master Patomimist G. M. ANDERSON

IN A WESTERN COMEDY-RIOT! A FEATURE WESTERN DRAMA!

Released Tuesday, May 21st

"A WESTERN LEGACY"

When G. M. Anderson sets his hand to comedy you are assured of brilliant originality of plot and a million laughs. This is a corker, scintillating with the funniest kind of fun and presenting Mr. Anderson in humorous role entirely out of the beaten track. A comic feature!

Released Thursday, May 23rd

"A GOOD CATCH"

The second bright comedy-hit for the week. A novel little conceit bristling with just the right kind of good-humor and merriment. Portrayed by a great cast of comedians and featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in cracking good comic characterizations. A live-wire for any bill!

Released Friday, May 24th

"DETECTIVE DOROTHY"

One of those splendid foto-dramas ringing deep and true with the sincerity of life as it is. A subject that borders on the sensational, yet moistens the eye in its moments of pathos. Little Francis Osman, the marvel of the film world, featured in the title role. Book at once.

Released Saturday, May 25th

"THE DESERT SWEETHEART"

That master pantomimist, G. M. Anderson, again presented in a Western dramatic subject startling in its vivid and vital intensity. A powerful plot interpreted in the great Alkali desert—that region of horror and desolation. A gripping feature of features!

JUNE 2nd --- 1992 FEET --- DRAMA DAY

THE MIDNIGHT WEDDING

An electrical engineer, whose love affair does not prosper well, attempts to gain revenge by means of a murderous and ingenious electrical contrivance. His diabolical plan is flustered by the appearance of his mother. His heart is softened, and at the last tragic moment he tears his invention from the wall and thus prevents an explosion which would have killed his former sweetheart, his mother and himself.

A story supremely graceful, delicate and touching. Costumes and actions pictures free. A film completely colored by hand. Scenes carrying one into the interior of Louis XVI Cathedrals, gardens, castles and fields. In fact, the most harmonious bit of film beauty that Gaumont has yet offered. The acme of filmdom, even better than Christian Martyrs and The Margrave's Daughter.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and any one can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of three dollars ($3) cash with order, we will send by express, charges not prepaid, or $3.50 by registered mail, prepaid, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address

"The Peril"

HERE COMES "THE PERIL"

(Copyright, 1912, Imp Films Co.)

It is a 1000-foot feature, absolutely different from any Decoration Day release ever produced. King Baggot and a strong supporting company at their very best. If you don't begin to ask for it now, you may not get it at all. Released Thursday. May 30th.

"THE THIRST FOR GOLD"

(Copyright, 1912, Imp Films Co.)

Another of those magnificent western mining Imps. There hasn't been a mediocre one in the whole series thus far, and there isn't going to be! This one has the real "punch" to it. Released Monday, May 27th.

BAGGOT IN A SCREAMING SPLIT "UP AGAINST IT"

(Copyright, 1912, Imp Films Co.)

This is not only a "split" reel but it tells the story of a "split" pair of trousers. King Baggot goes into society and rips his panties. Then the fun begins. If you don't scream with laughter at this film, you've got a wooden Indian lashed to the mast. On the same reel we release "THE ART OF SILVER PLATE MAKING," one of the most interesting things you ever saw. Secured by special grant from the makers of the famous Sheffield plate. Released Saturday, June 1st. Get it!

COMING AMERICANS!

The Reward of Valor

Release Monday, May 27. Length 1000 feet.

The aristocratic Ward family came for a short stay on their Western ranch. Charley Hicox, ranch foreman, met brother Bill and Bill liked him. Then arrived the Earl of Wight, who wanted sister Marguerite badly. So brother Bill and Charley laid a plan for bringing Father and Mother Ward to time. They did. An excellent story, well told and distinguished by a superlative grade of photography.

The Brand

Release Thursday, May 30. Length 1000 feet.

Jim Harroll was a bachelor blacksmith and very lonely. He found an advertised beauty and married her. A salesman called one day and Jim beheld her in his arms. He branded his betrayer with a red hot iron taken from his forge. A sensation-maker, full of thrills. You will want it.
